"I guessed as much," Judge Latshaw said. Then calling a memorial, the father, Robert Burns, was brought before him.

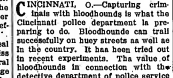
"Well, Burns," the judge said, "your children have won a parole for you. But let me tell you, a man who can't support his wife as many strings to his heart as these, isn't much of a man. Ho—".

"Now you take your wife and children home and you stay home with them nights. If I hear of you—"

As the happy family left his office Judge Latshaw told Burns that he would put him in jail again the minute he heard of him taking a drink or abusing his children.

City of Portland a Bower of Beauty

PORTLAND, Ore.—Old Oregon, originally that section of the northwestern part of the United States, now including the present states of Oregon, Washington, Idaho and Montana, is without doubt one of the most wonderful regions in the world, and were it necessary, could go it alone very nicely as a little world by itself.



Portland, the metropolis of the state, is fittingly named the "Rose City." The title is fairly descriptive, for everywhere in Portland one finds early in the spring until very late in the fall these nature beautifiers blooming in great profusion. They prove not only the fertility of the soil in this part of the state, but demonstrate also the salubrity of the climate. Washington's birthday is rose planting day in Oregon. While on Christmas day one frequently sees hoeutics in bloom out of doors untouched by frost or harmed by chilly weather.

The festival of the roses held in June is the great gala occasion of the year. The city is literally smothered in fragrant blossoms and the daily parades far surpass in beauty any of the pageants, famous in history, held in ancient times.

But the "Rose Festival" is only one of the beautiful scenes to be met in Rose City, with its wide, well-kept streets, stately trees, artistic lawns, elegant residences and pleasant public parks.

When water courses were the only trails followed by commerce, Portland was born and stood that day; but without hlare or bluster, has steadily kept pace with the progress of the times. A quarter of a million people is a fair estimate of the inhabitants living in and around the city.

Bloodhounds for Cincinnati Police

CINCINNATI, O.—Capturing criminals with bloodhounds is what the Cincinnati police department is preparing to do. Bloodhounds can trail successfully on busy streets as well as in the country. It has been tried out in recent experiments. The value of bloodhounds in connection with the detective department of police service in large cities has just been established in Cincinnati and a staff of bloodhounds will be the novel addition to the Cincinnati police department. This will be practically the first time such a thing has ever been attempted in a large city on a considerable scale.

The bloodhounds recently trailed a newspaper reporter over a trail half an hour old, through downtown streets of Cincinnati and finally rounded him up at police headquarters in the city hall. The trail of the reporter had been walked over by pedestrians, yet the hounds picked out his path and landed the prisoner. Another test over a cross-country chase during three men a two hours' start, resulted in the capture of the men after traveling almost five miles across rough country, creeks and streets, across brooks and through woods. The dogs found all three men, took the trail readily and followed it without trouble over the entire course.

The success of these dogs in Cincinnati has resulted in other large cities becoming interested and police bloodhounds may soon be added to the departments of other large cities.

According to the history of the bloodhound he practicably went out of business in England when districts established police forces. Prior to that bloodhounds were the police; or at least the people were dependent on them in tracing criminals.

CIVIC CONSCIOUSNESS.

A New York lecturer in a recent address undertook to demonstrate that some of the practices of immigrants in this country, which are troublesome to the authorities, have their origin in the best intentions and may be easily corrected when the requirements of the American environments are made clear to the new arrivals. To illustrate his point he told an interesting story. A certain immigrant mother of numerous offspring was several times haled to court and fined for hurling her ashes into the city street on which she lived, says the Milwaukee Evening Wisconsin. With philosophic submission to arbitrary governmental tyranny she paid her fines and went her way. Finally, a charitable person, explained to her, in her own tongue why she should not throw her ashes into the street. It then appeared that in the little Polish village whence she came she and her neighbors had been requested by a local authority to throw their ashes into the road by way of impromptu street building. Then he related a contrasting anecdote as follows: "I once heard one of the founders of the City Club say that when he came of age he asked his excellent father to give him some idea of what might be his duties as a full-fledged citizen of this great city. His father replied: "My son, as a gentleman and the son of a gentleman, all you need know of municipal procedure is that in order to have your ashes properly cared for you must bribe the ashman."

Who says the United States is not enlightening the world? The manufacture of what is called American-style furniture has become an important industry in Spain, where the people have a great liking for the product. This country was the pioneer in turning out attractive furniture at moderate prices, as it has been the leader in many other innovations that have contributed to domestic comfort and enjoyment, and the others are catching on. It is reaching the point where that sincere flattery which takes the form of imitation in becoming more and more pronounced. American ideas are being adopted everywhere.

The biggest submarine yet built is the Seal, which was launched at Newport News, Va., the other day. She is classed as a "cruiser" and is 131 feet long. The Seal, it is expected, will be capable of making long trips under water and is so well equipped that she will not be convoyed by a fighting craft on the surface, as is now usually the case. The submarine "cruiser" will be a unique addition to the American navy. When the proposed aeroplanes are constructed for the same branch of national defense it would seem that our navy would lack nothing for service on, under or over the water.

Telephone "rubbering" will be discouraged in New Hampshire should a bill pending in the legislature become a low. This measure provides a penalty of $10 for each offense when a person breaks in on a telephone conversation. It is aimed especially at the "listeners" on party wires, whose curiosity leads them into attempting to hear talk not intended for their ears. The practice is not confined to New Hampshire, but it will be interesting to observe the degree of success attained in the Granite State in dealing with the offense.

A New Yorker has bought for $3,600 a prize shorthorn cow in Canada and has brought the animal home in a special car and in charge of two veterinary surgeons. It is evident that there is money somewhere in the milk and butter business when properly conducted.

Every typewriting machine has an individuality, says an expert. We have noticed that some of them are wretched spellers.

In three months last year 321 persons were killed in railroad accidents. And then we shudder at the toll of the aeroplane!

A New Jersey judge says dental work is not a luxury. He was referring, no doubt, to the way a victim feels in a dentist's chair.

Professor Goode wants the coal supply conserved. The landlord of your flat building will subscribe to that doctrine.

Some day stealing a hot stove may be regarded as tame and unexciting beside stealing the family chunk of radium.

However, we fear that the "Kiss Not" campaign will not gain a whole lot of popularity among our younger eleme.

HOLACAUST IN NEW YORK CITY COSTS 151 LIVES

PANIC OCCURS WHEN FLAMES BREAK OUT—NETS AND BLANKETS FAIL TO BREAK FALLS.

BODIES ARE LITERALLY RAINED THROUGH THE AIR

Three Upper Floors of Ten-Story Building Are Burned.—Casualities Occur Within 20 Minutes—Fire Out in One Hour.

New York, March 27.—One hundred and fifty-one persons—nine-tenths of them girls from the East side—were crushed to death on the pavements, smothered in smoke, or shriveled crisp in a factory fire and twelve are dying in hospitals in the worst disaster New York has known since the steamship Gen. Slocum was burned to the water's edge off North Brothers island in 1904.

Nearly all, if not all, of the victims were employed by the Triangle Waist company on the eighth, ninth and tenth floors of a 10-story loft building, on the western fringe of the downtown wholesale clothing, fur and millinery district.

The partners of the firm, Isaac Harris and Max Blanck, escaped unscratched from the office on the tenth floor, carrying with them over an adjoining roof Blanck's two young daughters and a governess. There was no near outside fire escape on the building.

Origin Unknown.

How the fire started will perhaps never be known. A corner on the eighth floor was its point of origin and the three upper floors only were swept. On the ninth floor 50 bodies were found, 63 or more persons were crushed to death by jumping and more than 30 clogged the elevator shafts. The loss to property will not exceed $100,000.

Pedestrians going home through Washington place to Washington square at 10 minutes to 5 were scattered by the whizz of something rushing through the air before them; there was a horrible plop on the pavement and a body flattened on the flags.

Four alarms were rung within 15 minutes. Before the engines could respond, before the nets could be stretched or the ladders raised, five girls had fallen from the eighth and ninth floors so heavily that they broke through the glass and iron roofs of the sub-cellars and crashed through the very streets into the vaults below.

Holocaust Soon Over.

In an hour the fire was out; in half an hour it had done its worst; probably the death list was full in 20 minutes.

The building stands on a corner, with exposure on two sides, but the only fire escape was interior, opening on a light and air shaft. In all there were seven exits—the single fire escape, two freight elevators at the rear, two passenger elevators in front and two stairways. All of them proved almost useless and practically all who escaped either climbed to the roof and scrambled thence to the roof of the building occupied by the American Book company adjoining, or fled in the first rush for safety before the crush and the smoke grew too thick.

The first rush of flame was almost an explosion. Operators died in their chairs, their lungs seared by inhaling flames. Others were crowded into the elevator shafts after the cars had made their last trip. Still others were pushed off to the inadequate interior fire escape.

Shower of Bodies.

In such a horrible stream did the bodies overflow from the windows that the fire nets, stretched by the first company to arrive, were soon gorged beyond capacity.

From Deadly Heights.

It was 85 feet from the eighth floor to the ground; about 95 feet from the ninth floor, 115 feet from the cornice of the roof, and the upward rush of the draught and the crackle of the flames drowned their cries.

Six girls fought their way to a window on the ninth floor over the bodies of fallen fellow workers and crawled out in single file to an eight-inch stone ledge, running the length of the building. More than a hundred feet above the sidewalk they crept along their perilous pathway to a swinging electric feed wire spanning Washington Place. The leaders paused for their companions to catch up at the end of the ledge and the six grabbed the wire simultaneously. It snapped like rotten whip cord and they crashed to death.

Their Last Embrace.

At a ninth floor window a man and a woman appeared. The man embraced the woman and kissed her. Then he hurled her to the street and jumped. Both were killed. Five girls smashed a pane of glass, dropped in a struggling tangle and were crushed into a shapeless mass.

One girl jumped into a horse blanket held by fireman and policemen. The blanket ripped like cheese cloth and her body was mangled almost beyond recognition. Another dropped into a tarpaulin held by three men. Her weight tore it from their grasp and she struck the street, breaking almost every bone in her body. Almost at the same time a man somersaulted down upon the shoulder of a policeman holding the tarpaulin. He glanced off, struck the sidewalk and was picked up dead.

Joseph Zito and Joseph Caspa were in charge of the two passenger elevators on the Washington place side of the building, where the main entrance opened. At the first alarm of fire they began to make trips to the danger zone as fast as they could operate their cars. The two freight elevators on the Green street side were operated by Frank Formenck and Michael Sciecca, and they, too, took a hand in the life saving. The two passenger elevators are said to have made at least 20 trips and the two freight elevators half as many. The machinery of the freight elevators broke down under the rapid work and they were rendered useless.

After one or two trips by the elevators the press against the doors of the shaft became so great that they were opened with difficulty when the cars, each having a capacity of 15 persons, arrived at the ninth floor. Zito struggled to close the door of the shaft when his car had been jammed full, but after he had started the car it was torn open and a number of women leaped into the shaft after the descending car, falling on the roof of the car even after it had reached the ground floor. Those who had landed alive had been crushed to death against the wa..e.

With this gruesome freight, Zito continued to run his car. The shaft was practically clogged with the dead on the roof of the car and the smoke and flames were roaring in the shaft.

Elevators Are Rushed.

Within the building a man on the eighth floor stationed himself at the door of one of the elevators and with a club kept back the girls who had stampeded to the wire cage. Thirty were admitted to the car at a time. They were rushed down as fast as possible.

The call for ambulances was followed by successive appeals for police until 500 patrolmen arrived to cope with a crowd numbering tens of thousands—a mixture of the morbidly curious and of half crazed relatives and friends of the victims. A hundred mounted policemen had to charge the crowd repeatedly to keep it back.

Led by Fire Chief Croker a squad of firemen stormed the stairway and gained access to the building at seven o'clock. Two searchlights from buildings opposite lighted the way of the fire fighters as they ascended to the top floors. Fifty roasted bodies were found on the ninth floor. They lay in every possible posture, some so charred that recognition was impossible. A half do--n were nude with the flesh hanging in shreds to the bones.

Bodies Taken Away.

Across the street there rested on the sidewalk a hundred pine coffins into which were placed the bodies. As fast as this was done the coffins were carried away in any kind of a vehicle that could be pressed into service to the morgue at Bellevue hospital and to the Charities Pier morgue, opened for the first time since the Slocum horror.

On the tenth floor of the building adjoining the burning structure is the law department of New York university. Here 20 odd students were listening to a lecture by Frank H. Sommer, former sheriff of Essex county, New Jersey.

He saw the smoke and saw the girls trapped on the roof. He led his class to the roof of the university quarters where they found two ladders.

Rescue Forty Girls.

The boys seized these, bore them down two flights to the roof of an intervening building, swarmed out of the windows and raised them to the roof of the burning structure. Forty girls were brought down to safety.

Mothers, fathers and other relatives, literally mad with grief, stormed the police lines at the morgue. Hysterical women fell in the streets and had to be carried away in the already overburdened ambulances. Among the bodies are more than 50 burned beyond all semblance of human form and they will perhaps have to share a common grave as unknown dead.

PARSONAGE DYNAMITED.

Church as Well as the Home Damaged At Dickinson.

Dickinson, N. D., March 27.—An attempt was made to blow up the parsonage of the First Congregational church. A stick of dynamite was set off near the windows of a lower floor sleeping room, causing a terrific explosion, blowing the casings through the room and an open door and through the dining room adjoining, breaking out an entire window on the opposite side of the house and cracking a window in the house in the next yard.

Miss Margaret Tabor, aged 65, was asleep in the room but she was uninjured. Rev. A. C. Hacke and wife and a roomer were sleeping in their rooms above. Glass, broken crockery and furniture were scattered over the floor of the bedroom and dining room. So far there has been no clue to the parties committing the crime. The church stands in the yard about 10 feet from the parsonage and the side next to the parsonage is badly battered and four windows broken.

1911 Graduating Class University of Minnesota

Minneapolis.—Dr. George E. Vincent, as president of the University of Minnesota, will confer diplomas granting the degree of bachelor of arts, B. A., upon over 200 seniors, commencement day, June 8.

The commencement address will be delivered by Dr. Vincent. The program for commencement week has been announced by President Ware of the senior class as follows:

Sunday, June 4, baccalaureate sermon.

Monday, June 5, senior picnic on the Mississippi river bank.

Tuesday, June 6, senior promenade at the Hotel Radisson.

Wednesday, June 7, combined class day and alumni day.

Thursday, June 8, commencement day.

The tentative list of graduates in the college of science, literature and arts, and the college of education is as follows:

PLAN MANKATO-ST. PETER ROAD.

Commercial Club to Survey Route of Proposed Electric Line.

St. Peter.—At a meeting of the Commercial Club, H. E. Hance, of Mankato, addressed the members on behalf of the interurban electric line that is proposed between Mankato and St. Peter, and asked the club to raise a part of the expense of making a permanent survey, estimated at $500, saying that Mankato has already raised its share.

He produced letters from business men, farmers and others in Iowa showing the benefit of such lines to the towns and farming communities on them. He said that eastern promoters stand ready to finance the proposed road, having agreed to furnish 60 per cent of the capital if Mankato, St. Peter and Kasota would raise the rest.

Mayor Ed. Borneman, M. B. Johnson and A. M. Jensen were appointed a committee to raise the $200 required of St. Peter for the permanent survey.

MANKATO WILL CONTEST.

Nephews and Nieces of Mathias Stoffel Put in Claims.

Mankato.—A contest over the estate of Mathias Stoffel, who was found dead in his bed in the house where he lived alone, has been started. A short time ago Mrs. Anna Hall, of Beamer, Neb., and Mrs. Theresa Renner, of Darfur, Minn., put in a claim for the estate, amounting to about $2,500, as Stoffel left no children and was a widower. They said they were adopted children and asked that an administrator be appointed. Eight nephews and nieces object to the appointment of the person petitioned for and say the two petitioners were never adopted by Stoffel, and ask that another be appointed administrator. The court yesterday adjourned the hearing until April 6, to allow Mesdames Hall and Renner to produce proof of their adoption.

WATER SUPPLY FOR MOORHEAD.

City Council Drilling for Vein of Pure Artesian.

Moorhead.—After working for nearly five months to no effect to find a suitable water supply for the city, A. J. Hanson has struck water at a level of 189 feet. Although this is as far as he is now directed by the city council to go, Hanson states that he does not believe that he has as yet arrived at the right level of water, but that a few feet more would yield an abundant supply. The drill has struck a vein of gravel and Hanson is of the opinion that it is beyond this vein of gravel that pure water in abundant supply is to be found.

The present well will be ten inches inside diameter, and is but the first of a series of wells which the city intends drilling if an adequate amount of water can be found. It is the plan to do away with the present water supply from the river and to substitute one of pure artesian water.

ANOTHER SKY SCRAPER.

George Benz Announces Huge New Building for Minneapolis.

Minneapolis. — George Benz, president of the George Benz & Sons (liquor dealers), and owner of a vast amount of real estate and controller of several theatrical enterprises in St. Paul, will erect a $2,000,000 building for office purposes in Minneapolis. It will be located in the heart of the business district, but Mr. Benz declined to give the exact location.

HIDE BOOTY IN CHURCH.

Valuables Stolen From Dilworth Postoffice Are Found in Altar.

Moorhead.—While cleaning the Presbyterian church at Dilworth preparatory to services Leslie Burr discovered the $1,000 draft and other booty stolen from the Dilworth postoffice. The registered draft, together with a number of stamp books, was found concealed in the altar. Nothing else found in the church, however, furnished a clue to the identity of the robbers.

VINCENT TO SPEAK

PRESIDENT OF UNIVERSITY WILL DISCUSS "DUTY OF THE SCHOOL" AT ST. CLOUD.

AT NORTHERN TEACHERS MEET

Dr. Cowling Also to Speak—Head of Carleton College Will Talk of School As a Social Factor.

St. Cloud.—The program of the Northern Minnesota Educational Association, which will hold its fifteenth annual meeting in this city on April 6, 7 and 8, is announced. Senator Robert M. La Follette, of Wisconsin, who had been secured as the principal speaker, found it necessary to cancel his engagement owing to the special session of Congress which was called for April 4. Though his inability to be here is regretted, the committee in charge have secured Dr. George E. Vincent, the newly elected president of the State University, as the principal speaker. He will speak Friday evening, April 7, at the Davidson Theater, on "The Duty of the School."

The general theme of the meeting is "The School As a Social Factor." The complete program follows:

ON HIS LENTEN VACATION

PACKERS IN DEFEAT

FEDERAL JUDGE OVERRULES MOTION TO QUASH INDICTMENTS, UPSETS PLEA IN ABATEMENT.

GOVERNMENT TO RUSH TRIALS

Decision Denies Right of Ten Big Packers to Whitewash as Result of Their Testimony Before Grand Jury in Former Inquiry.

Chicago.—Holding that the immunity granted by Judge Humphrey at the federal circuit court in 1906 did not apply in the present charges, which he declared, were based on evidence not included in the Humphrey declaration, Judge Carpenter in the United States district court Wednesday overruled the demurrer filed by the indicted Chicago packers and they lost their fight against going on trial on the indictments obtained by the government several months ago.

Judge Carpenter's decision went into the controversy relating to immunity with great detail.

In brief, the packers' position was that any conspiracy that might have existed was the plotting prior to Judge Humphrey's immunity decision, and that the immunity that presumption granted them extended over all future time, so long as the acts covered by the 1906 decision remained the same.

In deciding this, Judge Carpenter ruled that the immunity granted them was only for acts which had occurred prior to the date of the indictment and could not pertain to any unlawful act which was performed after that time. The evidence given by the packers before the grand jury, he said, could not relate to that which had not occurred, and hence could have no future application.

As to the contention of the defense that the conspiracy ended with the final plotting, he ruled that so long as the acts complained of continued, the conspiracy remained in effect, and unlawful acts growing out of the conspiracy and occurring after the indicted men had testified before the grand jury were new and separate offenses and subject to the operation of law.

In addition, the offenses admitted before the grand jury by the packers prior to their immunity and from the criminal responsibility for which they were freed by the Humphrey decision, were defined by the court as none the less criminal themselves. For what they could be used in prosecutions which were predicated on a continuation of the offenses.

Following are the defendants: Louis F. Swift, E. E. Swift, Charles F. Swift, Edwards A. Fowler, Edward Tilden, J. Ogden Armour, Arthur Meeker, Thomas J. Conners, Edward Morris and Louis H. Heyman.

United States District Attorney Sims said he would in a day or two demand that the packers be brought into court to plead to indictments and have dates set for trial.

CLAIMS HE IS "IRENE"

SHERARD, ENGLISH AUTHOR, SAYS WIFE'S NOVELS ARE HIS.

Sues Former Wife Accused of America —Declares She Treated Him Like a Dog.

London.—In the trial of the suit brought by Robert Harbarough, the English author, against his wife, Irene Osgood, the American actress, horses, pigs, cats, manuscripts of plays and early divorce papers figured to the great amusement of the spectators.

A suit for separation brought by the wife is pending and the husband in the present action says that she took the animals and things mentioned, all he possessed, and as left him stranded.

After hearing both stories in detail the presiding judge decided that the defendant must return to her husband one horse, six pigs and one cat, and the manuscripts in dispute, or pay him $210. Mrs. Sherard promptly entered an appeal from the judgment.

Sherard, describing his life at Gatlin barough Hall, in Northampton, which is the property of his wife, referred to the hams as "My Calvery." He had been treated like a dog, he declared, and theirs Tarzan out of the place.

"I am Irene Osgood," he shouted dramatically. "I wrote everything that she is supposed to have written in the last five years." He swore that Irene had given him $500 to be used in procuring a divorce from his wife so that he could marry her.

Mrs. Sherard, who is the author of "To a Nun Confessed" and "Servitude" and possesses an income of between $50,000 and $60,000 a year, entered the witness box and described how she met Sherard at Cannes, Switzerland.

He was practically without funds, and she gave him, she said, $500 with which to buy clothes. She did not know at the time that he had been married previously and was not aware of the situation until a few days after their wedding, when she discovered his divorces papers. Suspecting his alliance with her was illegal, she took possession of these documents. She denied that her husband had written any of the works attributed to her.

PUNISHES SIX FOR FRAUD

Members of Mabray Gang Sentenced to Five Months in Prison and Fined $1,000.

Council Bluffs, Ia.—Six of the defendants in the so-called Mabray swindling cases who had pleaded guilty to the charge of using the United States mails in promoting fake sporting events were Tuesday sentenced by Judge Smith McPherson of the federal district court.

L. H. Hindmann, known as the "Honey Grove Kid;" R. L. (Dusty) Thielman, former professional baseball player; George Ryan, Tom Davies, C. T. Phillips and W. I. Cramer were sentenced to five months' imprisonment in some county jail and to pay a fine of $1,000 each.

There are several other Mabray cases pending.

7,000 MEN, U.S. CALL

DEMAND IS MADE BY THE WAR DEPARTMENT FOR RECRUITS.

ASSERTS TAFT DEMANDS END

Member of Rebel Junta Advises Madero to Capture Chihuahua by May 1 or American President May Interfere and Stop Rebellion.

Washington.—The war department on Thursday sent out calls to all the army recruiting stations in the country for six or seven thousand recruits, to bring the infantry regiments of the army mobilized in Texas and California up to full strength.

San Antonio, Tex.—John Hamilton Dignawitty, known here as "Hem" Dignawitty, and three other Americans have been shot to death under order of a Mexican court-martial for participation in the insurrection, according to advices received by members of the Dignawitty family.

The news was brought by Fred Dignawitty, a cousin of the executed man, but he had no particulars aside from the allegation that the execution was the order of a drum-head court-martial.

"Hem" Dignawitty was thirty years of age and was engaged in the cattle and mining business in the state of Chihuahua.

Dr. C. P. Caracristi of the Mexican revolutionary junta issued a statement Thursday declaring that the United States will intervene in Mexico unless some definite progress towards peace is made by May 1.

He made the statement primarily in a report to Madero, the leader of the revolt, urging him at the same time to accomplish the capture of Chihuahua by May 1.

"President Taft," Dr. Caracristi told Madero, "will not wait longer than May 1 for order to be restored."

Dr. Caracristi's statement has attracted serious attention here on account of his long stay in Washington and his investigations in Mexico previous to returning to San Antonio. He went to Washington shortly before Minister of Finance Limantaur gave his mannerous interview in Paris. Significance is attached to the elaborate activities of the two men while absent from the country.

Dr. Caracristi stated that he had met May 1 as the limit at President Taft's pretience. He said he had compiled statistics to show that American money to the amount at $1,000,000,000 is invested in Mexico. These interests are endangered by the situation, he said, and unless the federals and insurrectos are able to settle their differences the United States will treat the rebels as belligerents and stop the contest to protect the interests of its subjects.

Rival financial interests are playing an important part in the insurrection, according to Dr. Caracristi. He does not cantcul that the revolution was started from outside the border, but cleime certain interests have encouraged the rebellion while others have remained steadfast to President Diaz.

Juarez.—The garrison Thursday showed renewed activity. Many barricage were piled along the edges of the flat rnafe to be used as breastworks in case of attack, while additional heing given the municipal buildings an the plaze, which now afford ample protection against anything except artillery fra.

It is reported that bands of insurrectos have been seen from the mountops and great uneasiness is felt in the town, which is defended by 350 artillerymen and a squadron of cavalry 150 strang.

General Navarro sent out a troop of cavalry to intercept a band of insurrectos reported to be crassing the river from the American side a few miles east of here.

El Paso, Tex.—Women and children throughout the region of Boquillas, Tex., are being congregated at the Chishas and Terlingua mines, where the miners can protect them, from Mexican raiders until troops can reach there from Marathon.

PATTEN MUST STAND TRIAL

Federal Judge Noyes Denies Motion to Quash Indictments in Cotton Pool Case.

New York.—The federal government scored a sweeping victory when Judge Noyes, in the United States circuit court, overruled the demurrers interposed by James A. Patten, Eugene M. Scales, Frank B. Hayne, William P. Brown and Robert M. Thompson.

They are under indictment for conspiracy to manopolise interstate trade and commerce in connection with the famous cotton pool of last summer.

The court denies the motion to quash the indictments and holds that the facts established warrants ordering the defendants to trial.

BENJ. D. GREENE FREE

FINISHES FOUR-YEAR TERM FOR HARBOR COMPLICITY.

Takes Pauper's Oath Which Releases Him From His Portion of $575,000 Fine.

Atlanta, Ga.—Benjamin D. Greene, who, with John F. Gaynor, has just completed a four-year term in the federal prison here for complicity in the Savannah harbor improvement frauds, was released, bringing to a close, so far as he is concerned, a legal battle that has commanded attention for the last decade.

Greene's application for leave to take the pauper's oath in order to escape further liabilities for the $575,000 fine imposed on the two men when they were convicted was granted after a hearing which lasted two days.

John F. Gaynor, jointly convicted with Greene, has completed his sentence in the federal prison. His application to take the pauper's oath is pending.

The case of the government against Greene and Gaynor was one of the most unusual in the annals of American jurisprudence. More than a decade ago these two were engaged in a contractual million dollar improvement work in Savannah herbor, under the supervision of Capt. Oberlin M. Carter.

Trouble began when Carter was appointed military attache at the court of St. James. The army officer who succeeded him, Capt. Ceeelse R. Gillette, found evidences of fraud in the work, which resulted in a three months' court-martial for Carter, a fine, a term in lieeresworth prison, and, ultimetely, in the confiscation by the government of money he was alleged to have secured through the harbar frauds.

Greene and Gaynor were indicted in December, 1889. The case did not came to triel in Savannah until March 4, 1902. There was an immediate recess of a few days, during which the defendants went to Canada. The extradition laws did not apply to their case and for about three years they lived in Quebec, until on the grounds of comity and friendship the British government agreed to surrender the fugitives.

Trial at Savannah began October 9, 1905, lasting until April 13, 1906, when they were convicted of embezzlement and sentenced to four years' imprisonment each, and jointly to pay a fine of $575,000.

DISFIGURED WITH ECZEMA

"Our little boy Gilbert was troubled with eczeme when but a few weeks old. His little face was covered with sores even to back of his ears. The poor little fellow suffered very much. The sores began as pimples, his little face was disfigured very much. We hardly knew what he looked like. The face looked like raw meat. We tied little bags af cloth over his hands to prevent him from scratching. He wee very restless at night, his little face itched.

"We consulted two doctore at Chicagas, where we resided at that time. After trying all the medeine af the two doctars without any result, we read of the Cuticura Remedies, and at once bought the Cuticura Soap and Ointment. Following the directions carefully and promptly we eew the result, and after four weeks the child's face was as fine and clean as eny little beby's face. Every one who saw Gilbert after using the Cuticura Remedies was surprised. He hae e head af hair which is a pride far any boy af his age, three years. THE SUNBEAM.

BY W. G. HUNT.

Published every Friday, at Sunbeam, Pennington County, Minnesota.

Subscription price $1.00 per year in advance. If not paid in advance $1.50

Entered as Second-class matter August 30 1905, at the post office at Sunbeam Minn. under the Act of Congress of March 3, 1879

As soon as the city representatives can get their state appropriations fixed up they should adjourn, so as to let our farmers get home for their springs work

From the way things begin to look now we guess the northern part of the state has got enough representation in the legislature, in fact we are of the opinion that we would be better off without any.

A large number of the wise state senators sized up the reapportionment in this way: "If them is the kind of men they are going to send down here, the less number we have the better. We vote No."

Hon. D.P. O'Neil writes us, that there is no possible chance to get any appropriation to build a bridge across Red Lake River in eastern Pennington county. Tell us some news "Dan," we knew that last September.

The taxpayers received a neat little card from county treasurer Trovaton last week with a request to please remit our personal property tax to him. Instead of adding to it what terrible things he would do if we did not promptly send him the cash, Mr. Trovaton adds a short explanation to the taxpayers explaing why they was paying taxes twice in one year, and as the taxes was the lightest they had paid on their assessed valuation for a number of years they paid without any complaint.

W. J. Bryan said, he heartily approved of Taffs Canadian reciprocity pact. We don't blame him Bryan for saying that, for if that treaty is ratified it should be named "Taffs Democrat Manufacturing machine" If that treaty is not voted down by a republican senate it would be the duty of every farmer in the United States to vote the democrat ticket at the next election, so as to remove the duty from what he buys as well as what he sells, and there will be enough of them do it to elect a democratic president, for the longer they farm with that treaty in force the madder they will get. Bryan is o. k. He knows good democratic medicine when he sees it.

There is no use to rail against the state senate for defeating reapportionment, as they simply represented the issue on which they were elected, viz: "County Option." It was the northern part of the state that forced the issue and sent their county option men Hanson and Sangstad to the senate to tell the other fellows "where they get off at." We have nothing against Hon. Mr. Hanson, or Sangstad, but we think it would have been better politics to have sent them down into the slums of Chicago to preach county option and reform, and send men to that state senate who are and would be with the majority, to transact business in and for all the people of northan Minnesota. Reapportionment is defeated, and there is no use to call an extra session to try to get it, as the opponents of county option are in the majority, and they intend to stay there, and reapportionment is as dead as a door nail, not only this year, but for years to come, but we have two solid manority votes for county option every time the question comes up. "Hip" "Hip" "Hurrah."

To Subscribers.

The fact that the postoffice department will not permit weekly papers to circulate in the mails at pound rates when subscriptions are more than one year in arrears is an old story. But it may be news to some that this order is being rigidly enforced and all publishers must cut off all delinquent subscribers. THE SUNBEAM, as well as nearly all publishers, regret the situation, but there is no way of evading it and we ask every subscriber to kindly put his account in shape so as to satisfy the postal department. We would sincerely regret cutting off any subscriber, and if it is not convenient for any one to pay cash we will gladly accept a note for the amount payable next fall, and credit your subscription so as to comply with the rules. We hope that everyone will realize our position and help us out.

Magnitude of Stars.

The brighter a star is the smaller the number representing its magnitude, and consequently a star of the first magnitude is brighter than one of the second, and one of the second magnitude is one magnitudes brighter than one of the fourth, in the same way stars brighter than the first magnitude can be represented by numbers smaller than one, by decimals, or even by negative numbers. Sirius is of the 1.4 magnitude. Vega of 0.2 magnitude. Our sun is a star of the 26.5 magnitude, and it gives us 10,000,000,000 times as much light as Sirius. If the sun were twice as far away from us as it is it would give only one-quarter as much light. If it were 100,000 times farther off than it is its light would be the same intensity as that of Sirius. But even at this enormous distance the sun would be only about one-fifth as far away as Sirius accordg ing to. In other words, Sirius shines with a luster fifty thirty times that of our sun.--New York World.

How Fast of Ramadan Begins.

Since the Mohammedan year is composed of lunar months, the beginning of the fast is dependent upon the appearance of the new moon. The word of the almanac is not taken as true evidence, and before the mufti, the highest Moslem official in the nation, declares the fast to have begun two Mohammedans must appear before him and swear that they have seen the new moon. In precisely the same manner the fast comes to a close. The mufti proclaims three days' feast whenever the first new moon is seen by two of the faithful. Only once did Rhoda was visible in upper Egypt the night before it was observed in Cairo. Two Mohammedans by the Nile testified to the fact to the mufti, making him to announce the feast. This he refused to do on the ground that a telegram could not take the place of two Moslem witnesses.--Christian Herald.

"Dr. Miles' Nervine Raised Me From the Grave"—Mrs. Taylor

This is a strong statement to make, but it is exactly what Mrs. Thomas Taylor, of Blum, Texas, said in expressing her opinion of this remedy.

"Dr. Miles' Restorative Nervine raised me from the grave and I have much confidence in it. I can never say enough for your grand medicine. If anyone had offered me $5 000 for the second bottle of Nervine that I used I would have said 'No indeed.'"

Help the Children.

"There is nothing in all the world so important as children, nothing so interesting. If you ever wish to do for some philanthropy, if you ever wish to be of any real use in the world, do something for children. If you ever yearn to be truly wise, study children. We can dress the sore bandage the wellchild, imprison the crippled, heal the sick and bury the dead, but there is always a chance that we can save a child. If the great army of philanthropists ever exterminate sin and pestilence, ever work out human salvation, it will be because a little child has led them."—David Starr Jordan.

Old Daddy Longlegs.

Everybody is well acquainted with the insect called "daddy longlegs," but not everybody knows that there is evidence to show that this strange little creature towering high upon its threadlike stilts, is probably a more ancient inhabitant of America than any representative of the human species. Far back in tertiary time, at the very dawn of the modern world, its ancestors lived, we are told, in great numbers in that part of the continent which we call Colorado. The fossil remains of those insects show the characteristic features that mark them today, although new species have taken the place of this old, for even "daddy longlegs" knows what evolution is and has striven to something that in his view is perhaps a kind of civilized existence suitable to the exigencies of life in the twentieth century.—Harper's Weekly.

"Three Sheets in the Wind."

What was the origin of the phrase to denote drunkenness, "three sheets in the wind?" a landsman asked a sailor the other day. "Well," said the sailor, "it's about that matter to you. The two lower corners of a ship's sail are held taut by two ropes, one called a sheet and another called a sheet. The sheet is always kept very tight, but the sheet is loosened according to the wind, and the louder the sheet is the more freely the sail swings. If the sheet is quite free its sheet is said to be 'in the wind.' Now, suppose that all three of a ship's sails were quite free. They would then fly about very crazily, and the ship would wobble. The course of the ship would be a staggering one, and the reason for this would be that she had 'three sheets in the wind.' That, I guess, is why a man when he engages in his course is said to be 'three sheets in the wind' also."

The Publisher's Claims Sustained

UNITED STATES COURT OF CLAIMS

The Publishers of Webster's International Dictionary claimed that it is the best dictionary of the English language published in any country, and had previously secured a verdict for the purpose of compelling it to meet the larger and higher requirements of another government.

"It is not of the opinion that this allegation more simply, more accurately and more fully defines the law, was accomplished and the result that has been reached. The Dictionary, as it now stands, has been thoroughly established in every detail, has been accepted in every part, and is admirably adapted to meet the larger and greater demands of a generation which demands more of popular education than formerly, and in consideration that the world knows of course."

It is perhaps needless to add that we refer to the Dictionary in our judicial work as of the highest authority in accuracy of definition; and that in the future as in the past it will be the source of constant reference."

Knew Just How.

Many years ago in Paris at the first presentation of a tragedy that had for its closing scene the murder of a Swedish king which had taken place nearly half a century earlier all went well until the horrible scene came on, when a very dignified old gentleman in the stage box showed signs of strong disapprobation and at length called out angrily:

"Absurd! They've got it all wrong!"

The manager himself heard this plain spoken comment, and, being naturally disturbed by so sweeping a condemnation, he sought out the critic and politely begged to know what fault he had to find with it.

"Why, my good sir," cried the old man, with an air of authority, "the whole grouping of the scene is incorrect! You have made them kill the king to the right of the door, whereas we murdered him on the left!"

The Tea Chewers.

"Chewing tea comes from Siam," said a traveler. "They call it miang. It is a plug, like chewing tobacco, and it has a villainous smell. The smell is due to the fermentation it has undergone. The tea that the Siamese employ for chewing purposes is a very coarse, rank plant. It is gathered like ordinary tea, but the leaves after being compressed into plugs are buried for fifteen days. They ferment during burial. On their resurrection they are very, very freighted indeed. The Siamese heathen chew tea. The rickshaw men chew it. The literateurs chew it. They say it makes their work better. This is probably the truth, for I chewed a plug myself in Assam, and it certainly did me strangely. But the after effects were bad—a headache, smarting eyes and nervous depression."—Washington Post.

Leg Pullers.

That good law provideing for publication of personal property tax lists, is likely to fail to pass, owing to the time being taken up by the two great "leg pulling" bills.One is the bill to probibit the sale of patent medicine, and the other the sale of malt. They have got the patent medicine fellows about scart to death and they will come down haodsome, but the Brewers have had their legs pretty well stretched before during the winter and may not dig up liberal. About all the ordinary individual cares about it is, that it takes up the time that had ought to be devoted to bills that should oass.

WHIPPED THE LEOPARD.

But It Took a Troop of Baboons to Kill the Big Cat.

A vivid pen picture of a fight between a leopard and a troop of baboons is given in a German paper by P. Ritter, a sportsman and explorer in German West Africa. Leopards have a particular liking for baboon flesh, which is often used as bait to trap them.

"One afternoon," the hunter relates, "I was resting on the shady side of a big rock which formed the bank of a small stream. On the opposite side a troop of baboons came down chattering toward the water, a large male going cautiously in front, glancing and scenting around for danger. I remained immobile.

"A deep grunt assured the herd that all was well, and down the steep slope they came, last of all a female with two young, which the mother tenderly helped over the rough places. Suddenly a big leopard shot out from behind a bowlder and with one blow of his paw grabbed one of the young.

"The mother, with a roar of fury, threw herself upon the big cat. The others halted and with one accord clambered back to her assistance. The leopard had fast settled the female and was about to make off with his prey when he found himself surrounded by the whole horde, which closed in upon him.

"He gave as good as he got, and two big baboons rolled down the slope apparently done for, but numbers told, and he was literally torn to pieces. It was a horribly fascinating sight, and I never regretted more having no camera with me than I did then."

THEY DIDN'T FIGHT.

It Was Only a Little Friendly Discussion That Excited Them.

Two Spaniards were conversing earnestly, then excitedly, at last angrily. The young American woman who passed them looked with frightened eyes toward her Spanish guide.

"What are they talking about, Senor Jose?" she asked timidly. "Do you think they will fight—or maybe kill?"

"Ah, no, Senorita Marie," replied Jose, smiling and showing his pretty teeth. "One man—that one, you see, senorita, with the long mustachios—he is saying, 'Me, I prefer much the collaire button which is steel,' and the other one—look, senorita—he is running his fingers through his hair now and his sombrero has a gold cord—he is saying, 'Ah, no, senor, the button which is of gold—si, senor, that is the button for me.'

"But as for myself, senorita, the bone collaire button—that I prefer above all the others.

"Do I not speak with good sense, senorita? Listen. If the button is of steel it will cut. If it is of gold one cannot afford to lose it, but if it is of bone it does not cut, and if it goes what matter? I have a dozen at home in my little top drawer."

"You speak with great good sense, Don Jose, but tell me—were the men really angry?"

"Oh, not at all, senorita. It is only our southern way of being interested in what we discuss. If it had been two Germans, senorita, or maybe two Englishmen, you would never have noticed them."—Philadelphia Ledger.

Then They Talked In English.

A couple of Cleveland business men visited Mexico. In Mexico City their train was switched from one station to another. One of the Clevelanders went to the first station to make inquiries. Approaching a pair of dark visaged employees, he cudgeled his memory for the proper words from the phrase book.

"Donde esta?" he hesitatingly asked and paused.

The two dark visaged persons listened attentively.

"Gracias," stammered the Cleveland man. "Donde estan?"

Then one of the men looked at the other.

"Say, Bill," he growled, "what in merry blue blazes is this fellow talkin' about?"

And after that it was easy.—Cleveland Plain Dealer.

Tamed Him.

"Slip me a brace of cackles," ordered the chesty looking young man with a bored air as he perched on the first stool in the lunch room.

"A what?" asked the waitress as she placed a glass of water before him.

"Adam and Eve flat on their backs! A pair of sunny siders!" said the young man in an exasperated tone.

"You got me, kid," returned the waitress. "Watcha want?"

"Eggs up," said the young man. "E-g-g-s, the kind that come before the hen or after, I never knew which."

"Why didn't you say so in the first place?" asked the waitress. "You'd 'a' had 'em by this time."

"Well, of all things!" said the young man.

"I knew what he was drivin' at all the time," began the waitress as the young man departed. "But he's one of them fellers that thinks they can get by with anything. He don't know that they're using plain English now in restaurants."—Kansas City Times.

One Exception.

Nearsighted Old Man—I say, did you break the record?

Aeronaut—No, but I broke everything else.—Judge.

SELLING OFF OUR WORN-OUT WARSHIPS

CRUISER ALBANY — SENT TO THE JUNK HEAP

AN OLD MONITOR WAITING FOR THE AUCTIONEER

TO keep a fighting navy up to date means a continual whirl-a-gig performance of building new warships on the one hand and discarding obsolete or worn-out ones on the other hand. It is not that a nation is limited to just so many vessels in its fleets or that it has just so much room, so to speak, in which to store three sea dogs of war so that some old vessels must be turned out of house and home to make room for newcomers when the latter are completed by the shipbuilders and ready to take their places to the naval family. On the contrary, any world power would be only too glad to keep all its old ships, even though constantly adding to the collection, if these older warships did not so completely outgrow their usefulness.

As a matter of fact, few people appreciate how quickly such an armorclad does become obsolete. One of these massive floating fortresses constructed in the staunchest manner of iron and steel and requiring two, three or four years to build looks as though it ought to stand the wear and tear of wind and wave for centuries. Yet, in the center of fact, it is wholly out of date in the brief space of a decade or two—not worn out, to be sure, in the literal sense of the word, but so out of date that it is not very serviceable just as is a woman's gown made in the fashion of several years ago.

It is appalling to people who think that a house or a wagon or carriage or a piano wears out more quickly than it ought to realize how much more rapidly, proportionately, an all-metal warship, built to withstand an enemy's shot and shell, will outlive its usefulness without ever having fired a hostile shot or been made the target of an enemy's gun. And the worst of it—at least from the standpoint of the people who think that altogether too much money is being spent for death-dealing paraphernalia—is that the active life of the average warship appears to be steadily growing shorter. Time was, not so very long ago, when the active life of a warship was supposed to be at least twenty years, but so rapidly do fashions in war craft change in this effete twentieth century that the busy career of a fighting craft is now much shorter than a score of years.

Partly because of these tendencies to short life on the part of warships and partly because he has come to be the owner of the second largest navy in the world, Uncle Sam has been mighty busy this past year or two revising his category of warships. He has been weeding them out right and left, if such a term may be used. It is customary to say, in the popular form of expression, that Uncle Sam has been selling out his worn-out warships, and yet, strictly speaking, that hardly expresses the situation. For one thing, the ships are not literally worn out, as has been explained above, and then again the government has not been "selling out" in all instances. Indeed, in the case of some of the obsolete ships put up at auction the bids received have been so low that indignant naval officers have been wont to remark that the navy department has been "giving away" its "has beens." In not a few instances the government—sometimes because no outsider would pay a rational price—has been driven to using its old warships in ways never anticipated when the ships were built.

But whatever the exact mode of disposition, the significance is the same—the obsolete vessel is considered as "junk," even though it still be capable of usefulness in a small way. When it was announced last year that the powers that be of the naval headquarters had designated some $50,000.00 worth of warships to be sent to the scrap heap there were gasps of astonishment from good folk all over the land who had thought that when we built a warship we made a permanent investment. Yet that shock is likely to have frequent repetition. Indeed, it looks as though the discards every calendar year would reach or exceed the fifty million mark, on the basis of original cost. The year 1911 is not very old and yet it has brought tidings of the prospective compulsory retirement of a number of costly ships—some of them completed only a few years ago and supposed to embody all the lessons we learned during the Spanish-American war.

Every merchent knows that it is not good policy to hold on to "dead stock" simply because he paid out good money for it once upon a time, and so Uncle Sam is following an approved business principle in this scheme of taking frequent inventory of his naval possessions. The plan of actually getting rid of surplus craft came about through the sale as junk o few years ago of the last of the old Civil war monitors. Then brought fair prices—better proportionately than have been bid for some vessels less ancient. Then, all of a sudden, with the appearance of the British battleship "Dreadnought" there was unexpectedly ushered in the present era of the "all big gun" ships, an era that in effect brought to an untimely close many promising careers in warshipdom—cut short, in other words, the usefulness of a number of unarmored and lightly armored craft that might have continued in the vocation for which they were built for many years yet had it not been for this new fad for the heavily armored sea warrior.

Battleships are, according to present ideas, the longest-lived of all warships. Of the more than thirty heavyweights of the naval fighting force which have been constructed by the United States, only one has as yet been condamned to the graveyard. This exception is the Texas, and perhaps the officials were all the more ready to get rid of her because she was a "hoodoo" ship. Readers will remember that she did not behave any too well during the Spanish-American war, and since then she has been afflicted with such a steady run of ill luck that many of the blue-jackets grew superstitious about venturing to sea in her. Thereupon she was made a "station ship" ot a navy yard and now within the past few weeks the navy department has decided that she is truly useless and she will be used as a target. In this function she may be of more benefit to the navy, though indirectly, than she ever was during her active career. It is most essential for the planning of the battles of the future that our naval experts shall know in advance just how modern high explosives, when fired from present-day guns of the heaviest class, will act when they encounter the resistance of the armor on a battleship. Tests with such armor set up as a target on shore do not give exactly the same conditions that would obtain in o fight ot sea. The discarded Texas, however, anchored to receive gun fire just as though she were a hostile battleship, will give the naval experts a chance to foresee just what is liable to happen in the naval battle of the future and to lay their plans accordingly.

CRUISER COLUMBIA — HER VOCATION GONE

BATTLESHIP TEXAS TO BE USED AS A TARGET

While out battleships, even though some of them were built full twenty years ago, continue in fashion, o very different fate has befallen the steel monitors which once ranked next to battleships in the estimation of our naval authorities and everybody else. Uncle Sam had nearly a dozen of these armored monitars—a distinctive Yankee invention that originated during the Civil war—but they have all been sold off or relegated to ignominous duty. This fate has even befallen the Nevada, the Florida (sister the Tallahassee) and the others of the quartette of modern monitors which were constructed for coast defense, only a little more than a decade ago and cost a million and a half dollers each.

An immense collection of warships that is rapidly passing is thet made up of cruisers such as the Boston, Minrbleend, Detroit and a score of others. Some of these have already been retired from service, while others are yet employed for "keeping peace" in Central America and for patrol work, particularly in smaller waters where the battleships can not readily find anchorage. However, they have neither the speed nor the armor to enable them to take a leading part in up-to-date warfare on the seas as it would be conducted in this day and generation by any up-to-date power and so gradously they will have to give way. The same is true of some of the gunboats built long ago—though not a few of them are yet adapted to patrol duty where there is no donger of heavy fighting—and as for our pioneer torpedo boats, why, they are so far furicleased that the battleship fleet has been using them up one by one for several years past as targets during the semi-annual target practice.

Since the navy department found that edequate bids cannot be obtained for many of the vessels which it is discarding, but which are perfectly serviceable in so far as seaworthiness is concerned, it has been considering the suggestion made by a number of congressmen that these vessels be turned over to the naval militia of the various states for use as training ships or practice ships. Vessels such as the cruisers Charleston and St. Louis would be ideal for such purpose.

If you find any substance in your baking injurious to health made from Baking powder in this can there is—

$1000 In it for you

Calumet has been backed for years by an offer of $1,000 for any substance injurious to health found in the baking prepared with it.

Does not this and the fact that it complies with all pure food laws, both State and National, prove that Calumet is absolutely pure?

With the purity question settled—then Calumet is undoubtedly the best Baking Powder. It contains more leavening power, it is more uniform—every can is the same. It assures better results—and is moderate in price.

Women's Secrets

There is one man in the United States who has perhaps heard more women's secrets than any other man or woman in the country. These secrets are not secrets of guilt or shame, but the secrets of suffering, and they have been confided to Dr. R. V. Pierce in the hope and expectation of advice and help. That few of these women have been disappointed in their expectations is proved by the fact that ninety-eight per cent. of all women treated by Dr. Pierce have been absolutely and altogether cured. Such a record would be remarkable if the cases treated were numbered by hundreds only. But when that record applies to the treatment of more than half-a million women, in a practice of over 40 years, it is phenomenal, and entitles Dr. Pierce to the gratitude accorded him by women, as the first of specialists in the treatment of women's diseases.

Every sick woman may consult Dr. Pierce by letter, absolutely without charge. All replies are mailed, sealed in perfectly plain envelopes, without any printing or advertising whatever, upon them. Write without fear as without fee, to World's Dispensary Medical Association, Dr. R. V. Pierce, Pres., Buffalo, N. Y.

Minnesota Legislature

Proceedings at the Minnesota State Capitol for the Past Week.

St. Paul, March 23.—

A bill to reimburse H. V. Mercer with $2,452 for his legal counsel to the workingmen's compensation commission was presented in the senate today by Senator Moonan.

Senator Fenseen is author of a bill to make all natural waterways and ditches state ditches, so that even the owners of the property cannot change their course, dam them or interfere with their flowage. He also introduced a bill to create a state department of weights and measures.

Senator Gunderson introduced a bill to change the 2-cent passenger rate law by permitting the railroad companies to refuse any fare less than 5 cents.

So that the state highways commissioners would be compelled to devote all of its time to state work, Senator Swanson introduced a bill giving them a salary of $3,000 each, yearly. At present they have no salary. With the enormous amounts of money to be spent by them in the future Senator Swanson said they should be compelled to devote their entire time to the work.

Fee for Solicitors is Asked.

The man who solicits newspaper subscriptions in homes, the man who invades offices to secure subscriptions to popular weekly and monthly magazines, or the young woman who insists on housewives subscribing to women's magazines, will have to pay $1 to the county in which they pursue their occupations, if a bill introduced by Senator Nelson is passed. The bill applies to every solicitor of every professional. They are made liable to arrest and fines if they lack licenses.

Clinton Robinson's bill designed to make blind pigs impossible was referred to a subcommittee after being discussed by the house committee on temperance. This action was taken to determine certain constitutional points. The bill prohibits any brewery or wholesaler from selling more than one case of beer or a gallon of spirituous liquor to any person not holding a state license and imposes a heavy penalty for violation. This feature is expected to stop breweries and saloons from delivering liquor to bland pigs.

W. I. Nolan's resolution calling for the appointment of a legislative commission to investigate the methods employed by the state departments and make recommendations for a reorganization of state government was recommended for passage by the house committee on general legislation. The resolution is in line with the suggestions made of Governor Eberhart in his message. Mr. Nolan declared to the committee that with the elimination of many state boards and a reorganization of the state offices the cost of running the administrative departments could be cut in half.

The house committee on commerce recommended for passage the Holmberg bill requiring inspection of all apples. It provides for the inspection of every barrel or crate.

Representative Bulcrud introduced a bill providing that the state shall pay half the cost of any Tuberculosis sanatorium erected by any county in the state.

J. J. Moriarity introduced a bill requiring railroad companies to publish their time tables in the newspapers of every city on their lines.

St. Paul, March 24.—A vote of censure will be the only punishment given P. L. Kiemer, the Faribault representative, for refusing to apologize to Speaker Duna for his charges that the committees of the lower house of the legislature had been fixed in favor of the special interests. This will be recommended in a second report to be made to the house by R. C. Dunn, L. C. Spooner and Albert Pfender, the special committee appointed to inquire into the conduct of the gentleman from Rice county.

It was at first planned to expel him from the house, but as several members believed that this action would make a martyr of him the less severe punishment was decided upon. With the censure of the house, the incident as far as Mr. Kiemar is concerned will be closed. The program is to then authorize the appointment of a committee of five to investigate the charges made by the Faribault member and make its findings to the house.

Investigation Asked.

"I am willing to apologize for what I have said if after a thorough and impartial investigation by this house it shall appear that my convictions and the convictions of the public are not well founded. I therefore propose, Mr. Speaker, that a committee of seven members be appointed, of which I shall be allowed to name three members and the speaker three members and that the six members so appointed be authorized to name the seventh member for the purpose of investigating the charges that I have made and that such committee be given full power to subpoena witnesses and compel the production of books and papers bearing on this question."

The C. E. Stone capitol approach bill was killed by a large vote. The country members voted almost unanimously against the measure. The Stone bill provided for the appointment of a capitol commission to have the authority to purchase property adjacent to the capitol grounds and beautify it.

The abolishment of sticker voting for candidates whose names do not appear on the ballots is provided for in a bill introduced by G. W. Brown. It allows voting for candidates whose names are not on the ballots, but the names must be written.

Thomas Knoblenski's bill providing for a constitutional convention to amend the state constitution was recommended for passage by the committee of the whole house by a unanimous vote. Some opposition developed because many of the members did not understand its provisions. L. C. Spooner explained that it was designed to make such changes in the constitution as the people have been trying to make by popular vote for several years. He declared that the state has already spent $160,000 trying to pass constitutional amendments. "Last year it cost the state $28,000 to print the amendments," continued Mr. Spooner. "If we had a constitutional convention these changes could be made and we would be relieved of the expenses and trouble."

PECULIAR AFTER EFFECTS OF GRIP THIS YEAR.

Leaves Kidneys in Weakened Condition

Doctors in all parts of the country have been kept busy with the epidemic of grip which has visited so many homes. The symptoms of grip this year are very distressing and leave the system in a run down condition, particularly the kidneys which seem to suffer most, as every victim complains of lame back and urinary troubles which should not be neglected, as illness danger signals often lead to more serious sickness, such as dreaded Bright's Disease. Local druggists report a large sale on Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root which so many people say soon heals and strengthens the kidneys after an attack of grip. Swamp-Root is a great kidney, liver and bladder remedy, and being an herbal compound, has a gentle healing effect on the kidneys, which is almost immediately noticed by those who try it. Dr. Kilmer & Co., Binghamton, N. Y., offer to send a sample bottle of Swamp-Root, free by mail, to every sufferer who requests it. A trial will convince any one who may be in need of it. Regular size bottles 50 cts. and $1.00. For sale at all druggists. Be sure to mention this paper.

He says he wishes to stay with her always, where she looks so beautiful to him. She answers: But it's just the same thing; I am down below, we are all down below. . . . You have come to here only to realize and to learn, once for all, how to see me when you see me down below. . . . Do you understand, Tyltyl, dear? . . . You believe yourself in heaven; but heaven is wherever you and I kiss each other. . . . There are not two mothers, and you have no other. . . . Every child has only one; and it is always the same one and always the most beautiful; but you have to know her and to know how to look.

FREE SAMPLE OF LAXATIVE CURED THEIR CONSTIPATION

When a person has become discouraged through years of failure to find a cure, and finally, perhaps, given up trying, it is small wonder that he becomes skeptical. And yet, to all who have constipation, we would say, "Try just one thing more."

We wish you would try Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin, a laxative tonic that has been used for a generation. Thousands are using it; surely some of your friends among the number. You can buy it of any druggist at fifty cents and one dollar a bottle, but better still, send your name and address to Dr. Caldwell for a free sample bottle. He will send you enough to convince you of its merits, and then if you like it you can buy it of your druggist. Mr. J. J. Petty of Unionville, Mo., Mr. George W. Zimmerman of Harrisburg, Pa., and many others of both sexes and in all parts of the country first used a sample bottle and now have it regularly in the house.

You will learn to do away with salts, waters and cathartics for these are but temporary reliefs while Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin is guaranteed to cure permanently. It will train your stomach and bowel muscles so that they will do their work again naturally without outside aid. Cast aside your skepticism and try Syrup Pepsin.

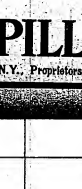
Colds and Chills Bring Kidney Ills

February, March and April are the backache months, because they are months of colds, chills, grip and pneumonia, with their congesting, weakening influence on the kidneys. Colds, chills, or grip strain the kidneys and start backache, urinary disorders and uric acid troubles. You feel lame, weak and tired and have headache, dizzy feelings, achy muscles and joints; too frequent, painful urinary passages, sediment, etc. Chills hurt the kidneys. Likewise well kidneys often prevent taking cold, by helping to pass off the waste matters of cold congestion. Doan's Kidney Pills are very useful in the raw winter and spring months. They stop backache and urinary disorders, keep the kidneys well and prevent colds from settling on the kidneys. Strong testimony proves it. What better evidence could you ask?

CONVINCING PROOF FROM GRATEFUL USERS

IN HOSPITAL FOR NINE MONTHS.

Awful Pain From Kidney Trouble.



Alfred J. O'Brien, No. 2nd St., Sterling Colo., says: "I was in the Baltimore Marine Hospital for nine months. I was emaciated from fever, had a persistent ache in my back and was completely run down. The urine was in a terrible state, and some days I would pass half a gallon of blood. I left the hospital because they wanted to operate on me. I then went to St. Joseph's Hospital in Omaha and put in three months there without any gain. I was pretty well discouraged when I was advised to use Doan's Kidney Pills, but by the time I had used one box the pain in the back left me. I kept right on and a perfect cure was the result. You may put anyone in communication with me and I will give them proof that this statement is correct."

THE SHADOW OF DEATH.

A Washington Woman's Remarkable Recovery.

Mrs. Enos Shearer, Tew St., Centralia, Wash., had one kidney gone, the other badly diseased, and five doctors in consultation, was thought to be in a hopeless state. "My illness was so swollen," said Mrs. Shearer, "that I could hardly get about. I rapidly grew worse until the doctor said one kidney was entirely gone and the other badly decayed. The end seemed near, and my friends gave me up to die. On my brother's advice I began using Doan's Kidney Pills and after the fourth day I was able to be propped up in bed. Though their use I rapidly improved until at the present time I am active and well, although 65 years old. I can do fully as much work as any woman in Centralia, and enjoy good health."

THE APACHES OF NEW YORK

By ALFRED HENRY LEWIS

COPYRIGHT, BY PEARSON, PUB. CO.

HE was born somewhere on the banks of the Danube and and cams steerage-wise to this country shout ten years ago. In what circles he effected he was called "The Bottler." He may have had another name in Austria; but since he is now dead and down under the grass roots, "The Bottler," as a phrase of identification, should serve well enough.

The Bottler was round, inoffensive, well-dressed, affable. He was also generous, as the East side employs the term.

For he it known that The Bottler was a money maker and had Suffolk street position as among its richest capitalists.

What bridge whist is to Fifth avenue so is stuss to the East side. No one save the dealer wins at stuss, and yet the device possesses an alluring feature. When the victim gets up from the table the "bank" under the descriptive of "viggrash" returns his one-tenth of his losings. No one ever leaves a stuss game broke and that final ray of sure sunshine forms indubitably the strong attraction. Stuss licks up as with a tongue of fire a round full fifth of all the East side earns, and to "viggrash" should be given the black glory thereof.

The Bottler owned talents to make money. Morally careless, liking the easy way, with several that hent for speculation which sets some folk to dealing in stocks and others to dealing cards, those money-making talents found expression in stuss. Not that the Bottler was so weak minded as to "buck" the game. Wise, prudent, solvent, he went the other way about and dealt it, his theater of operations being 135 Suffolk street.

There are two great gangs on the East side. These are the "Five Points' and the "Monk Eastmans." There are smaller gangs, but each owes obligance to either the one or the other of the two great gangs, and fights around its standard in event of general gang war.

There is danger in belonging to either of these gangs. But there is still greater danger in not belonging to one of them. I speak of folk of The Bottler's ways and walks. The Five Points and Monk Eastmans are at feud with one another and the fires of their warfare are never permitted to die out. Membership in one gang means that, to the extent of its power, it will buckle you against the other while you live and revenge you should you fail. Membership is neither, however, means that you will be raided and robbed by both.

The Bottler's stuss house was—like every other of its kind—a Castle Dangerous. To the ced that the peril of his days and nights ho reduced to a maximum, he united himself with the Five Points. True, he could not be counted upon as a "shoulder" or strong arm; but ho hod money end would port with it, and gang war like all war demands treasure. Bonds must be given, fines paid, and The Bottler would have his uses. Wherefore the Five Points opened their ranks to receive him.

The Monk Eastmans had suffered a disorganising setback when the chief who gave the sept his name went up the river for ten years. On the heels of that sorrowful retirement it became a case of York and Lancaster; two rivol claimants for the throne stood forth. These were Ritchie Fitzpatrick and Kid Twist, both volorous, both with reputations of having killed, both with clouds of followers at their backs.

Twist, in whom abode the rudiments of a savage diplomocy, proposed a conference. Fitzpatrick at that conference was shot to death and Kid Dahl, a near friend of Twist, "stood for the collar."

AS THE CLOCK STRUCK THE HOUR, HE FIRED TWICE

The police, the gangs and the politicians are not without a sinister wisdom. When life has been taken and to punish the slayer would be an inconvenience, some one who didn't do the killing submits to arrest. This covers the retreat of the guilty. Also, the public is appeased. Later, when the public memory sleeps, the arrested one—for lack of evidence—is set at liberty.

Thus when Fitzpatrick was killed, to make clear the path to gang leadership to the aspiring feet of Twist, the police took Dahl, who all but volunteered for the sacrifice. Dahl went smilingly to jail, while the real murderer of Fitzpatrick attended that dead gentleman's wake and later appeared at the funeral. This last, however, by the nicer tastes of the East side, was complained of as trenching upon vulgarity.

Fitzpatrick was buried with a lily in his hand and Twist hailed chief of the Eastmans. Dahl remained in the Tombs a reasonable number of weeks and then resumed his position in East side society. It was but natural and to the glory of stumbling hmnon nature that Dahl should dwell warmly in the grateful regards of Twist.

Twist, now chief of the Eastmans, cast about to establish Dahl. There was The Bottler, with his stuss Golconda in Suffolk street. Were not his affiliations with the Five Points? Was he not therefore-tho enomy? The Bottler was an Egyptian and Twist resolved to spoil him in the interest of Dahl.

"Twist, with Dahl, waited upon The Bottler. Argument was short and to the point. Said Twist:

"Bottler, the Kid"—indicating the expectant Dahl—"is in wit' your stuss graft from now on. It's to he an even break."

The news almost checked the beating of The Bottler's heart. Not that he was astonished. What the pulseant Twist proposed was a commonest step in East side commerce—the East side, where the Scotch proverb of "Take what you may, keep what you can," retains its former Highland force. The Bottler bowed to the inevitable and accepted Dahl.

For six weeks The Bottler and Dahl settled up, fifty-and-fifty, with the close of each stuss day. Then came a fresh purgiva. Dahl presented his friend, the "Nailer," to The Bottler with this terse remark:

"Bottler, you can beat it. This Neller is goin' to be me partner now. Which lets you out, see?"

The Bottler was at hey. He owned no stomach for battle, but tha sentiment of desperation which the announcement of Dehl provoked drove him to make a stand. To lose one-half hed been hed. To lose all—to he wholly wiped out in the annals of Suffolk street stuss—was more than even his meekness might bear. No, The Bottler did not dream of going to the police. That would have been to "squeal," and even his friends of the Five Points had only faces of flint for such tactics of disgrace.

The harassed Bottler berred his doors against Dahl. He would defend his castle and get word to the Five Points. The Bottler's doors having been borred, Dahl for his side at once instituted a siege, despatching the Nailer meanwhile to the nearest knot of Eastmans to bring reinforcements.

At this crisis a central office detectivs strolled into the equation. He himself was hunting a "loft worker" of more than customary industry and had no thought of either The Bottler or Dehl. Hopening, however, upon a situation whereof the striking features were Dahl outside with a gun and The Bottler inside with a gun, he so far recalled his oath of office as to interfere.

With the sure instinct of his Mulberry street cente, he of the central office opened negotiations with Dahl. He knew the latter to be the dangerous angle and began by placing the muzzle of his own pistol against that marauder's back.

"Make a move," observed the central office man, "and I'll shoot you in two."

The sophisticated Dahl, realising fate, moved not, and with that tha central office man collected his armament.

Next Tha Bottler was ordered to coms forth. Tha Bottler obeyed in a sweat and a tremble. He surrendered his pistol at word of the law and tha central office man led both captives off to jail. The two were charged with "disturbance," in the station house, as on the way, Dahl ceased not to threaten The Bottler's life.

"This plush'll cost a fine of $5," said Dahl, glaring round the central office man at the shaking Bottler. "I'll pay it, an' then I'll get square wit' youse. Once we're footloose you won't last as long as a drink of whiskey!"

The judge yawningly listened, while the central office man told his tale of that "disturbance."

"Five an' costs!" qnoth the judge, and called the next case. The Bottler returned to Suffolk street, Dahl to Twist, while the central office man again took the trail of the loft worker.

Dahl talked things over with Twist. There was but one way: The Bottler must die. Anything short of blood would unsettle Twist's position as among the gangs. Anything short of blood would unsettle popular respect for Twist and without that his leadership of the Eastmans was a farce.

The Bottler's killing, however, must be managed with a decent care for the conventionalities. For either Twist or Dahl to walk in upon that offender and shoot him to death, while feasible, would be foolish.

Twist sent to Williamsburg for his friend and ally, Cyclone Louis. The latter was a bull-necked, highly muscled personage, who was a professional strong man—so far as he was professionally anything—and earned occasionally side-show money at Coney Island by heading iron bars about his neck and twisting pokers into corkscraws about his brawny arms.

Louis, Twist and Dahl went into council over mutual beer and Twist explained the imperative call for The Bottler's extermination. Also, he laid here the delicate position of both himself and Dahl.

Louis did not hesitate, but placed himself at the disposal of Twist and Dahl. The Bottler should die; ha, Louis, would see to that.

"But when?"

Twist, replying, felt that the thing should be done at once, and mentioned the following evening, nine o'clock. The place would he The Bottler's establishment in Suffolk street. Louis, of whom The Bottler was unafraid and ignorant, would experience no difficulty in approaching his man. There would be others present; but, practiced in gang moralities, slaves to gang etiquette, no one would open his mouth. Or, if he did, it would be only to pour forth perjuries and say that he saw nothing, heard nothing.

THERE WAS A FLASH AND A ROAR

Having adjusted details, Louis, Twist and Dahl compared watches. Watches! Certainly. Louis, Twist and Dahl were all most fashionably attired and—as became members of a gang nobility—singularly full and accurate in the important element of a "front," viddish, that list of personal adornments which includes scarf pin, ring and watch. Louis, Dahl and Twist saw to it that their timepieces agreed. This was so that Dahl and Twist might successfully errange their alibis.

It was the next evening. At 8:55 o'clock Twist was obtrusively in the Delancey street police station, wrangling with the desk sergeant over the release of a follower who had carefully brought about his own arrest.

"Come," quoth Twist to the sergeant, "it's next to nine o'clock now. Fix up tha bond; I've got a dats over in East Broadway at nine-thirty."

While Twist stood thus enforcing his whereabouts upon the attention of the desk sergeant Dahl was eating a headcak in a Houston street restaurant.

"Whet tima have you got?" demanded Dahl of the German who kept the place.

"Five minutes to nine," returned tha German, glancing up et the clock.

"Oh, tain't no such time as that," retorted Dahl peevishly. "Thet clock's drunk! Call up the telephone people and find out for sure."

"The 'phone people say it's nina o'clock," reported the German, hanging up the receiver.

"Bully Ces! I didn't think it was more'n half past eight!" and Dahl looked virtuously corrected.

While these fragments of talk were taking place The Bottler was attending to his stuss interests. He looked pale and frightened and his hunted eyes roved hars and there. Five minutes went by. Tha clock pointed to nine. A slouch-hat stranger entered. As the clock struck the hour he placed the muzzle of a pistol against The Bottler's breast and fired twice. Both bullets pierced the heart and Tha Bottler fell forward on his face—dead without a word. There were twenty people in the room. When the police arrived they found only the dead Bottler.

The police recalled those trnde differences which had culminated in the charge of "disturbance" and arrested Dahl.

"You ain't got me right," scoffed Dahl to the police.

There came the inquest and Dahl was set free. The Bottler was hurled and Twist and Dahl sent flowers and rode to the grave.

The law slept, a hat-eyed constebulary went its way, but tha gangs knew.

Distinguished among the chivalry of the Five Points was an individual known as Kid Pioggi. Only a paucity of years—he was under eighteen—withheld Pioggi from topmost honors.

The winter's snow melted into spring, spring lapsed into early summer. It was a brilliant evening and Pioggi was disporting himself at Coney Island. Also Twist and Louis, following some plan of relaxetion, were themselves at Coney Island.

Pioggi had seated himself at a beer table in the house of call of one "Ding Dong." Twist and Louis came in. Pioggi, being of the Five Points, was recognized as a foe by Twist, who lost no time in mentioning the fact.

Being in a facetious mood, and by way of expressing his contempt for that gentlemon, Twist made Pioggi jump out of the window.

Louis and Twist sat down at the table in Ding Dong's from which Pioggi had been driven and demanded refreshment in the guise of wine. Pioggi, rage-swollen as to heart, hasted himself at a nearby telephone. Calling up a resort on the Bowery affected by the Five Points, Pioggi got the ear of a Higher Influence of tha clan. Ha told of his abrupt dismissal from Ding Dong's and the then presence of Twist and Twist. This Higher Influence instructed Pioggi to keep tha two in sight. Tha very flower of the Five Points should be at Coney Island as fast as cabis cars could carry them.

Pioggi pitched upon ona whosa name and face were unknown to Twist and Louis. Tha unknown would he tha bearer of a blind message—it purported to coma from a dancer in one of tha cheap theaters of tha place—calculated to bring forth the jump.

"Stall 'am up this way," said Pioggi, indicating a spot within tonching distance of that coupe. "It's here we'll put 'em over the jump."

Pioggi's messenger did well his work and Twist and Louis moved magnificently albeit unsteadily into the open. They were sweeping the walk clear of lesser mortals, when the voice of Pioggi arrested their attention.

"Oh, there, Twist, look here!"

The voice came from tha rear and to tha right; Pioggi's position was one calculated to place tha enemy at a double disadvantage.

Twist turned his head. There was a flash and a roar; a bullet struck Twist above the eye. Ha staggered. Tha lead now came in a storm. Twist went down; Louis fell across him. Thara were twelva bullets in Twist and eight in Louis. While tha crackling roar of thot cannonading still alarmed the ears of man every gangster vanished. Only the dead Twist and tha dead Louis remained.

Pioggi went into hiding in Greenwich, where tha Five Points had a "hold-out." There were pullings and haulings and whisperings in dark political corners. When conditions had been whispered and hauled and pulled into satisfactory condition Pioggi sent word to a favorita officer to come and arrest him.

Pioggi explained to the court that his life had been threatened; he had slew only that he himself might live. He was sorry he had slew. Likewise there had been no public loss; the going of Twist and Louis had but raised the average of all respectability. The court pondered the business and decided that justice would be fulfilled by sentencing Pioggi to the Elmira reformatory.

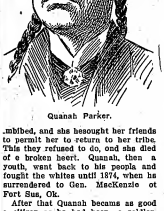
RICH INDIAN IS DEAD

Quanah Parker a Famous and Picturesque Chief.

Noted Comanche Credited With Having Killed Many White Men Has Lately Lived Like a Lord in Oklahoma.

Lawton, Ok.—One of the wealthiest and most picturesque American Indians passed away recently here, in the death of Quanah Parker, the famous chief of the Comanche tribe. He was credited with having killed hundreds of white men in his early days, but for years he had lived a civilized life.

Chief Quanah lived like a lord in a $6,000 mansion, and was the proprietor of a great cattle ranch, besides 300 acres of farming land under excellent cultivation. Some estimates placed his wealth at $1,000,000.



He had seven wives and innumerable children. Three of his sons studied at the Indian school at Carlisle, Pa., some years ago.

The chief was a friend and admirer of Col. Roosevelt, with whom he had hunted, and was accustomed to tell with pride how when it was proposed to sell certain Comanche lands for $1.50 an acre, his protest to the colonel, who was then president, brought a prompt promise that the price should not be under $5 an acre.

Parker hod completely mastered an appetite for strong drink and he despised gambling, a vice to which great numbers of his people were addicted.

The chief was the son of a white woman, Cynthia Ann Parker, daughter of Gen. Isaac Parker, a distinguished Texas politician, who over 60 years ago lived in Parker county, that state. She was captured when 4 years old by a marauding band of Comanches, which attacked the family home. The child grew up as an Indian, learning their language, and finally marrying Chief Quanah, one of the warriors of the tribe.

When little Quanah was a small boy his mother was rataken by her friends and returned to her old home in Texas. But the new surroundings were in no way suited to the wild spirit she had mbibed, and she besought her friends to permit her to return to her tribe. This they refused to do, and she died of a broken heart. Quanah, then a youth, went back to his people and fought the whites until 1874, when he surrendered to Gen. MacKenzie at Fort Sus, Ok.

After that Quanah became as good a citizen as he had been a soldier. The town of Quanah, Tex., was named for him, and he gave considerable sums of money to the public institutions of the town. His accumulated property rapidly and he knew how to take care of it when he got it. But he was generous, and had a host of friends among the whites, while among the Comanches he was looked up to as a sort of demi-god.

AMUSING STORY OF RED TAPE

Although Vouched for by Leading Berlin Paper, It Is Hard to Believe.

Berlin.—The following story of red tape, which is vouched for by a Berlin publication, is hard to beat evan in the warm cradle of Prussian officialdom. Not long ago tha head mistress of a high school for girls notified the authorities that there was a rat on tha premises and asked that a man might ha sent to kill it. Tha request was duly noted, but as the district rat catcher was not immediately available tha head mistress was advised to feed the beast in the meantime and that the rat catcher should not make a fruitless journay. This she did for some days, and as the rat grew fat and not put in an appearnce she made a second application. The original request, was informed, had been mislaid, but help would be sent in a few days.

Weeks passed and one day tha rat was found dead and was buried in the garden in the presance of tha head mistress. A day or so later an official carrying a bundle of documents "in tha matter of tha rat" brought a message to the effect that the head mistress should take steps to destroy tha' rat at her own axpense, as tha official rat catcher could not come before a certain futurs time. Upon being informed that the rat was dead and buried the official retired, but came back tha next day asking for a written certificate to show that the rat was really dead. He got it, and the administrative machina is once mora working smoothly.

WASHINGTON GOSSIP

Uncle Sam Has a Great Golden Hoard

WASHINGTON—Uncle Sam has more gold in his possession today than he has ever had before in his life. Treasurer Lee McClung looked over his balance sheet recently and found the government had more than $1,000,000,000 in gold coin, to say nothing of $126,000,000 in bullion. Never before in the history of the government has it had so much gold piled up in its coffers.

Not only is this a record-breaking amount for the government to have, but there is more gold in the treasury now than in the vaults of Great Britain and France combined, or of Great Britain and Russia combined.

In other words, this government has more gold, in gold coin and bullion, than any other two nations.

This vast golden hoard represents the accumulation of a long series of years. It is not ascribed to any particular financial development of recent occurrence. By no means is all this gold coin and bullion stored in Washington. Any hurgiarious gentleman who thinks he can tunnel under the treasury and find all this gold in that institution is in error. The gold is partly in the vaults of the treasury here in Washington, some of it is in the vaults of the subtreasuries and some of it is in the mints of Philadelphia and Denver.

As a matter of fact the greater part of it is at the two mints named.

About $235,000,000 of the total coin is held in trust to redeem outstanding gold certificates.

Three years ago the government transferred $275,000,000 in gold coin from San Francisco to Denver. That task was accomplished at a cost of $275,000.

President Taft Leads Strenuous Life

PRESIDENT TAFT has proved to the satisfaction of official Washington that he can lead the strenuous life, even if he does not wade through Rock creek every rainy Saturday afternoon and make 50-mile horseback rides to show his physical fitness.

During the past winter the president has gone through a program, official and social, that would have left many a younger man gasping for breath. In spite of it all the president today looks as if he were in the best of health, a bit pale from lack of golf and plenty of outdoor exercise, but still in good trim.

Anyone who thinks the president has gone through a round of pleasure since his daily schedule. His is up before seven o'clock, and with his physical director, Dr. Barker, he does some stunts which serve to give him an appetite for breakfast.

Mr. Taft leaves the executive mansion on his office shortly after nine o'clock, and from the time he arrives until 1:30 or 2 o'clock, he is constantly with the cabinet or with callers. Many a day he shakes hands with scores of visitors and talks with members of congress and other officials about important matters.

After luncheon the president usually comes back to his office for an hour or more of work. Then he goes for a walk of several miles through the capital. After the walk he sees more callers and frequently does not get into the White House until close to eight o'clock—the hour for dinner.

Although Mr. Taft probably likes home life as well as any other American, he has accepted far more invitations to "go out" than did his predecessor. The president has almost completely forgotten a custom followed by Mr. Roosevelt of not attending social functions outside the White House except those given by the vice-president and members of the cabinet. Mr. Taft has frequently attended receptions or balls given in honor of his daughter, Helen, a debutante of this season. He has also lent his presence at many other functions of the season at the homes of friends and at several public affairs. In addition to all this social activity the president has consented to make dozens of speeches and to attend many banquets of national organizations which have met here in the winter months.

Work Planned for the Extra Session

WHILE resting in Georgia, President Taft gave considerable attention to certain portions of his message to congress. He went to the south solely for rest, but reciprocity, the Mexican war, and other questions of state would out down. There will probably be three important messages to the extra session of congress. At least that is the present expectation of the executive. One will deal solely with reciprocity, another with tariff revision and a third with the Mexican war.

The war message will come in connection with the request for an appropriation to meet the expenses of the "maneuvers." There will be a deficiency in the allowance for army mobilization. This must be made up by congress, and in asking for the one, or five, or ten million dollars with which to meet this expense, the president will outline the reason for this army movement. Already an inquiry by congress is scanted in this connection. If the proposed movement upon Mexico collapses and the troops he returned to their posts, congress will want to know the reason why they were assembled.

If President Taft believes that the Democrats in the present congress are going to pass the reciprocity bill to carry out the Canadian agreement and then go home and wait for the regular session of congress in December before they do anything, he is very much mistaken.

Dreadnoughts Showing Marked Advance

ONE of the last acts of the last congress was to make provisions for two of the most powerful fighting machines in the United States navy. The limit of cost and time of completion of the dreadnought Florida was extended and additional funds were voted for the new New York and the Texas, the keel of which will be laid in a few months. Each vessel will cost $6,400,000 and 5,000 skilled workmen will be employed in the New York navy yard for the next three years in the work of construction.

The dreadnought type is one of very recent date. Through her alliance with Japan Great Britain was the first to learn the lesson of the all-big-gun ship, and immediately set about solidifying it in steel. Some of our own progressive navy officers had earlier read the lesson in the war with Spain and plans of the U. S. S. Possible and the U. S. S. Possible had been drawn and laid upon-hold. Then when the British Dreadnought went overboard and the type which she embodied was revealed, there was a hurried dusting off of the pigeon-holed plan and a clamor for appropriations wherewith to build the ships.

The main battery of the new ships will consist of ten 14-inch guns, while the secondary battery will have over a score of fire-inch weapons. The guns of the secondary battery are intended for repelling torpedo attack. These guns have a range of five miles and an extreme rapidity of fire, each being capable of firing 16 shells a minute. With 13 available for a broadside that would mean a rain of 180 shells a minute, which could be concentrated on any attacking flotilla.

Only one-tenth of the population of this country is of unmixed descent.

IN THE PUBLIC EYE

ARMY COMMANDER RETIRES

"I have fought much and long; now I shall retire to private life and live in the glory of the past. But I shall always feel the deepest interest in the army, and my heart will be with it."

A veteran of two wars and many Indian skirmishes, a man of the strong, vital traits that have made heroes in life and literature, war-scarred, weather-beaten, Brig. Gen. Charles L. Hodges has ended his service in the United States army. Gen. Hodges, who succeeded Gen. Frederick Dent Grant as commander of the department of the lakes, enlisted as a private in 1861, and reluctantly forsakes—the old soldier leaves his post only because he must.

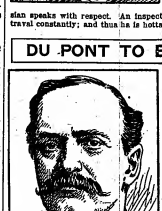
"I'm just a plain soldier man," he said, modestly, when asked to tell of exploits of his career. "I have fought in battles, many of them, but all soldiers do that."

The veteran stroked his grey mustache, smiled good humoredly, and his visitors thought of him in his younger years as the picturesque type of soldier described by Kipling as a "fust-chase fightin' man".

"I shall retire to private life and live

IS ONLY LIVING EX-SPEAKER

General Keifer to the hardships of victory and the blessings of defeat in civil as well as in military strife. The Spanish war found him an infantry action, and he was next heard of leading the victorious Americans into the captured Cuban capital.



One of the notable events at the opening of the Sixty-first congress was the retirement from active political life of one of the country's best known statesmen, Gen. Joseph Warren Keifer of Ohio, whose political career has extended throughout many years. General Keifer holds the unique position today of being the only living ex-speaker of the house of representatives. He held this important place in the Forty-seventh congress, and since the death of John G. Carlisle this honor has been his alone.

General Keifer took part in the very first skirmishes of the Civil war, and when General Lee laid down his arms at Appomattox the commander of the One Hundred and Fourth Ohio volunteer infantry was there to witness that memorable event.

Eight years in congress, during the latar '70's and '80's, served to inure

After 20 years' absence General Keifer returned to the scenes of his civil triumphs and defeats, and now, at the age of seventy-five, this one surviving major general of the Civil war resigns his chair in the house of representatives to his Democratic successor.

CZAR'S COUSIN IS POPULAR

The most popular member of the Romanoff family of Russia is the Grand Duke Constantine Constantinovitch, cousin of the czar, who besides holding the important post of inspector of military schools of the empire, is a playwright, an actor and a poet. Better perhaps than all of these, he is a man of good morals and exalted ideals.

The grand duke has translated Shakespeare into Russian, has written several plays and acted them and has published some valuable critical studies of the Russian poets. It is as a poet that he is best known. One of his works has gone through ten editions and his plays are sung in every peasant cabin. Two of his songs are rendered at every Russian concert and many have been set to music.

Apart from his merits as a poet, the grand duke is an attractive personality. He is about the only living Romenoff of whom the average Russian speaks with respect. An inspector of military schools, he is obliged to travel constantly; and thus he is better known then the czar's other relatives.

DU PONT TO BUILD HIGHWAY

Gen. T. Coleman Du Pont is going to build at his own expense the first link in the great highway from New York to Washington. A boulevard is an unusual form for a wealthy man's public gifts to take. Delaware is the state which has been made the beneficiary of such a gift. Gen. Du Pont has offered to give to that state a highway, running from end to end of the commonwealth, a distance of 103 miles. It is to be 150 feet wide and will cost from $1,000,000 to $2,000,000.

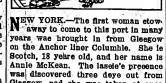
In his offer of the highway Con. Du Pont stipulated that he would retain the sides of the road and requested public utilities franchises upon them. This feature of his offer came in for much criticism and led Mr. Du Pont to modify it considerably. He now offers to build the road, retain the sections on the side, but turn them over free of charge to any concern which will obligate itself to build an electric railway line or other public utility upon it. He says his object is to make the road a monument to the Du Pont family and also to improve the state by assuring a method of getting trolley lines and other improvements down the peninsula.

TALES OF GOTHAM AND OTHER CITIES

Teacher Has Never Whipped a Pupil

SPRINGFIELD, MO.—Nearly 90 years old, with 48 years of teaching to her credit, Mrs. Mary S. Boyd, the pioneer school teacher of the Ozarks is still engaged in instilling into the minds of youth the first elements of learning in one of Springfield's public schools.

"If there is one thing in the American public school of which I disapprove," Mrs. Boyd tells her friends, "it is corporal punishment.

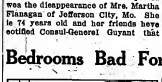


"I remember very distinctly how, when a young girl going to school in a log cabin schoolhouse, I sat in my seat, frozen with terror, whenever the schoolmaster chastised an unruly pupil. Even when I was nearly grown, the sight of a pupil being punished made me feel sick and faint. How greatly I feared the slender birch switch, a whole bundle of which stood in the schoolroom.

"I began teaching school in Springfield in 1862, before the terrible war had begun. I have trained probably four generations from that time to this—and have seen from a teacher's standpoint, all their little traits and peculiarities. Boys and girls of today do not get the physical punishment that was administered to their parents and grandparents. And I sincerely believe the modern child can be managed better without it. My views on this subject are firm, and never in all of my experience have I ever chastised one of my pupils."

Mrs. Boyd's control over her schoolers wee clearly demonstrated at the burning of the Mary S. Boyd Public school building, named in her honor, a few weeks ago. Soon after the fire was discovered she marshalled her pupils who, at her command, marched from the building in an orderly manner, leaving books and wraps behind. Had it not been for the masterly handling there would undoubtedly have been a great loss of life among the four hundred or more children in the building.

As Mrs. Boyd converses, her eyes sparkle like those of a 16-year-old girl, and looking into their depths one would never imagine themselves looking at one whose hair hes long since turned grey. Her face, though slightly furrowed, is marked with wrinkles caused by smiles, and is still fresh and rosy.



Scotch Lassie Sails as a Stowaway

NEW YORK.—The first woman stowaway to come to this port in many years was brought in from Glasgow on the Anchor liner Columbia. She is Scotch, 13 years old, and her name is Annie McKeon. The leader's presence was discovered three deye out from Glasgow, and she was taken at once before Captain Wadsworth.

She was not oven a wee bit afraid, and told her story with the unconcern of a professional stowaway. The first question asked by the skipper was why she had boarded the Columbia without a ticket. That was easily explained. She tossed it off in a sentence. She had no intention of sailing for America.

Mexico City a Port of Missing Men

MEXICO CITY.—Mexico is becoming known in the United States as a port of missing men and a considerable part of the official correspondence of the American consulate here is answering inquiries about men who have wandered from homes in the states and are supposed to be in this revolution-ridden land.

Within a year over two hundred cases of missing Americans supposed to be in Mexico have been reported to the consul-general.

Among the recent cases reported was the disappearance of Mrs. Martha Flanagan of Jefferson City, Mo. She is 74 years old and her friends have notified Consul-General Guyant that she came to Mexico several months ago and disappeared.

The most peculiar disappearance case on record here is that of a young business man from Illinois who accidentally learned the location of a mine while touring this country. Leaving his trunk at a hotel and without saying a word to any of his companions, he slipped away to the mountains and found the mine. He remained there and went through a siege of mountain fever which left him apparently not much the worse except a peculiar lapse of memory about his former life in Illinois. He prospered in mining operations and remained in the mountains for a couple of years, being given up for dead in the meantime by his friends.

It became necessary for him to go to the city where he had left his trunk. When he walked into the hotel he was recognized by attaches, and narration of the story cleared his mind. He wired at once to his family that he was all right.

Bedrooms Bad Form in Kansas City

KANSAS CITY, MO.—The style of the domestic architecture in Kansas City has changed entirely in the past year or two, say architects, on account of the prevalent habit of sleeping out of doors. It is a veritable return to the open-air life that is animating the people. Sleeping out of doors is not a fad in this city; it is a custom as firmly intrenched as eating breakfast, although not yet so common.

The desire for open air does not stop with sleeping. There are families in Kansas City that throughout the summer live in the open air—eating, sleeping and visiting. Whether at work or play, everything is done out of doors. Such a family lives at 3534 Campbell street, the Swifts. J. G. Swift, a former president of the Livestock Exchange, four years ago began to sleep on his porch. At the time he built only a makeshift over his rear porch, where he could place a cot. But as he began to feel better upon awaking in the morning after a restful night, he resolved to live more in the open air.

An open-air dining room was added to the ground floor and the sleeping room was made permanent. Mrs. Swift said:

"When Mr. Swift began to sleep in the open air four years ago he was the only one in this block who ventured the fad. He liked it so well that our neighbors took up the idea and now of the 10 houses in the block only three are without sleeping porches. Many have sun parlors in addition."

In addition to the sleeping porch most of the houses under construction in Kansas City have a sun parlor. It is usually built off the first floor, with windows to enclose it on three sides during the winter. In the warm weather the glass is removed and screens substituted.

SELF-DENIALS IN EDUCATION.

Speaking of the driveling life a youth must undergo these days and the many influences that war with clean life, clean thoughts and fine aspirations, Cornelia A. P. Connor, in "A Letter to the Rising Generation," in the Atlantic, says: "I don't approve," your fathers and mothers say anxiously, "but I hate to keep Tom and Mary at home when all the other children are allowed to go." These parents are conscientious and energetic in looking after Tom's teeth and eyes, and Mary's hair, tonsils and nasal passage, but seem utterly unconscious that mental rickets and curvature of the soul are far more deforming than crooked teeth and tonsils. If these children were protected from a vicious environment and educated into habits of a pure, clean, sensible life, there would need be much less anxiety concerning crooked teeth and nasal passages, says the Ohio State Journal. What education needs is make itself worth while is a conflict with the vulgarizing influences outside the home and the schoolroom. Life has become a hard problem for the children. They are surrounded by a cloud of pleasures and fascinations that lead them away from virtue, culture and serious thought. It may not make them vicious and criminal, but it does tend to make them stupid, inane and frivolous. This is certainly evident to every observing parent and schoolkeeper.

The terrible infantile paralysis continues to be a puzzle to the medical fraternity. It is a malady that appeared years ago, but not until lately has it assumed epidemic proportions. The disease is an affection of the spinal cord, though it involves the heart, liver, kidneys and lymphoid tissues. Efforts have been made to discover the germ of the disease, but it seems to be so small as to escape detection, says the Ohio State Journal. It is possible, that some time this winter the bacillus will turn up, since great investigations are going on in the laboratories. The devastations of this malady seem to have decreased during the cold weather, but there are apprehensions that early in the spring the fatalities will reappear. It is hoped by then the germ will be found out and an antitoxin devised for its demolition. While this disease is prone to attack children, adults, too, are subject to it. It is said about 20 per cent. of the cases die.

Relief from the exactions of fashion is aimed at through a petition which has been prosecuted to the North Carolina senate, asking for legislation that will establish permanent and economical styles of clothing, in order that farmers and others with large families shall be relieved from the hardship of trying to keep up with prevailing modes. No doubt the object sought is a worthy one. But who is to be the "arbiter elegantiarum," such as the ancient Romans had, to set the pace in "what to wear?" And what assurance is there that the wife and children of even the poorest of poor men would be satisfied with any design on which the arbitration bond should decide? Statesmen in North Carolina and elsewhere who attempt to "monkey" with the fashions are quite likely to find such action a good deal like dallying with dynamite.

A six-cylinder optimist is one who pretends to like all his wife's relatives.

The matter of reclamation of waste lands is becoming of as much interest abroad as in our own country. Germany feels the need of acquiring all the tillable soil possible, and the matter has been up before the German Agricultural Congress at Berlin where Emperor William made an address on the subject. From statistics presented it was shown that there are hundreds of square miles of moorland which may be made available for grazing purposes, and His Imperial Majesty urged effective action along that line. Conservation of resources is of worldwide moment.

FIRE RUINS CAPITOL

MAGNIFICENT STRUCTURE AT ALBANY, N. Y., COSTING $27,000,000 SWEPT BY BLAZE.

PRICELESS RECORDS BURNED

Conflagration Believed to Have Resulted From Defective Electric Light Pushbutton—Valuable Documents and State Papers Lost.

Albany, N. Y.—Flames Wednesday ruined a large portion of the $27,000,000 state capitol here.

State Architect Ware estimates the loss at from $6,000,000 to $7,000,000, excisive of valuable historical papers which cannot be replaced. There is no insurance on the building or its contents.

Flames raged in the costly structure for four hours, destroying practically all the west wing, and were declared to be under control. Later they broke out again in the southwest angle of the building and threatened to complete the work of destruction. In two hours, however, the fire was subdued.

It was reported that several mss were missing, but all have been accounted for except Samuel Abbott of Syracuse, night watchman in the state library, who is believed to have been burned to death.

Several firemen were knocked unconscious by falling debris in fighting the second outbreak of flames, and were taken to a hospital.

The governor summoned Architect Ware, Police Chief Hyatt and Fire Chief Bridgeford into conference as to the safety of the capitol. Mr. Dix feared it had been so badly damaged that all parts were unsafe. The conference refused an opinion on the matter until a thorough examination had been made.

Firemen considered the senate and assembly chambers practically intact, with the exception of slight fire and water damage, but Mr. Ware advised against their use until they had been tested. The building was placed under martial law.

On the third floor, where the flames gained their start, the departments wholly or partly destroyed by fire or seriously damaged by water were:

State library, containing 600,000 volumes, among them the most valuable genealogical works in the United States, together with relics and priceless documents, some of them dating back to 1776 and irreplacenbin.

Assembly and senate libraries, stored with thousands of volumes of law and code books; also a number of documents and manuscripts that can never be replaced.

Both houses met at the city hall in a recession to a call by Governor Dix. It is expected that the legislators will take up a rigid investigation of a report that an electric pushbutton was reported out of commission by a watchman Tuesday and not repaired during the day. This button is held responsible for the conflagration.

141 PERISH IN FIRE

SCORES DIE BY JUMPING FROM BURNING FACTORY.

Fire Marshal's Inquiry Reveals Fact Workmen Was Locked in Trap—86 Victims Are Identified.

New York.—Of the 141 employees, mostly girls and women killed in a fire in Triangle Shirtwaist factory at the corner of Greene street and Washington place Saturday, 86 have been identified.

Seventy of the bodies were those of girls and young women, the remaining sixteen those of men. There are 12 injured in the hospitals. Scores of others more or less seriously hurt were taken to their homes.

The building was occupied by a number of factories, and at least 1,500 persons were at work when the fire started.

The victims were either burned to death or were crushed into lifeless forms on the pavements when they leaped to escape the swift rush of fire which quickly enveloped the building.

Not since the burning of the excursion steamer General Slocum, on North Brother's island in 1904, when 1,020 persons perished, has the city been so excited by a fire horror.

Many perished in the flames on upper floors, remaining afraid to leap until the fire surrounded them.

A great crowd gathered around the scene of the fire. Factories in the neighborhood were soon emptied of their employes.

Some of the revelations brought out by Fire Marshal Beers in his public inquiry into the causes of the fire show that the poor girls in that panic rush to escape from the flames found traps at every turn.

It seemed that the very arrangement of the workroom was a trap, with 700 women jammed back to back at their machines. When the panic started, the narrow aisles became blocked with chairs and the girls were in confusion before they even started for the doors. Then there was a scarcity of exits, the inward opening doors and the death trap "fire escapes."

"The fire, without any question, started from a cigarette or a match thrown into a pile of lawn clippings—light cotton stuff," said Marshal Beers.

DECLARES LAW VOID

BUCKET SHOPS WIN OVER GOVERNMENT BY DECISION OF JUSTICE WHITE.

GOVERNMENT IS TO APPEAL

Has Severe Setback in Campaign Which Began With Raids in Seven Large Cities—Just Says Act Violates Right of Contract.

Washington.—"Bucket-shopping" is a lawful occupation, according to a decision handed down by Justice Wright in the district supreme court, and as a result the widespread movement by the department of justice to end the practice in nearly half a score of cities threatens to come to naught. Justice Wright based his decision on the ground that the amendment to the code defining "bucketing" is unconstitutional because it deprives citizens of the liberty of contract guaranteed them by the constitution.

The decision was rendered in the case of Edward Altenus of Jersey City and Louie A. and Angelo Cella of St. Louis, who operated a so-called bucket shop under the title of the Standard Stock and Grain company. With 26 others they were indicted and, while six of them pleaded guilty and were fined in sums aggregating $6,100, the remainder decided to fight.

Movements of the government leading to the indictments were shrouded in the greatest secrecy. On April 12, 1910, however, when indictments were obtained, raids on "cheps" in seven cities were made simultaneously, wires were cut and customers were thrown into panic. Since then, according to Attorney General Wickersham, "bucket-shopping" has become a thing of the past east of Denver.

The government announced its intention to appeal from Justice Wright's decision. The attorney general, when informed of the finding, declared he would carry the question to the Supreme court of the United States, if necessary, for he is anxious to have the matter determined in order that the department may proceed with further prosecutions along the same line if the law is upheld.

In the meantime the law officers of the government will watch carefully the progress of an appeal of other of the indicted "bucket-shoppers" pending in the district court of the district court. This appeal is not taken on constitutional grounds, but raises technical objections.

CONFESSES HE SLEW GIRL

Frank E. Heidemann Collapses as He Pleads Guilty to Murder of Little Marie Smith.

Asbury Park, N. J.—Frank E. Heidemann pleaded guilty to the murder of Marie Smith, the ten-year-old Asbury Park school girl Thursday, when arraigned before Supreme Court Justice Willard P. Voorhees in the county courthouse at Freehold.

Heidemann, who was arrested on the Atlantic City express at Red Bank on March 16 while endeavoring to escape to Honduras, was brought to the grand jury following the reading of a signed confession made to the detectives who arrested him.

In his confession Heidemann told of luring the little girl to the woods near Deal Lake on November 9 last. He said he killed the child on the spot with a heavy club and left her there.

With the prevailing rapidity of Jersey justice, Heidemann was led into court three days after the indictment of the bankers, but they have suggested was found. His face was white and drawn and his hands shook as he entered a plea of guilty to murder. He was a picture of despair.

When the indictment was read Heidemann collapsed. His plea was announced in a voice so faint as to be almost inaudible. When he uttered the word "guilty" he sobbed audibly and clutched at a table for support.

SMILES ON WAY TO GALLOWS

Slayer of Woman at Pottsville, Pa., Places Noose on His Neck—Execution Witnessed by 1,500.

Pottsville, Pa.—A remarkable display of nerve was made in the county jail here Thursday by Joseph Christock, who was hanged for the murder of Mrs. Ann Richards last fall.

Declining the proffered assistance of Deputy Sheriff Kline, the slayer of Mrs. Richards walked smilingly from his cell in the foot of the gallows and ran lightly up the steps.

It was a public hanging and before him stood 1,500 persons, to whom he waved his hand. Then he rounded up, grasped the noose and placed it around his neck, put his arms by his side to be pinioned and unflinchingly said: "Good-by, all." The nervy man held his head in position for the adjustment of the black cap and in another moment the trap was sprung. He was dead in a 12 minutes.

HINES' STORY DENIED

DECLARED IN WASHINGTON TAFT NOT LORIMER AID.

President Wrote Letter Last November Saying There Was No Truth in the Statement.

Washington.—A flat denial was made of the report from Springfield, Ill., that the president had joined with Senator Aldrich in urging the election of William Lorimer to the United States senate.

Edward Hines, the millionaire lumberman of Chicago, testified at the Lorimer hearing that Senator Aldrich had told him President Taft was anxious to have Lorimer elected.

Last November there was a similar report. Then President Taft wrote a letter to a personal friend who had made inquiries that there was absolutely no truth in the statement. A paragraph of that letter says:

"I have seen certain reports or statements that I consciously limit any weight of the administration to the election of Lorimer are wholly untrue."

President Taft himself would not answer the Hines statement. He believes the one denial is enough.

Following the Hines charge came the statement that the Lorimer case will be reopened soon after congress convenes next Tuesday. That action will be heed on the developments in the Lorimer hearing now in progress in Springfield. It is expected that much evidence will be developed which might be of use in reopening the case here.

RAILROAD MAN GOES INSANE

Dickinson MacAllister, Becomes Crazed, Battles With Friends and Officers and Attempts Suicide.

Pittsburg, Pa.—Dickinson MacAllister of Harrisburg, Pa., went mad on a Pullman car on Pennsylvania train No. 10.

The man was taken from the lavatory where he had locked himself in and had smashed the windows ready to jump out.

MacAllister, who is said to be a high official with the Chicago Terminal Railway company, left Chicago for his home in Harrisburg. He was accompanied by two friends, J. M. Jackson and John Gray of Chicago, and occupied a drawing room aboard the train. Somewhere between Conway and Dennison, O., MacAllister grew violently insane and kicked out the lights in the drawing room having the compartment in darkness.

He made a rush for the windows in the car, and before he could be prevented, he is said to have smashed out two of them. When he companions attempted to calm him, MacAllister took refuge in the lavatory where he barred the door. Here he remained, and all the efforts of the Pullman conductor and the men's two friends failed to dislodge him.

BANKERS LIKE ALDRICH PLAN

Currency Bill is Acceptable, But Minor Changes in Phraseology Are Recommended.

Washington.—After a conference of two days with the currency commission of the American Bankers' Association, the monetary commission adjourned to meet at the call of Chairman Aldrich.

The conference has been devoted to a careful analysis of the Aldrich currency bill. In the main the provisions of the plan outlined by Mr. Aldrich have been found to be acceptable to the bankers, but they have suggested minor changes in phraseology in other portions of the measure, and considerable attention has been given to a few of the features of the bill.

The plans of the commission embrace an active campaign for the summer, with the view of having the measure completed by the beginning of the first regular session of the Sixty-second congress, on the first Monday of next December.

Somewhat Satirical.

A whist enthusiast wrote and published a book on the game and sent a copy to a famous player for his opinion of it. In about a week the book was returned to him, with the following letter:

"My Dear Sir—Your favor of the 10th instant, accompanied by your book, was duly received. I have read it very carefully. It seems to be a very good game, but I don't think it is as good as whist!"

HONOR J. A. TAWNEY

PRAISES OF EX-CONGRESSMAN ARE SOUNDED AT BANQUET IN WINONA.

AFFAIR ENTIRELY NON PARTISAN

Legislator's Right to Compromise, Tawney's Main Theme—Modern Theory of Representative's Duty Lowering.

Winona.—The citizens of Winona Wednesday paid a glowing tribute to James A. Tawney, ex-congressman and for 18 years representative of the First congressional district in the national house of congress. There was no political significance in the banquet held in his honor at the Masonic Temple and the banqueters were composed of many men who have played prominent parts in past campaigns as supporters and opponents and in the low-fest political lines were blended and wiped away as "Our Jim" was lauded and complimented upon completing almost a score of remarkable years as a statesman, during which period he attained one of the most important positions in the national government—that of chairman of the house appropriations committee, the "watchdog" of the national treasury.

It was fitting that L. L. Brown, lawyer, former Democratic mayor and once defeated by Mr. Tawney in the contest for congressman, should have acted as toastmaster at the function. During the evening toasts were responded to. During the evening toasts were read as follows: Frank L. Eddy of Minneapolis; J. J. Esch of La Crosse; J. Adam Bede of Minnesota; Thomas D. Whipple, veteran Democratic editor of Winona, who for years has penned his political doctrine in opposition to Mr. Tawney as a candidate. The toasts all lauded the ex-congressman as a man of great enterprise and sterling personality.

The final toast of the evening was that of Mr. Tawney, who spoke at considerable length, the principal theme of his talk being a defense of the legislator's right to compromise where he thought it would accomplish greater good than holding out for a fixed idea. He said to that the "uplift" magazines had changed the public view and that the modern theory of the representative duty was lowering.

DITCHES INCOMPLETE.

Special Legislative Engineer Inspects Drainage Work in Aitkin County.

Aitkin. — Nine miles of Drainage Ditch No. 66, located about in the center of Aitkin county, was inspected by C. B. Stewart, the legislative drainage engineer retained by the legislative committee which is investigating charges made against State Drainage Engineer George Ralph.

The ditches examined comprise about half of Drainage System No. 66 and include the lower end of the main ditch, and lateral ditches 7 and 8. Mr. Stewart, who is accompanied by E. V. Willard, assistant state drainage engineer, as guide, would give out no information regarding his findings, all of which will be first presented to the investigating committee.

The charge made in testimony in the hearing against Contractors Foley and Gleeson, on the part of which the work was that in many places the ditch was not deep enough or wide enough. It was pointed out, also, apparent to the casual observer that further work is necessary before the ditch is brought to a proper grade. This is notably true at the junction of the main ditch and lateral 8.

Much material, whether deposited by the water, left there by the dredges or which caved in from the sides, remains to be removed. When asked in regard to this material both Gleason of the contracting firm and Willard explained the ditches are incomplete, and assert that a light gasoline-operated dredge is now being assembled to clear out these obstructed passages.

NEW ULM DEFENDER DEAD.

John Tobarac, Minnesota Pioneer, Helped Fight Indians in 1862.

New Ulm.—John C. Toberer, one of the first settlers of New Ulm, died at his home in this city. He suffered a paralytic stroke which hastened the end.

Mr. Toberer came to New Ulm in 1856 and conducted a jewelry store here continuously for a score in point of time of his last illness. He was one of the defenders of the city during the Indian massacres in 1862 and was one of the two surviving charter members of the New Ulm Turnverein. He leaves a wife and two daughters.

SNAGBOAT READY FOR WORK.

Government Vessel Will Leave Winter Quarters at Keokuk April 1.

Winona.—The United States snagboat is to leave its winter quarters at Keokuk about April 1 and start on its first trip of the season up the river. The Tipton will this year be in charge of Captain F. B. Martin, with Captain F. M. Ruby as pilot. The business of the boat is to remove snags uncovered in the river channel and adjust buoys. It generally makes two trips a season to St. Paul.

CO-OPERATIVE STORE FOR "U."

Students and Faculty May Take Over University Book Business.

Minneapolis.—After three or four years of agitation the University of Minnesota is to have a co-operative book and stationery store. The faculty and students may be the stockholders.

H. W. Wilson, proprietor of the book store near the university, has offered to sell the book and stationery departments, and the offer is now under consideration of the faculty and student body. It is said preferred stock, expected to pay a stipulated amount of interest, about 6 or 7 per cent, will be reserved for members of the faculty.

Librarian Gerould suggested it would be better for the faculty not to contribute, but that students be made stockholders.

"Such an arrangement should be remunerative to stockholders and still effect a great saving to the student body as a whole," said President Northrop. "The thought that the faculty is freeing the sale of books on the students must be guarded against. With efficient management it should be a good venture for all concerned."

STEEL TRUST RIVAL PLANNED.

Former Heads to Merge Interests and Fight Corporation.

Duluth.—A stir was created in financial and business circles in Duluth when it was rumored that a giant merger of steel, iron ore and shipping companies was to be perfected to compete with the United States Steel corporation, with prominent Duluth men and others in it. It is said that former heads of the steel corporation, including Thos. F. Cole, formerly president of the Oliver Iron Mining Company, would merge their interests and fight the older corporation, just as soon as the supreme court renders its decision in the American Tobacco and the Standard Oil cases.

According to report, the G. A. Tomlinson line of ore freighters will be the keke transportation at end of the business. Mr. Tomlinson was asked about the proposed merger, but he had no comment to make. Ztc. Cole is out of the city.

Negotiations were opened some time ago, according to the report, with owners of extensive iron ore properties near the head of the lakes but the man seid to be behind the merger.

SEEK ORE NEAR BRAINERD.

Many Drills Prospecting for Iron on the New Range.

Brainerd.—J. Huddleston, of Ospizce, was in the city and said that five drills owned by John Whiteside, of Duluth, were drilling for iron ore on the Ven Horn property about three miles south of the farm. The scene of this drilling is but seven miles north of Brainerd.

Thomas Keating, of Deerwood, has shipped a drill from his Crosby properties to Ironton. C. W. Potts, of Superior, Wis., has been drilling for the Juin Lakes Iron Company, in the seventy-ona acrnn leased from Congden & Sherrig, in secon 15, township 46, rango 29. Ha has also had a drill working for M. Weum, of Moorhead, and J. A. Bede, of Minneapolis and one Duluth, in lot 3 and the northwest quarter of the southwest quarter of section 3, township 46, range 28.

WATER FOR WHITE EARTH.

New Agency Well Will Supply Indians and Village This Spring.

White Earth.—The Indian Office has granted the request of the Indians in the matter of piping water from the new agency well to furnish the people of the village with a supply of pure water. It is feared that the work of establishing a reservoir, digging trenches and laying water mains will be commenced as soon as the frost is out of the ground.

KASOTA STONE APPROVED

Washington, D. C., Engineer Inspects the Minnesota Quarries.

Kasota.—Kasota stone of marble will probably be used hereafter in the construction of government buildings at Washington, D. C. A day or so ago Mr. Lyna, representing Architect Woods, superintendent of the capitol buildings and grounds at Washington; J. A. Brown, contracting engineer for the government; Mr. Serrill, a photographer, also of Washington, and Charles L. Hilgartner, president of the Hilgartner Marble Company, of Beltimore, Md., were in Kasota, inspecting the quarries and the Kasota yellow marble with a view to determining its adaptability for use in the interior decorations of the house of representatives. After completing their inspection the party, accompanied by C. W. Selcock, went to Madison, Wis., to look at the Knoxin yellow marble used in the state capitol there. They seemed much pleased with the stone and the character of the work done in polishing it.

DEATH OF MINNESOTA PIONEER.

Joseph Schaaf, 83, Came to North Star State in "Fifties."

Joseph Schaef, o veterun of the Civil war and a resident of Minnesota since the early fifties, died at St. Alexander's hospital, New Ulm, at the advanced age of 83. He is survived by n widow, who was with him at the time of death, and eight children, three sons and five daughters—Joseph, Jr., and Vel, Murdock, Minn.; John, Rockford, Wash.; Mrs. William Emerson, Seattle, Wash.; Mrs. Michael Frank, Delano, Minn.; Mrs. E. T. Dunn and Mrs. John Weber, Murdock, Minn., and Mrs. Lyle Bushart, St. Paul.

Mr. Schaaf was for many years a farmer, residing near Victoria. In St. Paul he was engaged in the fuel business, but retired several years ago. He was a member of Battery B, First Minnesota heavy artillery, and was mustered out with his company in 1864. He was a member of the German-American Veterans' Association.

MUCH CORN EXPECTED.

Expert Predicts Record Breaking Acreage This Season.

Minneapolis.—Minnesota's corn acreage promises to be the largest ever planted and it is probable that the corn production of the state will reach new high figures, in the judgment of D. E. Willard, development agent of the Northern Pacific. This expectation is based upon observation made on the trip of the good farming train over that line. Not only is diversified farming increasing, and not only are the farmers raising more stock, but it is becoming more evident every year, said Mr. Willard, that Minnesota is an ideal corn state over its greater portion.

"Diversity of work in farming and the raising of livestock," said Mr. Willard, "as the managers of Minneapolis and other cities of the state have advocated for years, is having its beneficial effect upon the state."

BIG BARGE FOR HOSPITAL.

Mayo Brothers of Rochester May Install Floating Sanatorium.

Lake City.—Negotiations are in progress for the sale of the big barge built by the Lake City Boat Factory to the Doctors Mayo of Rochester. This barge which is the largest one of its kind ever constructed on the upper river was built for the defunct Minneapolis River Amusement company and was left on the hands of the local company at the time of the Amusement company's failure.

It is reported that the Mayos will convert the barge into a floating hospital and sanatorium to be used in connection with the steamer Rutledge which they recently purchased. The barge is a triple decker and could be made to accommodate several hundred patients. It has recently been inspected by the government inspectors and pronounced safe.

POTATO SPECIAL STARTS.

Northern Minnesota To Be Told How To Raise Tubers.

Duluth. — Duluth's potato special left for a ten days' tour of Northern Minnesota. The special train consisted of four coaches and two baggage cars. It will swing around the range, stopping at every town and siding. Institutes for farmers will be held on the train, and they will be instructed on the proper methods of growing potatoes and the best potatoes to grow.

A. B. Hostetter, agriculturist expert of the Duluth Commercial club, is in charge of the train, and the expense is being borne by the Commercial Club and the range roads. Interest in the train has been aroused in the train among the farmers, and big crowds are expected to visit it.

Liquor Question is Issue.

Albert Lea.—The blennial city election will be held here Tuesday, April 4, and the candidates are all in the field. For mayor there are four candidates: A. A. West; Socialist; V. Gulbrandson, anti-saloon; C. L. Swanson and L. O. Green, the latter a candidate for re-election. There are several amendments to the charter to be voted upon, one of which provides for the recall for city officers, which is likely to be adopted. The anti-saloon forces are planning a series of meetings to stir up their friends.

Minnesota Legislature

Proceedings at the Minnesota State Capitol for the Past Week.

St. Paul, March 29.—G. F. Doyle of St. Paul told the house drainage investigating committee that George A. Ralph, state drainage engineer, attempted to cancel ditch contracts with him and to give them to the Standard Dredging company, of which D. A. Stuart, his attorney, is part owner. Mr. Doyle is a ditch contractor and was called to tell what he knew about the contract for ditch No. 61 in Polk county, which wee taken away from him.

The committee held an executive meeting to confer with Examiner O'Hearn of the public examiner's office who has just returned from northern Minnesota where he investigated the 20k county records relative to the indictment of Mr. Ralph some years ago. At that time the state drainage engineer was indicted for alleged irregularities in the construction of a judicial ditch, but the cases was later dropped. An attempt was made to inject evidence relative to this ditch in the present investigation, but Attorney Stewart objected on the ground that it had already been disproved of by the grand jury. C. H. Werner of Alta Vista declared that the case was dismissed on a technicality. Mr. O'Hearn recently investigated the records in Polk county to ascertain whether or not there was sufficient reason for an indictment.

B. A. Stuert heeded off an attempt to pry into the Wawina Lend company. The special committee of the house investigating the state drainage engineer, O. S. Doyle was on the stand when Attorney General Clifford Knapp asked him who wee benefited by the construction of the ditch through the Wawina land which he objected and was sustained.

Mr. Knapp sustained the objection. A. W. Rieck, a former ditch inspector, was brought prominantly into the investigation when four letters of his to Mr. Doyle were read. They hinted directly of some understanding between the inspector and Doyle, and spoke of confidential matters. Mr. Doyle said he did not know what the confidential matters were. In one letter Rieck wrote, "there is something doing with the bunch." There is no explanation of what constituted "the bunch."

The spirit of economy is permeating the house committee on rules. Plans are under way to save the state $100 a day by releasing a dozen clerks. Committees and sergeants whose services they believe the lower branch of the legislature can forego for the rest of the session. Two clerks of the reapportionment committee who have been drawing $10 a day since the beginning of the session and who heve had nothing to do since the reapportionment bill was reported out six weeks ago will be among the unfortunate ones. A stenographer for the committee at $5 a day and also a draftsman at $10 a day will come under the ax.

W. B. McEwen, former lobor commissioner, defended before the senate finance committee a bill approving to him $150 for expenses on an Europeen trip with the Minnesota Workmen's Compensation commission. He said that, aside from the code now before the legislature with his name attached, the state of Minnesota was benefited by the ideas of safety device he had brought back, many of which were already adopted by employers here.

Senator Moonan's recoll bill passed the senate committee on rules. The bill was declared for in the platforms of both the Democratic and Republican parties. It was introduced in the senate by Senator Moonan, a Democrat, and by Representative Rosenberg, Kneeland, e Republican. The Moonen bill that passed the senate, will probably be substituted in the house for the Kneeland bill, which is now on general orders.

St. Paul, March 30.—The women's suffrage bill was laid to rest in the senate by a vote of 22 to 36.

Senator Segeng made the only speech of the day. No one seconded him. No one argued against him. Without a word of explanation, 22 senators cast their ballots against allowing the people to decide on woman suffrage. But the vote contained one dramatic incident. Senator Moonan voted "no" with Glotzbuch and McGrath still to vote. It takes 32 votes to pass a bill.

Senator McGrath was surrounded by suffragists. "Ladies," he said, "I don't believe in woman suffrage." Then told Miss McFadden so since the session started. But if Glotzbuch votes "no" I'll say you will pass the bill and you can have it."

Senator Segeng, in his speech, quoted from the records of Lincoln, Blaine, Roosevelt and McKinley, and the arguments and words of such women as Clara A. Berton of the Red Cross; Julia Ward Howe, author of the Battle Hymn of the Republic, and Miss Jane Addams of Hull House, to show the justice of the women's demand for votes.

The roll call wes as follows: eyes, Bedford, Benson, Boyle, Cashmen, Chesnik, C. P. Cook, Dale, Donegre, Duxbury, Elwell, Froehsug, Gunderson, Honeon, Hayeraft, C. D. Johnson, V. L. Johnson, Lemke, Monsen, Nelson, Odell, Olson, Peterson, Putnam, Rustad, Segesg, Saugsted, Scheller, Sundberg, Theo, Wilson. Total—30.

Noyes, Ahmann, Anderson, Carpenter, Clegun, Coller, L. O. Cooke, Dobbins, Dunn, Dunn, Dwinnell, Fossem, Gloisbech, Gunn, Heckney, Hendlen, Johnston, Klein, L'Hereult, McGrath, Merdes, Murray, Pauly, Poehler, Pugh, Rockne, J. D. Sullivan, G. H. Sullivan, Swanson, Van Hoven, Wallace, Weis, Worke. Total—32.

The Day in the House.

Knute Knutesen's bill providing a board of conciliation to settle labor disputes wes killed in the house. The measure wee e copy of the Canedian law.

The house defeated the Kerry-Conley bill forbidding lumber companies to offer lumber for sale which is not up to grade. It would require the six-inch boards be six inches in width instead of 5¾ inches.

The report of the special committee appointed to investigate the handling of livestock at the Northern Pacific railway wee submitted to the house. It finds that livestock cers have been held up at the Minnesota transfer for five hours, causing the cattle to lose weight, thereby reducing the price received by the farmers. The committee recommended legislation which would compel the railroad companies to forward stock cers to the markets.

The house by a unanimous vote decided to pay to his widow the legislative salery of the late W. A. Fisher, former member of the legislature. The bill was introduced by F. L. Palmer. The appropriation is $750.

That the speaker of the house of representatives should be elected at general elections by the people at large and not selected from among their own number by the members of the house was the substance of a bill for a constitutional amendment introduced.

L. C. Spooner's bill providing for a vote on a constitutional amendment raising the rate of gross earnings tax on railroads from four to five per cent, was defeated in the house by a vote of 88 to 26.

St. Paul, March 31.—The state of Minnesota will turn itself into a vast employes' insurance company if a constitutional amendment by Senator Putnam, recommended for passage by the judiciary committee of the senate, is adopted. The amendment provides that employers and employes shall be taxed a specific amount of the insurance paid and received.

By a vote of 31 to 27 the house passed the Minette-Schwerts bill placing Minneapolis and Minneapolis under the supervision and regulation of the state tax commission. Mutual rural companies and companies doing only a city business are excepted.

The house passed the Poresery committee bill reorganizing the state forestery department to bring about greater efficiency in the prevention of forest fires. As introduced the bill provided that the forestry board as it stood in 1909 be reinstated instead of $5,000 a year the clerk of the forestry board a selary of $1,800 instead of $2,400.

The bill as it now stands provides for o state forestry board made up of the dean of the state agricultural college, the director of the state forestry school, three members to be appointed on the recommendation of the board of regents of the state university, and four members to be suggested by the state agricultural society, horticultural society, state forestry association and the state game and fish commission. The state forester must be an expert in forestry. The bill allows a corps of assistants to patrol the forest regions during the dry seasons of the year.

The secete, on a committee of the whole, recommended for passage the bill introduced at the request of the game and fish commissioner, requiring the governor and commissioner to take out license to fish with hook and line when they come here in the summer. After a heated discussion the house refused to require payment of a $1 fee for license.

The senate after sitting as a committee of the whole, recommended for passage, the measure giving negroes the right to be served in ice creem and soda water parlors and prescribing penalties for proprietors who discriminate against them.

$20,000 FINES FOR ART FRAUD.

Duveen Brothers Plead Guilty and Judge Martin Assesses Maximum.

New York, N. Y.—Louis J. Duveen and Joseph Duveen, members of the art importing firm of Duveen Brothers, pleaded guilty to charges of conspiracy to defraud the federal government by making under-valuations of imports. Judge Martin, of the United States circuit court, fined the importers $10,000 each, the maximum fine which was paid.

WON'T PARDON BANKERS.

President Will Follow Recommendation of the Attorney-General.

Washington, D. C.—From sources close to the president it was learned that the pardon appeals of the two convicted bankers, Charles W. Morse, of New York, and John R. Walsh, of Chicago, undoubtedly will be denied. It is stated that the attorney general's recommendation in both cases is adverse and that the president will follow his findings.

SPINSTER LOSES HER TEETH

Go Astray in Mails and Lady Puts It Up to the Postmaster General.

A Jersey spinster intrusted her false teeth to the mails, and they went astray. Postmaster General Hitchcock received the following appeal from her:

"Dear Sir—I suppose you have received a note from the Camden postmaster that the upper plates of my teeth have been lost in the mails. They were mailed at Camden on December 1. I should like very much to hear from you. If you are unfortunate enough to have false teeth, you know how inconvenient it is to have to do without them, and I have not had them over a year. I paid $35 for them, and I cannot afford to get any more just now. So will you kindly write me if you can for me, and as quickly as possible?

"P. S.—They were very good teeth."

The postmaster general put one of the best inspectors in the service on the job to find the missing ivories.

Molasantz's Comparison.

"Then take John D. Rockefeller as a genial as well as a skillful airman," said a Chicago editor.

"I remember well a visit he once made me, with drawings of an aeroplane of his own invention under his arms. He looked with pride upon the machine—it certainly had a heavy, awkward look. But he said with a wave:

"'Oh, don't judge even an aeroplane by its outside. What if the man who discovered it hadn't stopped to pry open the shell?'"

COFFEE HEART

Very Plain in Some People.

A great many people go on suffering from annoying ailments for a long time before they can get their own consent to give up the indulgence from which their trouble arises.

A gentleman in Brooklyn describes his experience, as follows:

"I became satisfied some months ago that I owed my palpitation of the heart from which I suffered almost daily, to the use of coffee, (I had been a coffee drinker for 20 years) but I found it very hard to give up the beverage.

"One day I ran across a very sensible and straightforward presentation of the claims of Postum, and as was impressed by them that I concluded to give it a trial.

"My experience with it was unsatisfactory till I learned how it ought to be prepared—by thorough boiling for not less than 15 or 20 minutes. After I learned that lesson there was no trouble.

"Postum proved to be a most palatable and satisfactory drink to me, and I have used it ever since.

"The effect on my health hes been most salutary. The heart palpitation from which I used to suffer so much, perhaps every other day, has disappeared and I never have a return of it except when I dine or lunch away from home and then the old kind of coffee becomes Postum is not served. I find that Postum cheers and invigorates while it produces no harmful stimulation." Name given by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich.

"Ten days' trial proven an eye opener to many.

THE SUNBEAM.

BY W. G. HUNT.

Published every Friday, at Sunbeam, Pennington County, Minnesota.

Subscription price $1.00 per year in advance. If not paid in advance $1.50

Entered as Second-class matter August 30 1906, at the post office at Sunbeam Minn. under the Act of Congress of March 3, 1879

The legislature gave the 61st, District some grass seed so they could continue to keep green.

The bill to prohibit the sale of "malt" is likely to become a law. This will compell the brewerys to give their "blind pig" stock a new name, which will be less expensive than to try to stop the passage of the law.

The legislature must adjourn on April 19th,. It will go down into history as the legislature that made lots of smoke and very little fire. About all the good laws will be left to sleep in the pigeon holes at St.Paul.

There is no better location for a good Doctor and a drug store in northern Minnesota than at Highlanding. He would have a well settled territory on every side of him and no other Doctor nearer than Thief River Falls, a distance of 25 miles Any letter of inquiry addressed to this office will receive prompt attention.

The talk of state division and and a special session of the legislature will soon be sleeping in the same bunk. We can't see what the newspapers in the 61st district are kicking about, as they wanted county option, and they got just the men they was told to represent them: Good honest county optionists. We told you what you would get last September, and you have got it and you can take your medicine.

Trudging For the Wash.

The Portuguese country people as a usual thing have great physical endurance, doubtless as a result of the "survival of the fittest" for many generations. The laundry workers are an example of this. People come to them long distances to get soiled clothes of their customers. The clothes will be placed in big bundles on the family donkey, and the peasants will start back late in the afternoon. Some of them will travel all night, and it will be sunup before they reach their homes, many miles from Lisbon or Oporto. A day or two later they are trudging back to deliver the clothes, now spotlessly clean, and to get another lot from the same patron. Many a countryman and his wife take a jaunt of fifteen miles or more, which makes one think that there might be many who could rival the feats of Weston and O'Leary as walkers if they tried.—Christian Herald.

An Early "Trust."

As an example of trusts and monopolies prevalent even in that early day it may be mentioned that in 1750 one Benjamin Crabb obtained the exclusive right to make sperm candles in Massachusetts for fourteen years. A year later, however, a factory was started in Providence, R. I., and with its the deeds there were eight factories in New England, and one in Philadelphia. Their output greatly reduced the price of candles, which not long before sold for 5 shillings a pound to those days $1.22 was worth fully three times as much as it is now.—N Hudson Moore in Designer.

The Sixteenth Century Critic.

"But why, prithee," contended the first critic, "should this new play, wright, Shirpey, have introduced a comic eavesdropping scene into his tragedy, perdie?"

"'Tis easy of solution, by ben," answered the second critic. "Our author hath put in eavesdropperre for the purpose of unsettling a plot! Boy, a cup of sack!"

Wit was crude in them days.—Cleveland Leader.

Placing the Blame.

Little Eva—Mamma, didn't you say that if my nice dolly got broke somebody would have to be punished?

Mamma—Yes, dear. Little Eva—Well, she broke her arm today. Spank her please.—Exchange.

Interested.

"What did the rhinoceros do when you fired at him?" asked the eager listener.

"He stood still and watched me reload."—Washington Star.

To Subscribers.

The fact that the postoffice department will not permit weekly papers to circulate in the mails at pound rates when subscriptions are more than one year in arrears is an old story. But it may be news to some that this order is being rigidly enforced and all publishers must cut off all delinquent subscribers. THE SUNBEAM, as well as nearly all publishers, regret the situation, but there is no way of evading it and we ask every subscriber to kindly put his account in shape so as to satisfy the postal department. We would sincerely regret cutting off any subscriber, and if it is not convenient for any one to pay cash we will gladly accept a note for the amount payable next fall, and credit your subscription so as to comply with the rules. We hope that everyone will realize our position and help us out.

HOT DRINKS.

If Taken Above 130 Degrees They Injure the Stomach.

Many people without realizing it are in the habit of drinking tea at much too high a temperature. Sir Henry Thompson points out in the book on "Diet in Relation to Age and Activity."

"Few persons are aware that they habitually swallow hot liquids, tea especially, at a temperature which if applied to the hands or feet would inflict painful scalds. Most tea drinkers take it about 140 to 145 degrees F., which the mouth bears very well if slowly sipped, while the cup itself is too hot to be held by any hand.

"But the habit of swallowing such tea is injurious to the stomach, and it ought not to be taken above 130 degrees at most. Again, water at 120 degrees, which feels a little more than lukewarm in the mouth, causes severe pain if the hand be dipped in it and cannot be endured."

He has, however, some good words to say for the early morning tea.

"This morning tea in my case should be taken at least an hour and a half before the first meal of the day. For many years I have been accustomed to write for an hour every morning before I get tea, or to lodge at this moment, and at no time do I find the brain clearer for work, while the appetite for solid food is excellent when the hour for breakfast arrives."+

Crossed by the Corpse.

Most of Walthamstow is too modern to have many stories about it but the Walthamstow strip of Leyton preserves the memory of a curious old tale. Surely a hundred yards beyond this strip of land, belonging to Walthamstow parish, run right across Leyton from the inn to Snaresbrook, paralleled with the southern border of Walthamstow. How came Leyton to be crossed by this alien strip? Leyton, it was said, had once refused to bury a body found in the lane; Walthamstow once favored to do it. And in such cases it was the rule that the volunteering parish might take from the other as much land right through to the other side as the men who carried the corpse could cover walking in the land in head arms extended. The benevolent result worried both parishioners until the growth of population made new parishes necessary.—London Chronicle.

Wasted on Him.

"Occasionally," remarked the visiting Londoner, "I see in some American paper a supposititious colloquy referring to an aeroplane line to Mars. Do you suppose that strikes me as being exceedingly funny. Evidently the writer is ignorant of the fact that our atmosphere does not extend upward more than fifty or a hundred miles and becomes more and more tenuous as it nears the limit. He does not seem to know that the air is absolutely necessary in flying an aeroplane. It is highly probable that no aviator ever will ascend to a higher elevation than ten or fifteen miles even if he can endure the excessive cold he will encounter at that altitude. The idea of sailing an aeroplane through the higher ether is decidedly absurd."—Chicago Tribune.

Joy For Johnny.

Johnny's mother was telling Johnny stories from Bible history. And Johnny for a long time was very silent. At last he sighed and looked up questioningly into his mother's face.

"When I get to heaven shall I know every one?" he asked.

"Yes, indeed," answered his mother. "Napoleon, and Samuel, and George Washington, and Solomon, and—and David?" persisted Johnny.

"Certainly, dear!"

"Well, then, mother, if I'm very good—if I'm ever so good and ask him ever so nicely, do you think that David will let me touch his slingshot—just touch it—once?"—Philadelphia Times

UNITED STATES COURT OF CLAIMS

The Publishers of Webster's International Dictionary allege that "in a further purpose (or thinking) throughout 20 ... and in every part of the work" they sustained in many parts, with the utmost confidence it to meet the largest and severest requirements of modern practical use."

We are of the opinion that this allegation must, on the evidence submitted, be sustained. The work that has been accomplished and the claims made for it are fully set forth in the affidavits now filed in the case. The defendant, as stated in every detail, has been successful in every way in admirably adapting it to meet the largest and severest requirements of a generation which demands more of practical philological knowledge than any generation which has preceded it.

The plaintiffs are entitled to recover according to the Statutory in our judicial work as an aid to the highest authority in accuracy of definition; and that in the future as in the past it will be the source of constant reference.

His Worried the Judge.

A story was recently told of the elder Judge Peckham, father of the supreme court justice. In the early days of dentistry a tooth drug was put into the cavity to fill the space where a tooth ought to be. This plug had to be gently pounded into its desired position. The old judge was somewhat addicted to strong language, and when the dentist began his work he fairly indulged in some classic comment. As the tapping of the plug continued he threw all dignity to the four winds of heaven, and his language became decidedly "more forcible than elegant." When, however, he arose from the chair after what seemed to him an interminable period of agony he pulled out all the stops in his vocabulary for a grand climax. The impression on his listener seems to have been deep and lasting. As the judge passed out the dentist grimly remarked to a waiting patient:

"Wasn't it beautiful? It wasn't really necessary to pound half so long, but I did so enjoy his reflection that I thought pounded the hickory plug into splinters. Wonderful command of language the judge has!"—Case and Comment.

"Three Sheets in the Wind."

What was the origin of the phrase for drunkenness, 'three sheets in the wind?'" a landsman asked a sailor the other day.

"Well," said the sailor, "I'll explain that matter to you. The two lower corners of a ship's sail are held taut by two ropes, one called a tack and another called a sheet. The tack is always kept very tight, but the sheet is loosened according to the wind, that the looser the sheet is the more freely the sail swings. If the sail is quite free its sheet is said to be 'in the wind.' Now, suppose that all three of a ship's sails were quite free. They would then fly about very crazily, and the ship would wabble. The course of the ship would be a zigzag one, and the reason for this would be that she had 'three sheets in the wind.' That, I guess, is why a man when he signals in his course is said to be 'three sheets in the wind' also."

The Tea Chewers.

"Chewing tea comes from Siam," said a traveler. "They call it miang. It is in a plug, like chewing tobacco, and it has a villainous smell. The smell is due to the fermentation it has undergone. The tea that the Siamese smudge for chewing purposes is a very coarse, rank plant. It is gathered like ordinary tea, but the leaves after being compressed into plugs are buried for fifteen days. They ferment during burial. On their resurrection they are very, very fragrant indeed. The Siamese bestmen chew tea. The rickshaw men chew it. The litterateurs chew it. They say it makes them work better. This is probably the truth, for I chewed a plug myself in Anam, and it excited me strangely. But the aftermath was bad—a headache, smarting eyes, and nervous depression."—Washington Post.

Strange Storehouses.

In the old birds' nests that are placed near the ground in shrubs and small trees close to basebant bushes and blackberry vines one will often find a handful of hazelnuts or bittersweet berries. They were put there by the white footed mice and the meadow mice, which visit these storehouses regularly. Very often a white footed mouse will enter a bird's nest with fine dried grass and inner bark and make a nest for itself.—New York Tribune.

HOME OF FALCONRY.

The Kirghis Hunt Wolves and Foxes With Great Golden Eagles.

All wanderers are lovers of the chase, but for sheer love of sport and daring exploits the Kirghis take the palm. Central Asia is the home of falconry, which was not introduced into Europe until the crusaders brought back falcons with them from their eastern wanderings. But imagine the audacities of the men who fly their birds at wolves and foxes instead of at quails and partridges! Not content with hunting game birds with small falcons, the Kirghis captures and trains the great golden eagles, with which they hunt such game as gazelles, foxes and even wolves.

A well mounted Kirghis falconer, carrying on his wrist one of these magnificent birds, is a fine sight. The weight of the eagle is such that the owner requires a support for his wrist, and the hunters are usually to be seen with a little wooden bracket that supports the arm against the hip. The eagles are hooded, as all falcons are, but can be used only in winter, when they are hungry and keen. In summer they are fed on marmots and live a restful life, sitting in the sun in front of the tent doors.

When gazelles or wolves are the objects of the chase the eagles are aided by long, sleek greyhounds of a small breed, the dogs running in and pulling down the quarry when the eagles have sufficiently bewildered it.—Wide World Magazine.

Confidence in the Mails.

Having sent a strong box key by mail in an unregistered letter, a clerk was told by his employer that the key "arrived O. K.," but that the means of transportation adopted showed too much confidence. In answer the clerk said, "Ever since a New Year's eve incident of two years' standing my confidence in the postoffice is great." And pressed for an explanation he said: "That evening, or early in the morning rather, a man came out of a restaurant rather the worse for celebrating. He had a wallet in his pocket containing considerable money and was uncertain as to the honesty of his companions. He went to a letter box, forced the wallet through the slot and continued to make a night of it. It required considerable red tape to recover his property, but he got it."—New York Tribune.

Tipping and Treating.

There are two practices in this country that are being justly condemned. One is tipping and the other treating. To be sure, we are not responsible for originating either. Away back in the days of Queen Elizabeth every coffee house had a box bearing the inscription, "To Insure Promptness;" hence T. I. P. Neither is treating an undivision. Some of the Cæsars, or says history, used to get lushy when their guests could not see the bottom of the glass often enough. But both have got such a hold on Americans that they have come to be recognized as national habits, and the latter sometimes as a national evil.—Indianapolis News.

A Willing Witness.

"Did his actions have an air of vertisimilitude?" the lawyer asked the witness.

"What was that, sir?"

"I say, did his conduct wear an air of verisimilitude?"

"Oh," replied the witness. "Sure! He was verosimitudin' all round the place."—Saturday Evening Post.

WASHING FURNITURE.

Easy to Restore Tarnished Pieces to Original Freshness.

"Very few people know that furniture ought to be washed," said a cabinet man in the furniture section of a large department store; "but," he continued, "it is like best thing one can do to keep furniture looking as well as it should. One should take a bucket of tepid rainwater and make a suds with a good pure soap. Then with a soft piece of cheesecloth all the woodwork should be washed. It is astonishing how much dirt will come off. A second piece of cheesecloth should be wrung dry out of hot water. On this should be poured a tablespoon of first class furniture polish. The heat will spread the polish through the cloth. Next the furniture should be gone over with the second cloth. There will be no need of putting on more polish, for that much will be all one needs. Too many persons make the mistake of using too much polish and leaving it thick on the furniture, where it looks dusky and where it gathers more dirt."

There is furniture in homes today that is cast off because of its appearance when it might be brought back to its original freshness by this simple process of washing. Many persons do not know that a fine bit of mahogany is improved by constant washing, and hundreds of pieces have never been more than dusted in years. A square of cheesecloth for the washing and another for the polishing will do the work, and the result will well repay the effort.—Indianapolis News.

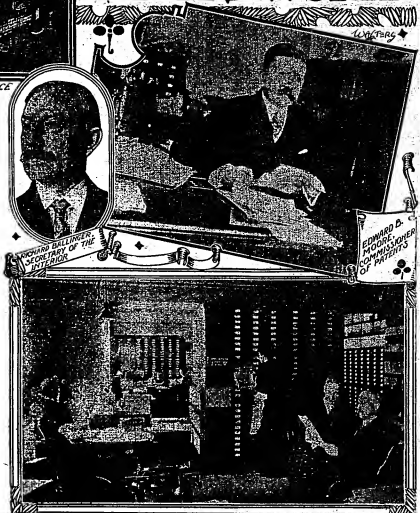
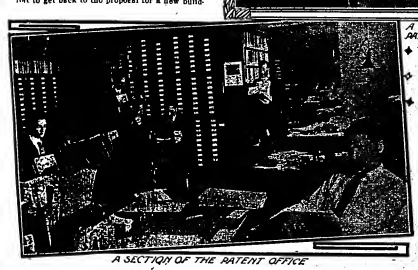
UNCLE SAM'S PATENT OFFICE AND ITS WORK





MAIN ENTRANCE TO THE U.S PATENT OFFICE

CONGRESS is just now being urged to provide for the erection of a new building for the use of the United States patent office, and this plea for better facilities for taking care of the business of the inventors of the country has brought out some interesting facts in connection with this unique branch of our national government. And, it may be added, for all that the people of the republic take a keen interest in invention no business the greatest inventive nation on the globe, very few of our citizens have any intimate knowledge of the machinery which the federal government maintains for examining inventions and granting patents.

This comparative ignorance of the facilities and methods of the government institution that devotes itself to invention extends even to a majority of inventors themselves—the hundreds of thousands of men and women who are either engaged in inventive work today or have, at some time in the past, exercised their nimble brains in an effort to devise something that would be an improvement upon the existing state of things. That even interested parties are thus in the dark is due to the fact that the patent business of the country is largely in the hands of attorneys—special lawyers who devote themselves exclusively to this line of practice. Nine men out of ten who evolve an invention and desire to have it patented soon come to realize that the operation is an intricate one, requiring special knowledge, and so they turn the work over to some one of these go-betweens and have nothing more to do with the matter until they get the coveted parchment a year or two years hence and pay the bill, which may be $75 or $100, if circumstances warrant, for you know getting a patent is not exactly a cheap operation.

But to get back to the proposal for a new building for the patent office. This institution has for many years past occupied a portion of the building of the department of the interior at Washington and since the volume of inventions pouring in to be considered as candidates for patents has steadily increased year by year it has naturally followed that the present quarters are hopelessly inadequate. In order to make room the authorities a few years ago arranged to get rid of the thousands of original models of old inventions which had accumulated in the days when it was necessary to send a working model as well as drawings with an application for a patent. But this was by no means a complete solution for the problems. The patent office must needs file and keep on permanent record the papers in every patent case, and these have been piling up at such a rate in recent years that it is a grave problem how and where to store them in such fashion that they can readily be brought to light when needed for reference—as in the case of the lawsuits that are always growing out of patents on inventions.

A SECTION OF THE PATENT OFFICE

A TYPICAL DIVISION HEADQUARTERS IN THE PATENT OFFICE

However, there are other branches of our national government that need new buildings just as much as does the patent office, and this brings us to the novel argument that is being advanced in behalf of the patent office being granted a new home in advance of all others. It is being pointed out to congress that the patent office is one government institution, and almost the only one, that is self-sustaining. For other activities Uncle Sam has to go down in his pocket, or rather the people do through the medium of taxes. In maintaining the patent office, however, the inventors and they alone "pay the freight." What is more, not only is this bureau for inventors self-supporting, but it actually returns a profit, or in other words, it has on hand a surplus at the end of each year after all expenses have been paid. This net surplus has been piling up in the United States treasury until it now amounts to about $7,000,000, and it is this money, or such part of it as may be necessary, that it is desired to have expended for a new building for the patent office.

As is well known, we Americans are the greatest nation of inventors in the world. About a million United States patents have been granted, whereas the aggregate number of foreign patents granted by all foreign countries combined has amounted to data to only about two million patents. The favor of invention in the United States has waned temporarily in "panic year," and it slumped at one time during the Civil war, but otherwise there has been a steady increase in the number of patents issued, and from 35,000 to 40,000 new patents are now issued each year. In proportion to population, more patents are issued to citizens of Connecticut than to residents of any other state, thus holding up the long-established reputation of the "Connecticut Yankees." Next comes the District of Columbia and then California, Washington, Nevada, Colorado and other western states.

The present commissioner of patents, Mr. Edward B. Moore, is one of the ablest administrators who has ever been at the head of this branch of the government. It has been his aim and ambition to expedite in every manner possible the examinations of all applications for patents presented—thereby enabling the quick issuance of patents whose novelty if not validity can be made guaranteed by the government. This will do away with the criticisms of the patent office for its "slowness" in passing upon patents, and it will also do away with a large amount of the litigation which now devolves upon inventors by being drawn into suits for infringements, etc. In line with these improved methods there is now in progress a "classification" of all the material in the patent office. This means the systematic classification of all the material through which the patent office's expert examiners have to search when they are passing upon the applications of inventors. When this vast accummulation of data is arranged for ready reference it will enable the issuing of patents more quickly after applications are received than has ever heretofore been possible and, more important yet, it will give to every patent issued a greater guarantee of validity than is possible now when such a document is issued following what may eventually be proved to have been an incomplete "search," in which the examiner inadvertantly overlooked or failed to find an earlier patent on a similar invention.

The work of the patent office is carried on through the medium of some half hundred different divisions, each devoted to some one class of inventions, such as carriage and wagons, or firearms, or harvesters, or typewriters. At the head of each of these divisions is a principal examiner who is a specialist in his particular field, and he is assisted by one or more experts who have made a life study of the particular section of the inventive field to which they are assigned. Many of these men have been in their present positions for twenty or thirty years and have at their finger tips everything connected with the history and development of invention in their respective spheres, and yet Uncle Sam gets the services of these experienced authorities for salaries that in most cases do not exceed $1,800 to $2,000 per year.

In each division there is a force of clerical workers who file the drawings which must be presented with every patent application in lieu of the small working models which were once required. These clerical workers also have to stamp the date and hour of the receipt of every patent application, and this little detail often becomes a matter of the greatest importance when two or more men discover the same invention at about the same time. Indeed, in the case of certain of our most valuable inventions, such as the telephone, more than one man hit on the idea simultaneously, but the wenith that lay in wait for the lucky inventor went to the man who won in the race to the patent office. It is because of this keen rivalry that inventors all over the country are welcoming the present movement to issue patents more quickly. In days gone by inventors have in some instances had to "mark time" for years before they could get their patents, and this not only did an injustice to the inventor and to the workmen who might have been employed meanwhile in manufacturing the new product, but it also deprived the public at large of the benefit of new discoveries designed to benefit it in one way or another.

In an average year there are upward of twice as many applications for patents an are granted. Some of the things upon which patents are sought are not patentable, and in many instances it is a case of "another fellow found it first." The patent office has had many really pathetic stories of men in isolated localities who have devoted years of hard work to working out some invention—ignorant all the while that some other person had gone over the same ground, worked out the invention and secured a patent, perhaps many years before. The number of men doing this work well ahead of the number of patents that expire, the latter totaling in the ordinary year not more than two-thirds as many as there are new patents issued. One hundred to two hundred patents are also refused each year.

Each applicant for a patent must pay to the government a fixed fee of $25, but if his application is made through an attorney—as is the case in most instances as above explained—the total expense are an inventor secures his coveted protection on his brain-child is likely to be at least double the amount of the fee. It is sometimes said that our American patent system is not so effective as it that in vogue in Germany, but certain it is that Uncle Sam's patent machinery has been the indirect means of returning greater wealth to inventors then has been attained by the patrons of any foreign patent establishment. Incidently it may be noted that there is a disposition on the part of all the leading nations of the world to get together on patent matters and to work in harmony with the inventors of patents. Indeed, in late years, one of the most important duties of the United States commissioner of patents has been that represented by negotiations in connection with international treaties on this subject, and seldom a year goes by that he does not visit one or more foreign countries in the effort to bring about a better understanding between nations on this score.

Mendelssohn in a Rage.

Mendelssohn in a rage was a fine sight; for then his eyes simply blazed out from under the long lashes. This was not rare with him. The orchestra at Dusseldorf was responsible for much of his irritation. He given a humorous description of their lack of time and tune: "Every allegro leaves off twice as fast as it began, and the oboe plays Enetural in C-minor, and they carry their fiddles under their coats when it rains, and when it is fine they do not carry them at all; and, if you once heard me conduct this orchestra, not even four horses could bring you there a second time."—Dole, "Famous Composers."

BETTER TEETH FEWER DENTIST'S BILLS

Your teeth decay because particles of food get into crevices between and around the teeth and create germs of decay. Ordinary tooth powders and washes are entirely inadequate to prevent it.

Try Pazfine Toilet Antiseptic, a delicious, harmless germicide. Just a little in a glass of water, and rinse the mouth and brush the teeth thoroughly. It will whiten the teeth, prevent and remove tartar, destroy all germs of decay and save you dentist's bills. Pazfine thoroughly cleanses, deodorizes and keeps pure and odorless false teeth and bridgework. Pazfine is far superior to liquid antiseptics and peroxide for all toilet and hygienic uses. At Druggists 25 and 50c, or sent postpaid upon receipt of price by The Paxton Toilet Co., Boston, Mass. Send for a free sample.

Tuberculosis in Japan.

Japan is not lagging behind in the fight against tuberculosis. The Japan Health association has over 200,000 local members, and carries on a campaign of lectures in the cities and towns of the country. Tuberculosis is increasing in Japan due chiefly, Prof. S. Kitesato of Tokyo says, to the rapid development of the factory system of industry, the introduction of modern methods and manners of civilization and the increasing acuteness of the struggle for existence.

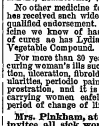
CHANGE IN WOMAN'S LIFE

Made Safe by Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

Graniteville, Vt.—"I was passing through the Change of Life and suffered from nervousness and other annoying symptoms, and I can truly say that Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound has proved worth mountains of gold to me, as it restored my health and strength. I never forget to tell my friends what Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound has done for me during this trying period. Complete restoration to health means so much to me that for the sake of other suffering women I am willing to make my trouble public so you may publish this letter."—Mrs. CHAS. BARCLAY, R.F.D., Graniteville, Vt.

No other medicine for woman's ills has received such wide-spread and unqualified endorsement. No other medicine we know of has such a record of cures as has Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.



For more than 30 years it has been curing woman's ills such as inflammation, ulceration, fibroid tumors, irregularities, periodic pains and nervous prostration, and it is unequalled for carrying women safely through the period of change of life.

Mrs. Pinkham, at Lynn, Mass., invites all sick women to write her for advice. Her advice is free, and always helpful.

A Typographical Error

By JANE LUDLUM LEE

"It's no use, Edna, the Lord never meant me to be very happy in this world. I'll have to take what I can get, so I be thankful."

Edna looked up with a bored expression. "Some people don't deserve even what they get."

The two girls were directly opposite types. Eleanor was tall, graceful, high strung, nervous, full of life and energy. Her most attractive features were her eyes, dark and deep set, with a longing, unsatisfied expression. Edna was a type much less interesting, cold, phlegmatic and clear-sighted; a much smaller woman, too, with colorless gray eyes.

On the bed lay flagerie of the most alluring kind, the sort of things that only women can appreciate. Fine lingerie of lacy stuffs were scattered about the room. Negligee so attractive that one might almost wish for an illness as an excuse to wear them. Surrounded by these pretty things that women love, sat Eleanor Godfrey, who tomorrow would be the bride of Tom Grant.

"There's one thing I can never regret," she said. "I told Tom everything before he took me. It was horribly frank, I admit, to tell your future husband that the best love of your life has been given to another."

"Poor boy," murmured Edna.

"Poor boy, indeed. Don't I have to live with him? Don't I have to see him every day? And is it nothing to me that I have to eke out so existence crushing down my sighs, forcing back my tears?"

Walking across the room to where Edna sat, she put her hands on a pair of very unsympathetic shoulders.

"How can you judge? You do not know the pain. Now listen. Every breath I breathe, every prayer I utter, every bent of my aching heart is for Jack Winston. I've loved him ever since I was a little girl, but you see I couldn't very well marry him because he never asked me. Then, too, Jack is so poor, and all my life I've been longing for things that Tom Grant's money will buy for me. I didn't deceive him. I said I couldn't love him, but he, still knowing this, wants to marry me and I accepted. Now judge me if you will."

Surrounded by the Pretty Things That Women Love.

Edna straightened up a bit and the lines about her mouth seemed to grow deeper in an instant.

"One question, please, before I render the verdict. You take upon your soul the wrecking of the life and existence. You will suck the honey from the flower of his life and leave him nothing but the stem. This is easier for you than being an 'old maid.' Then, too, supposing that Tom was in love with some other girl?"

"I plead guilty to the charge, judge, and accept the sentence of the court. Your logic is getting stale; so let's go to bed that I may get my beauty sleep and make a handsome bride. Think of it, dear girl, tomorrow at this hour my visiting cards will read 'Mrs. Thomas Kemp Grant.'"

The lights were put out and Eleanor was soon fast asleep, while Edna propped alone, as through her brain ran the words "I do not love him and he knows it." If she only knew.

The next morning was colorless, the air heavy; in fact, just the sort of day to make a bride look out of the window and wonder if she really were superstitious. It was about 9 o'clock and Tom was whistling in the street and singing the next. He walked into the bedroom where his friend and best man lay peacefully sleeping.

"Get up, you lazy vagabond. We can't keep the bride waiting, you know. That's her privilege."

The best man rubbed his eyes, growled a bit, and finally crawled out.

"Guess I'll take a shower," he said. "Need some sort of a bracer to put me through this ordeal. I wouldn't do this for every fellow I know, Liquor," he went on, "as a bracer is far superior to water in my personal and valuable opinion, but the maid of honor might object. Better take one or the other yourself, old chap. You're looking pretty ragged for a bridegroom."

Tom was practically ready. After working about an hour on it, he had managed to arrange his white put tie to his entire satisfaction. He had buttoned and unbuttoned his waistcoat until his thumbs were blistered. He had pulled it down in front and backed it at the back until the seams threatened to give way.

"I say, old man," he yelled at the bathroom door, "do you believe in presentiments?"

"Bet I do," screamed the best man. "Got one now."

"What's that?" shrieked Tom.

A shaggy head appeared at the door and until the suspends came this: "I've a presentiment that this is going to be a jolly cold proposition."

"What, my marriage?"

"What a conceited ass you are, Tom. I had reference to my shower."

The door closed just in time to receive a well-aimed boot.

By 11 the men were ready and on their way to the house. As they neared it, Tom became more and more nervous. There seemed to be a weight on his heart that he could not lift. At that moment the best man was booging out the cab window, cursing the driver for the snail-like pace they were pursuing.

"I say, Cabby, this is a wedding that we are going to, not a funeral. I'll give you an extra half dollar if you hurry."

"An extra half, is it? You talk like a politician. Well, sir, you might corrupt me, but this horse can't be bribed and waddle's or funerals, his gait is all the same. Rest easy while you can, sir—the lady will drive you fast enough once she gets the reins."

The best man was about to roll at the Irish as a nation, when Tom said: "If anything should happen—"

"Jumping Jupiter, Tom, brace up. You look as if you had curvature of the spine. Pull yourself together, will you? Any girl that had such a looking object as you on her calling list would be ostracized by good society and one who would marry you would be declared mentally incompetent."

"All right, I'll pull up, but I've a heavily idea that something is going wrong. Jack, old man, I can't do it. I'm in love with Edna Cross and not with Eleanor. I've just begun to realize it."

"You old poacher, then why did you ask Eleanor to marry you, when you knew that I have loved her all my life, and I have been trying to forget her for months? Night after night I went over and sat with Edna, trying to make myself think I was forgetting Eleanor."

"And every night," said Tom, "I went to see Eleanor because you were over at Edna's and I had no right to trespass on your preserves. A nice mess we've made of it. What are we going to do?"

"Do? Why, that's easy enough," assured Jack. "I am going to be the groom and you can just slide back into my boots as best men. We'll blame the whole thing on the printer. Trust me, old man. I said I'd see you through this ordeal, and I'm going to keep my word."

As the cab finally reached the house, the men stepped out and were ushered into the room where the minister was waiting for them. No word of explanation was uttered, and the men took their places by the minister, who was to pronounce them man and wife. The wedding march was played and as Eleanor in her gorgeous robes came forth to greet the man of her choice, Jack Winston stepped forth and offered her his arm. Eleanor was speechless, but too happy to resent, and before the gaping crowd the minister tied the knot that made them one "till death do them part."

Then Jack began his explanations: "Simplest thing in the world," he said. "You see, Tom ordered the invitations, and of course the printer took it for granted that it was his wedding—merely a typographical error, nothing more."

Eleanor's mother stepped in at this moment and with a haughty manner inquired:

"Then may I ask why Tom gave the bachelor dinner—why Tom bought the ring?"

"Yes, mother," said Jack, with a very propitiatory manner. "You see, I was broke at the time, and Tom, as you all know, is just loaded with money, so I gave him carte blanche to just go ahead as if it was his own wedding and I'd pay him back in good time. You see, I only came into my inheritance yesterday, and that would have been too late to order invitations, give dinners, etc. Anyway, how could you ever think that Tom was going to marry Eleanor. Why, he's engaged to marry Edna, and if you don't believe me, ask them for yourself. I tell you it was a typographical error, nothing more."

The color that suffused Edna's face, and the smile that glorified Jack's revised the statement, and the guests formed in a flutter of pleasurable excitement when, in the corner, Jack was shaking Tom by the hand and saying:

"Didn't I tell you I'd see you through it, old man?"

MANNER OF CUTTING STAKES

Trouble Avoided in Driving Bean Poles If Care Is Taken to Sharpen the Ax Properly.

When sharpening the ends of bean poles and other stakes to enable them to enter the ground easily it takes several blows with the hatchet to obtain the desired effect.

All this trouble may be entirely done away with if you take care to sharpen the ax properly, says the Scientific American. When sharpening an ordinary ax or hatchet you first put one side against the grindstone and then the other, thus making a bevel on both sides ea in Fig. 1. But, instead of doing this, allow one side of the hatchet to be nearly flat on the grindstone. Then lay the other side on the stone and put e bevel on it in the ordinary way. Now the hatchet has an edge like a wood cutting chisel (Fig. 2). When pointing stakes let the flat surface, which must be the left side when the edge is pointing away from you, be nearest the wood. Lift up the ax and with a slight pressure let it drop on the end of the wood stake. It will be found to enter quite easily instead of glancing off the wood as often happens with the ordinary hatchet, and the resulting cut will be straight, as shown in Fig. 4, instead of being curved as shown by the dotted lines in Fig. 3.

With the edge only half as many strokes and half as much energy need be used over a job and the work will possess the advantage of being far more neatly done.

GIVE SEED MUCH ATTENTION.

Importance Cannot Be Overestimated, as Quality Has Great Influence on Yield of Crop.

(By W. R. GILBERT.)

This is a subject which has received a great deal of attention from thoughtful persons but is still very little considered by the majority. Its importance cannot be overestimated for the quality of the seed has a great influence on the yield of the crop.

Every one likes to get bargains and many think that bargains and low priced articles are one and the same thing while in the matter of seed low prices and bargains seldom go together.

Take, for instance, turnips. When we see one man charging twice the price quoted by another of course the higher priced is usually the one with improved varieties, but we often find difference of price for one variety. One man may charge for a seed which only germinates 30 per cent, while another charges half as much again for a seed germinating 60 per cent, while another charges half as much again for seed germinating 95 per cent. From this a calculation can easily be made as to the amount of seed required, for it is the low germination that makes thick sowing a necessity.

The high-priced seed is economy, inasmuch as so many more seed germinate. When the farmer knows that germination is poor he tries to insure a crop by thick sowing, but there are times when he gets seeds of poor germination, without knowing it, and probably paying the full price for good seed.

The should be sufficient reason for testing seed. Considering the number of purchases of seed each year there are a ridiculously small number of tests made. I know of one instance where samples tested comprised all the various crops grown on the farm. In some crops the average of samples was reasonably good, but there were miserably poor samples in practically every crop.

Poles for Vining Plants.

Vining beans and all other vines should have pole or similar mechanical supports. Some plant corn or sunflowers for beans to vine on. This is the lazy gardener's method. Two thrifty plants cannot occupy the same soil space at the same time and thrive. Plant corn and sunflowers by themselves and beans by themselves, and give the beans good pole support if you wish to secure a big crop.

Mature Cabbage and Potatoes.

In few sections in the northern states is it possible to bring cabbage, potatoes, sweet corn or tomatoes to maturity in the open air by July 4, and tomatoes are likely to be considerably later.

ROMANCE OF COLD WEATHER

Man Saves Two Lives but Subsequent Ironing Is Much to His Disadvantage.

Two lovers were strolling along a canal bank on the outskirts of Perth the other day when the woman suddenly was from her companion and threw herself into the water. Though but a bad swimmer, her companion at once plunged in to rescue her, but he was unable to do so, and both were in peril of drowning. At this moment two policemen came along and seeing the struggling couple, bravely jumped in and succeeded in bringing both the man and the woman to the bank, where they were soon revived.

A cheering crowd assembled to congratulate the rescuer who, however, showed great reluctance to be lionized. He was quickly walking away when two policemen came on the scene and insisted that the name and address of so brave a man should be taken. Their surprise was great when they found that the gallant rescuer was a burglar for whom the police were anxiously searching. He was taken into custody and will be brought up for sentence. It is expected that the gallant rescue will lead to his dismissal, or at least to a reduction in any sentence that might otherwise have been passed on him for his sea heroic deeds.

SCALES ALL OVER HER BODY

"About three years ago I was affected by white scales on my knees and elbows. I consulted a doctor who treated me for ringworm. I saw no change and consulted a specialist and he claimed I had psoriasis. I continued treatments under him for about six months until I saw scales breaking out all over my body save my face. My scalp was affected, and my hair began to fall. I then changed doctors to no avail. I went to two hospitals and each wanted to make a study of the case and seemed unable to cure it or secure me of a cure. I tried several potent medicines and was finally advised by a friend who has used Cuticura on her children since their birth, to purchase the Cuticura Remedies. I purchased a cake of Soap, the Ointment and the Resolvent. After the first application the itching was relieved.

"I am still using the Soap and Ointment and now feel that none other is good enough for my skin. The scales have disappeared and I every-where feel better. My hands were so bad before using the Cuticura Remedies that I had to wear gloves all the time. Now my body and hands are looking fine." How He Averted a Duel.

The following is told of former Senator Joe Blackburn of Kentucky:

In the days of his youth the Kentuckian was asked by a friend to second him in a duel. He consented, and at once the parties came to the appointed place. Now, it was this Kentuckian's duty to say the last words touching the terms of the duel. But, although he faithfully performed this duty, the duel never took place.

A measure of "duty" not" invariably goes around whenever this story is told, whereupon the enewer is as follows:

"For a very simple reeeon. When Joe finished speaking it was too dark for a duel."—Harper's Magazine.

THE ROMANCE of the CENSUS

By PROF. BERNARD J. CIGRAND

COPYRIGHT, 1911, BY W.G. CHAPMAN.

THE future greatness of the Unlted States as a nation of world-wide power is a theme that has heen exploited hy many orators, poets and artists in daye gone by; but the followiag quite unknown liass from the quill of Philip Frsnsau—written prior to the Deglaration of Indspendence—merit especial notice now that a national ceneus is nearing completioa:

"I see, I seel
Freedom's establisbed reign, cities and men
Numerous as sands upon the ocean shors,
And empires risiag wbere the sun descendsi
The Ohio soon shall glide by many a town
Of notel and wbere ths Mississippi's stream
By forests shaded, now runs sweeping oa,
Natioas shall grow, and states aot lsss in fama
Than Greece and Rome of old."

This verse, composed before the nnion of tho 13 coloaies, was probahiy criticised hy the practical msn of the author's gensratioa as belog manufactured from the "stuff that dreams aro made of." But to Freaeau's inspired visioa ths chaagss he foretold wers clearly outlioed ia time's maglo mirror. If the poet were alive todsy and could read the marvelous ceosus figures which coms daily from our federal capitol he would fiad not only evsry word of bis propbecy fulfilled, but discover that dsstioy hsd added svea grester surprises to the predictioo.

Tho first natiooal ceasus was taksa during Washlogtoa's admioistrstion la 1790. Jeffsrson, theo secrotary of state aad uadsr whose directioo tho count wes made, expressed disappoiatmeot whoo ths final figurss—3,929,214—wsrs shown him. On August 24, 1791, he wrote to William Carmichasl as follows:

"I locloss you a copy of our ceasus, which so far ss it is writton ia black lok is fouaded on sctual rsturns; what is ia red lak belog coojectural hut very aesr tho truth. Making very small allowaocs for omissioos, which wo know to have heea very grsat, we msy ssfsly say we are sbova four millioos."

Thomas Jeffersoa personally assumed the responsibility of correcting ths first census, and with red iak mads iacreases in figures, as wsll as suppiylog such otber numbsra as bs deemsd correct. Hs then, ia bis official cepacity, ioformed the world through our foreign rspresentatives that tbs federal count was iacorrect, but with his additions and amendatioos could bs relled on.

Whea tho secoad decsnaial count was completed Jeffarson was president, and a latter written by bim ia 1801 cootalns the following assertions:

"You will perceive that the iacrease of numbers (popnlation) during the last ten years—1790-1800—proceeding in geometrical ratio, promisas rapid growth and the prospect it holds np to us, not with a view to the injuries it may enable us to do others ia some future day, but to ths settlement of the extensive country still ramaialag vacant."

This second census was intensely gratifylag to Jefferson and ha assamad the role of propbet again, but proved ovar-enthusiastic when be declared that the American population would coatiaue to increase at tha sama ratio. Sucb was not the case, nor is there any such definite thing as an exact ratio in population increase. In 1813 ha wrote to Humboldt:

"In fifty years more (1863) tha Unitsd States alone will contain fifty millions of inhabitaats."

Bat tbs population in 1863 was figured at 23,218,117, sbowiag that Jefferson's reliance on a definite ratio increase ied bim about 17,000,000 too high. In 1815 we find Jefferson writing as follows to Mr. Maury:

"Forty millioas in forty years, and in sixty years eigbty millionsl This would be 1815 plus 60, making it in 1875 as 80,000,000."

But at that date ths enumeration resulted ia 44,886,207, or about 36,000,000 bslow Jefferson's estimate. Jefferson was a careful student of natural increase in ths buman family, but his knowledge as to wbat death, marriage and immigration would do for a nation was meager. If that great statesman could not form a fair calculatioa, it is safe to say that it would be a bopeless job for anyone to indulga in predictions of what the population will be fifty years bance, nccording to geometric ratio. Abraham Lincoln was another chief executive who endeavored to solva the population puzzle. Like Jefferson, he attempted to indicata the exact figures, hat acquitted himself with more credit in the problem of human fluctuations. Lincoln at one time practically proposed an amendment to tba constitution of the United States, with a view to emancipating the slaves, and paying the southern owners a reasonable purchase price. He pointed out that after the slaves had passed into the possession of the federal government they could be liberated, and the dreadful civil strife thns ba brongbt to a close. In endeavoring to furtber this project Lincoln set out to foretell tha greatness in population of tha federal union at the ceasus periods of 1900-1910 (present ceasus), 1920 and 1930. The argumeat hs ssat to coagress in 1862 reed as follows:

"The aggregate sum necessary for compensated emancipation, of course, would bs larga. But it would require no ready casb, nor boads even, any faster than the emancipation progresses. This might not and probahly would not closa hsfors the end of ths 87 years; at that tima we sball probably bave a hundred millions to share the burden, instead of thirty-one millions as now. And not only so, but the increase of population may he expected to coatinue for a loag tima after that period as rapidly as before, because our territory will not hava becoma full."

He then proceeded to analyze the problem of popnlation increase, and decided that the population of the United States grows at tha decannial ratio of 34.60 per cent. He submitted the following tabla to verify his deductions:

	Population	Increase Per ct.
1790	3,929,827	.....
1800	5,306,937	35.02
1810	7,239,814	36.45
1820	9,638,131	33.13
1830	12,866,020	33.49
1840	17,069,453	32.67
1860	31,443,790	35.58

He then added: "It is seen that the ratio of increase at no one of these pariods ia either two per cent. below or two per cent above tha avaraga, thus sbowing how inflexible and consequantly how reliable tha law of increasa in onr case (conntry) is. Assnming that it will contiona, it gives the following resnlts:

	Population.
1880	56,967,216
1890	76,677,872
1900	103,208,415
1910	138,918,526
1920	186,984,335
1930	251,680,914

According to Lincoln the census of 1910 should nat 138,918,526 people, bnt, like Jaffarson, "Old Abe" was millions too high in his estimate. Tha latast census returns from Washington, subject to further correction, places the total at 91,972,266, which wonld show Lincoln's calculation to have oversbot the mark by 46,946,260.

However, it is only fair to remember that Lincoln's estimates were based on the possibility of the war coming to a sudden termination after the people had learned of his intentions regarding the slave purchase. Bnt the death struggla went forward relentiessly, and nothing was done townrd carrying out the life-saving and humane policy advocated by the great preaident. Therefore the abova decrease from his estimates mnst be allowed to bis credit, since hundreds of thousands of the male population were killed outright on the battiefields, and othara died later as a result of their wounds, or disease contracted throngb tha privations they suffered. It was the flower of yonth that was offered as sacrifice to the war-god by both north and sonth, and it is an interesting surmise as to what extent the contamination of the fraticidal strife decreased the population. A superficial estimats would easily make the loee et ten millioa, placiag the population of 1910 at 101,972,266—or about 38,000,000 less than Lincoln's nctual count.

The next and lest preeident to sbow definite iaterest in ths population problem wes Williem McKinley. His remarks on ths subject ara historical, since he was ths first of our chief executives to eetimate the equstioa of popalation on the basle of the meaning of the signature of the netion, or tbe great seal of the Unlted States. In 1899, just prior to the ceaeus of 1900, President McKiuley was the guest of Chicago. He wae called npon to respond to the toast, "The Greet Seal of the United States," and spoke in part, ae followe:

"On the reveraa side of tha great seal of the Unlted States authorized by congress Juns 20, 1782, and adopted as the eeal of the United State of America after its formation under the federal constitution, is a pyramid, signifying strength and duration."

Having described the meanings of the additional emblem, the preeideat continued:

"In peace we have been eignally blessed, and our progreee bas gono on unchecked and ever increasing in the intervening years. In boundlese wealth of eoil and mine and timber nature bas favored ns, while all racee of men of every nationality aud climata have contributed their good blood to make the nation whnt it is. From 3,920,214 in 1790, our population bea grown to npward of 62,000,000 in 1890, and our estimated population today made by the governora of the statea is 87,803,231.

"We have grown from 13 etates to 45. We have annexed every variety of territory, from the coral reefe and cocoanut grovee of Key West to the icy regions of northern Alaska."

Aftar dwelling on the immensity of the population and ita future destiny, he concluded:

"After 123 years the pyramid stands unbrokon. It has had some severe shocks, bnt it remains immovable. It hnd endured the storms of war, cnly to ba etrongar. It stands firmer and gives greetar promise of dnration than when the fathera made it the symbol of their faith."

Preeident McKinley was correct in stating that the foundera of our nation adopted the design of an unfinished pyramid, over which wns placed the eye of Providence, and beneath it the date 1776, with a later motto eetting forth the idea of a "new order of things." Bnt be omitted to mention that the reverse or pyramid side of the great seal was naver engraved, and never employed as a part of the signature of tha nation. Snch is the case, bowever, and therefore tho unfinished pyramid is an unknown factor in beraldio Americana.

The forefathera intended this device to mean that not any generation of Americane would sea the apex or crest of popnlation—that it would go on to eternity, and the cope-stonee of onr population's strength and republlican triumpha be placed by divine and not human hands. It was a grand symbolic concsption, but eagerness to possess a seal, and elowness in baving it executed, changed our national signature from a eeal enpendant to a eeal enplacard, thne robbing later generatione of a eplendid emblem of power and numerical greatness.

Nothing illustrates the magnificent march of weetern civilization better than the diecnssion in congress immediately following the census of 1830, and the said discussion also portrays the progress in transportation, as well as the western spread of population. At that date a Mr. Smyth of Virginia, while addrssslag the hoase of repreeeatatives regarding the advisability of lending aid to or ehowing interest in ths region west of the Stony mountains—ae the "Rockies" were then called—made the following eseertione:

"Thle federation of etatee can never be safely extended bsyond the Stony mountains. I can conceiva that mutual intereet in tha Mieeissippi valley msy, becauee of common rivsr facilities, help bind the peopls to the unioa; but beyoad the mountains—I can ees a fsw statee formed just weet end hordering on the Mieeissippi—but further west the federation eyetem muet not he attempted."

In the eenate Mr. Dickerson of Nsw Jersey also entered e vigorous proteet in theee words:

"The distance thet e member of congress from the etate of Oregon (all west of the Rocky mountaine was then known as Oregon) would bs obliged to travsl in coming to the eeat of government and rsturniag home would be 9,200 miles. If hs should travel at ths rate of thirty milee a dey it would require 306 deys; ellowiag for Sundays forty-four, and it would emount to 350 daye. This would allow the member a fortnight to reet himself at Washington before hs should commence hie journey home. It would be more expeditious, howsvsr, to come by weter eround Ceps Horn, or to pess through Behring straite round the north coaet of thie continent to Beffin's bey, thence through Davis' straits to the Atlantic, and so on to Washington. It is true that this pesseg is not yet discovered, except on our maps, hut it will hs, as soon as Orsgon becomes a stats."

The concludiag words of Mr. Dickerson's addreee wers, of course, epokea in sarcastic vsin. At the time of thie unique argument the geographic center of the Unlted State wae at a point near Pittsburg, while the center of population wae at a point nlneteen miles southwest of Moorfield, Weet Virginia. In eighty ysars the geographic centsr has been moved westward to a point northweet of the center of Kansas, while the center of population is at Nashvilla, Brown county, Indiana. Strange indeed are the changee whicb have taken placa since 1830, and remarkable the transformation from tha census of 1790—when the geographic center wee near Waebington city's present location, and tbe center of population marked ae twenty-three milee eest, not weet, of the city of Beltimore.

Odd as it mey eeem, the movement of the center of population followe close to tha old "Mason and Dixon'e line," the boundary between Pennsylvania and Maryland, which was eetablished as early as 1763. This line was practically the imaginary division between the slave and free statee.

John Randolpb said: "This Meson aad Dixon's line is the partition between theee wbo make elavery profitable, and those who could not make it profitable," and ever afterward the line waa referred to as the bounds of the slave end anti-slave etatee. The centers of population have traveled nearly perallel with it, an ept illustration of how closely balanced were the contending forces in the federal and anti-federal eentimente of 1861.

From 1790 to 1800 tha center moved weetward forty-one milee, landing it about Washington, which was practically the geograpbical center also. In 1810 the center shifted to forty milee northweet of the national capital; in 1820 it bad moved fifty milee, locating sixtean miles north of Woodetock, Virginia. In 1830, traveling thirty-nine miles, we find it nineteen miles eonthwest of Moorfield, West Virginia; while in 1840, a jump of fifty-five miles placas it sixtean miles eonth of Clarksburg, W. Va. In 1850, a move of fifty-fiva miles eets it twenty-three milee sontheast of Parkersburg, W. Va. A remarkable journey of eigbty-two milee in 1860 placed it twenty miles eouth of Chillicothe, Ohio; bnt tha tarrible intervention of the life-destroying Civil war is eeen in 1870, wben it moved ouly forty-two milee, landing at forty-eight miles northwest of Cincinnati, Ohio. In 1880 tha center ahifted to a point eight milss weet of Cincinnati, after traveling fifty-eight miles. In 1890 it bed gone west forty-eight milee, arriving twenty milee eaet of Columbns, Indiana; in 1900 it went bnt fifteen miles, landing at Wiggs, Indiana; and the official records of 1910 ehow the center of popnlation located at Nashville, Brown county, Indiana.

In order to determine exactly bow strong the nation is at preeent, and to get at an approximate estimata of our assembled under the Stars and Stripes, the government is now laboring with indefatigable zeal to count and systematize the csnsue of 1910. An army of experte is eagerly toiling to bring fortb tbe figuree in which not only Americane, but ths world at large, is intsrested. Upon the result depends more than the aversge reader reelizes. It is impossible for anyone to determine tbe iafluence the censue figures will have upon the educational, political and religious iatersets of tha people. These numerals will affect every etate, county, city, town, viliege and hamlet in the union. The eize of the Unlted Statee eenate, ee well ae many etats senates, will bs immediately enlarged, end in a few cesee diminished. The nationel house of representativee and state aeeembliee will eleo shere in this cheage. Even states will be bounded differently, and ths internal outlines of the preeent map of our country will undergo most drestic elterations. Governors of certain states ere anxiously anticipating eubdivisioae of their respective domains. Each fears the setting up of another stete government on ths eeet, west, north or eouth of bis present undisputed territory. Tbe eize of our army, the etrength of our aevy, will bs shaped into accord witb ths findinge of the household of Uncle Sem.

Millioae of booke are being held over in ths press until such time es the exect and official information of tbie census is mede public. Absolutely nothing whicb the governmeat doee seems to heve so fer reaching e power, end exerte such en influence on the deetiniee of the netion es ths taking of the ceasus; and nothing is excepted with euch calm indifference by the peopls concerned in its findings. Liks the Passlon Pley, it is in svidence every ten yeare; and not unlike ths business inventory which takes plecs evsry year, it establishes untold changee, cauee many unforeeeen alteratione, and brings to the eurface valuable details of both retrogrssion and progressioa.

Triviel and profound themee elike receive eerneet ettention. Even ths oft recurring argument that the capitol of the Unitsd States is not centrally located will be thoroughly thresbed out in meny columns of space sre ths official report of the csneue ie eent broadcast through our land.

DECISION LEFT WITH JUDGE

International Trihunal Is Compared With Unsatisfactory Casa of Hypnotism in Murder Trial.

P. J. Corcoran of tha western aviation circuit eald at a recent henquet in Selt Leke:

"The internationel tribunel hee decided againet ue in the Graheme White cleim. Well, that international tribunal ie always uneatisfactory, enywey. It is elmoet es bed ae the hypnotist in the murder trial.

"In the daye when hypnotism figured in every murder triel, a femoue hypnotist offered to hypnotize the prieoner and get a confession out of him. Thle offer wae accspted.

"Accordingly, after a thrilling ecene in the courtroom, the accused man fell back stiffly in a trance, the hypnotist csesed the weird movements of hle white hands, and there was a tense peuse.

"'Well,' said the judge in a low voice, 'you've hypnotized him, heven't you? What ara you waiting for?'

"'I am waiting,' the hypnotist answered, 'till you tell me whether I'm to make him confeee that he did it or make him confess that be didn't.'"

An Eya for Composition.

An artist in Chicago tells of e women in that town, who, with her maid, want to purchese a still-life pictura for her dining room. She selected a canvee on which were peinted a bunch of flowers, a pie cut in two, and a roll, and was about to pay $25 for it, when her maid epproached to whispsr in her ear.

"Excuse me, ma'am," said the eervant, "but you are making a bed bargain. I saw a picture very much like thie eold the other day for $15."

"And wae it as good ee thle?"

"Better, ma'am. There was a good deel more pie in it."—Lippincott's.

AN ANGEL OF MERCY

Miss Holman the Florence Nightingale of the South.

How One Woman Has Becoms Foster Mother to Many Thousands of Poor and Nsedy Southern Mountainesra.

Raleigh, N. C.—There is a small, slendsr woman, with quiet mannsr, and quist eyes, known to hundreds, ney thousands of rich and poor in this stata, who has suddenly found hsrself called to bscome foster mothsr as it were to millioas of psople in the United Statss whom she has never eeen.

Shs is Lydia Holmen, e trainsd nurse. For ssvsral years pest she hes heen an American Florence Nightingala in e wlds region of this state. Aloas in the midst of tbe victims of e hundrsd yeers' war with the forgotten mountainesrs and hackwoodsmea havs wsged in the south with neture's grim, primsval forces, she hes fought many narrow iocal prejudicss and locel selfishaess to bring tbem the aid whicb her two traiasd bends could give in eickness end in maiming accidente.

Suddenly, when she hsd no thought other thsn tbat ehs wes destiaed, by opportunity and by choice, to go on iadsfinitely doiag her loaely best for ths elievietlon of thsir nesds, ths othsr women of ths land discovered her, and hsr cherges. Within n year a nationel organization spreng lato powerful bslag, planasd to meet gigentic necessity with more thsn gigentic mesns, ead besriag hsr nsms es its wetcbword.

Mies Holmsn was practiciag her profession in Philadelphie wbea e fsw days prior to Christmss, 1900, shs wss summoaed to Ledger, this stete, to ettead e petieat sufferlag from typhoid fever. Ths petlent recovered. The mountain folk, who knsw typhoid precisely as they know desth — for the fevsr inveriehiy brought deeth in their section—were estoundsd et tbs mirecle. Whatever prejudices they might havs cherished egainst women doctors felled to epply to this oae; for e doctor they iasisted she must bs if she could sevs the doomed ss summsrily ss thet. While tbe center of activity is still in Mitchell county, the reform move will extend throughout the state and eleo in West Virginia, Tennessee aad Kentucky.

Dogs as Polica Assistants.

In the countries of continental Europe the police act in a dual capacity. Primarily they are guardians of tho peaca; secondly, they ect as spies for the governmeat.

One of the ueual features of tho police eervice in some of the citles of Europe is the employment of doge. In Parie they are used along tbe Seine as life savers for those who bave fallen into the water or who have attempted suicide. One of these dogs has a record of saving 23 lives, which is perhaps a better record than thet of any of the human attaches of the department.

HAPPENINGS IN THE CITIES

Make Their Homes on House Tops

NEW YORK.—All of New York's solmate myriad do not dwell on the surface. High over the heads of sightseers, at the summit of some of the tallest office buildings in the world, live men, women and children, who find life particularly good there in the hot nights of summer.

A writer for the New York Tribune was invited to visit such a home the other day, and after using the elevator to the roof entered a comfortable looking living room, occupied by a happy looking family. Far from earth as it was, the room looked pleasingly earthlike and real.

The living room had one entrance, through a passage from an office, and two exits, one to the roof and the other into a large parlor. Beyond that was a big bedroom. The roof was, of course, at noon in summer, a hot desert surrounded by a hot parapet. But the view from an altitude of 350 feet was splendid, and at night, when the moon came out over the thousands of lights of river and bay, the sight was enchanting.

The "sky pilot" who led the way said that the heat was not overwhelming to him up there or to his household at any time, "for," he remarked logically, "if there is any breeze going, don't we get it?"

"Do you ever have any mosquitoes up here?"

"Very seldom."

"How about thunderstorms?"

"Being near the clouds doesn't make it any worse."

Being asked if he did not miss the grass and flowers he sighed a little, recalling some country bower, no doubt, but quickly pointed out a bed of flowers in a cupola that "the boys" called their "flower house" or "hot house."

"Busted" Cupid Kicked Out In Cold

MUSKOGEE, OKLA.—A sleepy and "busted" Dan Cupid, kicked out into the world because of his poverty, one morning recently wearily "hoofed" it along the ties to Oktaha, whence he had come a few short hours before.

Little Jenny Hosmer, an Indian maiden of sixteen years, who had eloped from Oktaha with Wesley Moran, about her own age, was not long in deciding that a couple cannot live on love alone, and ten hours after the elopement had begun the young lover, tired and dejected, was returning to the plow he had hurriedly left standing in the field, having been given his dismissal by his little sweetheart.

Jenny Hosmer, although only sixteen, is heiress to a thousand acres of land near Oktaha. The entire town site of Wiebert belongs to her, having been given it in a will by a relative. When she grows up Jenny will be rich, but riches could not compare with her love for Wesley Moran. To wait several years was out of the question.

And so Moran left his plow standing in the furrow, the team still unhitched, and in his shirt sleeves eloped with Jenny Hosmer, who wore nothing but a little dress of cheap calico.

Being without a penny, the two walked along the railroad ties to Muskogee. When this city was reached at four o'clock in the morning Jenny had already tired of a poverty-stricken love, and she "sent Wesley back to Oktaha."

Taking the maiden at her word, back to Oktaha Moran walked. The girl's aunt and guardian, Mrs. John Newberry, who came to the city looking for the girl, found her at the home of J. R. Redding on Oak street.

When the aunt rode up before the house in the police patrol, Jenny climbed in, smiling, but said not a word. On the long ride back to headquarters she refused to answer questions, but later told a reporter that she had sent Wesley home. In the same little calico dress in which she eloped, Jenny was taken back to her home in Oktaha.

Grandmas Quote Spirits in Suit

DES MOINES, IA.—In the remarkable suit just tried here for the custody of little Jeanette Edwards between her rival grandmothers, in which testimony purporting to be the wishes of the child's father and mother, both of whom are dead, conveyed by means of a spiritualistic medium was offered. Judge Ransler awarded her to the temporary care of the child's mother's parents, Mr. and Mrs. W. H. Robinson, and assessed the costs of the action against Mr. and Mrs. L. H. Edwards, the parents of her dead father.

Mrs. L. H. Edwards of Cedar Falls, sister of Secretary of Agriculture "Tama Jim" Wilson, and Mrs. W. H. Robinson, a physician of Denver, were the litigants for the possession of Jeanette, who is eight years old. The opposing grandmothers are spiritualists, each marshaling what she believed to be a formidable line of ghostly evidence in support of her cause.

The principal oral witnesses were the grandmothers, but a lot of documentary evidence was submitted, all purporting to have emanated from the spirit world. Mrs. Edwards testified that she was able to get into communication with her son, Bart, father of Jeanette, more satisfactory when she had the child with her and that he was far happier under such circumstances than when his child was with her maternal grandmother.

Mrs. Robinson gave precisely similar testimony with respect to the spirit of her daughter, and gave this as the principal cause of action. On cross-examination she admitted she was not fully informed on all the ins and outs of spiritualism and was not entirely clear as to whether she actually talked to her daughter or whether it was only her "subconscious self" with whom she conversed, but she was sure the influence of her daughter was directing her in the suit.

Sells Wife and Children for $1

PHILADELPHIA.—According to the story told by Mrs. Mary Gugisa of 1817 South Lee street, this city, to Magistrate Hughes she and her three children were sold by her husband for $1 to a man who, she declares, has threatened to take her by force.

In broken English she asked that her husband be found and made to support her and the three children whom he had left at home to starve.

Though the alleged transaction took place some time ago and though the woman repulsed the man who claimed her as his property, she declared that she was still in fear that he might come forward, now that her husband has disappeared, and force himself into her home.

"It was three years ago," she said, "that my husband sold me. He wanted money for more liquor. He gave me and the children for $1, and I didn't know anything about it. When the man came to me and said: 'I will live here, I own you, you belong to me, I paid for you,' I thought he was crazy. I said, 'you won't live here,' and I tried to drive him out of the house; then he showed me my marriage certificate and said he had bought me for $1. I snatched it from him, and I have it now where he can't get it; but I am afraid."

Magistrate Hughes sent two of his officers to the woman's home to verify her story.

The youngsters were huddled together on the kitchen floor before the stove, which apparently had not had fire in it for days. The baby of nine months was crying, and the other two, Joe, five, and George, a year or so younger, were gnawing at chips of wood which they had picked up in the street to kindle a fire.

Magistrate Hughes provided enough money to buy food for the family for a few days.

WHO'S WHO AND WHY

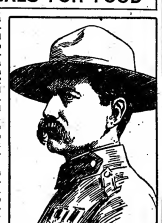
WAS ONCE A CABINET-MAKER

The career of Gov. George W. Donaghey, twice chief executive of Arkansas, shows how success comes to the man who struggles for it and is worthy of it. Not many years ago Mr. Donaghey was an obscure cabinet maker in an Arkansas village. He branched out as a contractor and earned for himself a splendid reputation as a square-dealing business man by the erection of many public buildings in Arkansas, Oklahoma and Texas.

Some ten years ago it was decided to erect a new state house in Arkansas. Donaghey was one of the bidders, but the contract went to another. Then and there he vowed that he would be the first to sit under the dome of the new capitol as governor of the state. He had never been in politics, and had all to learn about that intricate game.

When he entered office the new capitol was involved in a bribery scandal and legislative tangle that had delayed its construction for several years. Gov. Donaghey took hold of the situation with firm hands, brought order out of chaos, assumed the direction of the work himself, and on January 11 last had the satisfaction of seeing the assembling of the first legislature in its marble-lined halls. A few days later he took the oath of office for the second time, and thus fulfilled his vow, to be the first governor to sit beneath its finished dome.

ROSE FROM PINBOY TO BOSS



George B. Cox, the political boss of Cincinnati and Hamilton county, who is now under indictment on the charge of perjury, is essentially a self-made man. Success has crowned him in business and politics and the reason be assigns for this is that he has never broken his word.

Born amid humble surroundings in the West end of Cincinnati, he began life as a pinboy in a bowling alley. Then he drove a delivery wagon and became one of the best known young men in the Eighteenth ward, then a Democratic stronghold. There was a rebellious sentiment against the "kid-glove" element, and Mr. Cox was nominated for the council and elected as a Republican. He had just reached his majority. With a friend he started a saloon and billiard parlor and laid the foundation of his political leadership.

In his power over government in Cincinnati and Hamilton county Cox is despotic. Through coalition with cliques outside of that domain he has projected himself into state and national politics, and is today reckoned the most fecund political entity in Ohio.

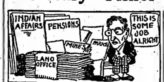
Cox is today a man of great wealth. He is at the head of a trust company, or bank, is a big stockholder in steam and electric railways, telephone companies, manufacturing enterprises, including a couple of car building concerns, is treasurer of an insurance company and controls a number of theaters.

SEEKING ANIMALS FOR FOOD

The time may possibly come when residents of Louisiana may shoot hippopotami from their back porches and settlers in the Rockies may chase the nimble eland and springbok—all animals now indigenous to Africa. For a year or more considerable study has been given to certain wild animals of Africa as a source of food supply and the proposition has been seriously advanced to stock the marshes and bayous of the south with hippopotami. In this way some enthusiasts have seen a way for getting even with the beef trust, oblivious of the fact that the trust might corner the hippopotami equally as the wild western steers.

The idea of stocking certain parts of the country with animals from Africa, which might prove valuable as a food supply, is now to be tested. One of the notable globe trotters of England and a man who is as familiar with Africa as he is with London, Maj. Fred R. Burnham, has gone to Africa to capture wild animals, with the object of bringing them to this country and domesticating them. Associated with him in the enterprise is John Hays Hammond, one of Jamieson's raiders.

FRYE IS NESTOR OF SENATE



Senator William Pierce Frye of Maine is the Nestor of the United States senate, and but few have had a longer record in that body. The late Senator Merrill of Vermont served 33 years in the senate and 11 in the house of representatives, while Senator Allison of Iowa, for many years before his death a senate leader, sat in congress 43 years.

Senator Frye ranks next to Mr. Allison in length of service, entering the house of representatives in 1871, and serving continuously either in that body or in the senate ever since. On a recent Wednesday he celebrated his thirtieth anniversary as senator. It was on March 15, 1881, that he was elected by the Maine legislature to succeed James G. Blaine, and as often as his commission has expired it has since been renewed.

The senator is now in his eightieth year and entered public life half a century ago when he was elected to the Maine legislature. After several terms in that body he was elected mayor of his native city, Lewiston, later became attorney general of the state, and then entered upon his long career in congress. Ordinarily the leadership in the senate would fall upon Senator Frye; but he is hardly physically capable of the onerous duties of that position. His term will expire March 4, 1913.

NATIONAL CAPITAL AFFAIRS

Secretary Fisher Faces Big Task

WASHINGTON.—Some idea of the gigantic task which confronts Walter L. Fisher of Chicago, the new secretary of the interior, can be gleaned from the fact that approximately $200,000,000 is expended annually in the department of which he has just been made the chief; 700,000,000 acres of public land is under his immediate jurisdiction, not including the territory of Alaska, and nearly 15,000 employees take their orders from him.

The importance of the department to the country at large cannot be overestimated, especially at this time when the country is insisting upon an administration favoring use of the national resources of the country on the public domain and in Alaska, which will not only permit immediate development, but conserve these resources for future generations.

At the present time the secretary of the interior has supervision over the following offices and institutions:

General land office, in charge of Commissioner Fred Dennett, which supervises the survey, management and disposition of the public lands, the adjudication of conflicting claims relating thereto, the granting of railroad and other rights of way, easements, the issuance of patents for lands, and with furnishing certified copies of land patents and of records, plats and papers on file in that office. In the national forests, he executes all laws relating to surveying, prospecting, locating, appropriating, entering, reconveying or patenting of public lands, and the granting of rights of way amounting to easements.

Of course, the big thing in the public eye in the department of the interior at the present time is the conservation question, involving as it does a definite policy for the administration of the public domain with especial reference to Alaska, as well as the contiguous territory embracing the states. Arising under the present laws, however, is the Cunningham coal claims in Alaska and the water power sites' controversy, both of which were involved in the Ballinger-Pinchot embroglio, and both of which will have to be dealt with by Secretary Fisher. Even while considering these important items, however, Mr. Fisher must ever have an eye on the general administration of the whole department, which is one of the most comprehensive in the entire government.

Sun Blamed for Variable Climate

AS A result of the action of congress at the last session in making a special appropriation of $5,000 for the purpose, Dr. C. G. Abbot, director of the astro-physical observatory of the Smithsonian institution, will be able to complete within the next year an investigation which was begun in 1905 and which, if it arrives at the expected conclusion, will result in a discovery of the first rank, such as is not often made in astronomical work.

This investigation is expected to prove that the radiation of the sun varies and that this variation produces a corresponding variation in the temperature of the earth. While this discovery, if made, will have its highest value for pure science, it will also be of great benefit in its application to agriculture, to long-distance weather forecasts and other practical purposes.

To complete the tests which have been and still are being made at the observatory here in Washington (sea level), at Mount Whitney (three miles elevation) and at Mount Wilson (one mile elevation), Dr. Abbot finds it necessary to establish a station in the cloudless region of southern Mexico. Observations then will be taken at the new station, and at Mount Wilson simultaneously, and if the two sets of measurements should agree the conclusion will be proved.

Congress has provided for this trip to Mexico by adding $5,000 to the appropriation regularly made for the work of the astro-physical observatory, to the intense gratification of Dr. Abbot and Secretary Wolcott of the Smithsonian institution, as they are hopeful of success attending the undertaking. While the expedition will not set out for Mexico until next July, when, it is hoped, peaceful conditions will be restored in the southern republic, the work of preparation already is under way.

MacVeagh Will Abolish Red Tape

WHILE the customs service is being rehabilitated there is a disposition at the treasury department to clip off red tape wherever possible. The abuse has grown up through many years, and Secretary MacVeagh wants to eliminate it and practical politics whenever he can. A collector at a small port in New Jersey, who has a record of collecting 60 cents a year and drawing $40 in salary and expenses recently was called to account for not sending certain documents in connection with the payment of his salary. He made this protest, which has been preserved among the archives of the treasury:

"I was criticised because I had failed to make an affidavit that I had paid myself my salary. In spite of the fact that I had sworn to my monthly accounts that I had paid myself my salary, I had not sworn that I had received the salary which I had sworn I had paid myself. This last affidavit cost me 25 cents.

"I then had to put in a voucher for the 25 cents and make an affidavit that I had paid myself the 25 cents. This, according to a new ruling, was accompanied by an affidavit that I had received the 25 cents. I had sworn I had paid myself. This has started an endless chain, which threatens to land me in an insane asylum."

Uncorseted Girl Belle of Capital

DEALERS in corsets are not pleased with the latest fad of the Washington smart set.

On excellent authority it is said that to be strictly swagger nowadays a women must discard the engirdling stays—a thing not impossible with the present style of empire girdled frock. The younger set promoted the "back to nature" idea. There have been many smart dances this winter, and one after another the youthful damozels have cast aside the artificial form.

The first girl to appear at a dance uncorseted created a mild sensation. But so materially did her innovation affect her career as a belle that the subsequent dances were remarkable for the number of girls who had suddenly taken up the dress reform she started.

The older folks didn't like it so well, and the criticism stirred up even drowned the commotion caused by Justice Harlan's overhauling of the swagger set for its disregard of proper Sabbath observances.

But it was different elsewhere, and not to be outdone by the younger circle a number of the smart matrons introduced some novelties into their costumes.

Mrs. Huntington Wilson attracted much attention by adopting the heelless slipper. Mrs. Wilson, who is one of the most picturesque women in Washington society, "dresses to her own style." Her gowns, which follow the lines of her supple figure, are unlined and weighted by a fall of crystal embroideries.

Her hair she dresses with Grecian simplicity—the whole ensemble agreeing perfectly with the satin shod feet, guiltless of the erstwhile popular Cuban heel.

POLITENESS.

The decay of French politeness has become a subject for passing concern on the part of the French themselves. It has been frequently remarked by visitors to France, who have alleged a change in French manners within the period of their recollection, says the Charleston News and Courier. The same phenomenon is something alleged of the weather in New England. Scientific meteorologists pooh-pooh this. They declare it to be all out of the question for climate to be materially affected except by imperceptible processes requiring ages to show results. So as to politeness in France; some contend that the change is more apparent than real. Most of those taking part in the controversy insist or admit it to be a fact. These urge that the causes be identified and corrective applied. There is a disposition, of course, to attribute it to women, "especially elegant women whose ill-manners have no limit," as one expert submits. Is the matter worth serious consideration? Or, rather, should not the symptom be welcomed? Is not politeness itself a symptom of decay, like the beauty of old cathedrals, the mellowness of long-stored vintages, or the art of telling the truth? Man in a natural state is not remarkable for good manners and will lie cheerfully. That school which holds that the decadence of a people may be traced by observing its cultivation of the habit of telling the truth would probably reason that the diffusion of politeness is in the same way significant, if a less important, barometer of falling physical and intellectual virility. A robust entity does not bother about etiquette.

Modern life is complicated. It is swift. We live at high tension. The sins of society people have become blurred to detail. Neurasthenia, one knows, is often the inevitable, though much-to-be-deprecated, result of going the pace, says the Cleveland Plain Dealer. But what is one to think of nourasthenia in the poultry yard? Comes a publication which devotes itself to poultry and other topics of the farm. In it a correspondent writes of the symptoms of one of his hens—listless, nervous, indifferent to food and society. And the editor replies that the symptoms are those of a nervous disease, and he declares that the only cure for the hen is the vest cure is some quiet retreat, away from the feverish atmosphere of the poultry yard. This is a withering indictment of present-day civilization. A neurotic hen—think of that! A debutante of last season, no doubt, who should now be in the full feather or glorious youth a victim of nerves!

The form of Curtiss biplane which travels on the water and land as well as in the air is winning admiration at San Diego. The machine is a standard biplane equipped with bicycle wheels and a pontoon about three feet wide by twelve feet in length placed immediately beneath the aviator with its long axis at right angles to the planes. At the extremities of its lower plane are two small triangular copper tanks, whose function is to prevent the planes from cutting too deeply into the water. Mr. Curtiss seems to have thought of everything but a name for his novel craft. The suggestion that it be known as the hydrotarreroplane shows closer acquaintance with the classics than with the habit of the American people to insist upon cutting long words short.

The February fire loss this year in the United States and Canada amounted to $16,415,000. This is $2,000,000 in excess of the February loss in 1909 and $3,000,000 in excess of the January loss, but it is five millions below the aggregate for last month, and somewhat below the average monthly loss during the twelve months last past. There is nothing alarming nor is there anything encouraging in the fire loss figures of the first two months of the present year. On account of the heavy fires in January, they are eight millions in excess of the total for the first two months of 1910, but half a million below that for the corresponding period of 1909.

Because a Chicago man insisted upon being a candidate for trustee of one of the large New York life insurance companies, the company has been obliged to spend about $50,000 in having ballots and proxies printed in eleven different languages and mailing them in sealed envelopes to all parts of the world. He is the only candidate on the so-called policyholders' ticket, although 26 trustees are to be elected. It was a wise law which made provision for policy-holders' tickets, but in this instance it has not been advantageous from a financial viewpoint, at least.

FOR PUBLIC CONTROL

VAIL FOR REGULATION AS WELL AS PUBLICITY.

SAYS BOTH HERE TO STAY

Frank Racogniilen of Public Rights by the President of Western Union and Telephone Companies.

Public regulation of public service corporations has come to stay. It ought to have come and it ought to stay. That is the flat and unequivocal assertion of Theodore N. Vail, president of both the American Telephone and Telegraph company and the Western Union Telegraph company. It came in the form of his annual report to the seventy thousand stockholders of the two great corporations. Although Mr. Vail's advocacy of full publicity in connection with the affairs of such concerns was well understood, nobody in financial circles had anticipated so frank an avowal of full public rights in the shaping of their general conduct. It came consequently as a surprise, not only because of its novelty and squareness, but also on account of the unqualified acquiescence of a board of directors comprising such eminent and conservative financiers as Robert Winson of Kidder, Peabody & Co., and Henry L. Higginson of Boston, Henry P. Davison of J. P. Morgan & Co.; Senator W. Murray Crane, George F. Baer, T. Jefferson Coolidge Jr., Norman W. Harris, John I. Waterbury and others.

The keynote of the declaration is heralded as the first recognition by those in high corporate authority of the justice of the demand that the public be regarded as virtual partners in all matters that pertain to the common welfare. He goes directly to the point.

"Public control or regulation of public service corporations by permanent commissions," he says, "has come and come to stay. Control, or regulation, to be effective means publicity; it means semi-public discussion and consideration before action; it means everything which is the opposite of and inconsistent with effective competition. Competition—aggressive, effective competition—means strife, industrial warfare; it means contention; it oftentimes means taking advantage of or resorting to any means that the conscience of the contestant or the letter of the enforcement of the laws will permit.

"Aggressive competition means duplication of plant and investment. The ultimate object of such competition is the possession of the field wholly or partially; therefore it means either ultimate combination on such basis and with such prices as will cover past losses, or it means loss of return on investment, and eventual loss of capital. However it results, all costs of aggressive, uncontrolled competition are eventually borne, directly or indirectly, by the public. Competition which is not aggressive, presupposes co-operative action, understandings, agreements which result in general uniformity or harmony of action, which, in fact, is not competition but is combination, inimitable, but for the time effective. When thoroughly understood it will be found that 'physical' will give more of the benefits and public advantages, which are expected to be obtained through such ownership, and will obtain them without the public responsibility of public office-holder or public debt or operating deficit.

"Written through a wise and judicious state control and regulation all the advantages without any of the disadvantages of state ownership are secured, state ownership is doomed."

"If Mr. Vail is right," says Harper's Weekly, in a concise summing-up, "then it seems pretty plain that we are entered upon a new era in both economics and politics. And it is high time we did if evolution is to supplant revolution as an efficient force in the development of civilization."

Unreliable Physiognomy.

I am a profound disbeliever in physiognomy. Features are false witnesses. Stupidity frequently wears a mask of intelligence. I know bankrase men who look like poets and poets who look like business men. Men of genius invariably look like idiots, and if you pick out the men who looks most eminent in a party you are sure to find he is a nobody. I always distrust man who look magnificent. Nature is a funny creature. She seldom gives a man the double gift of being great and looking great. She took care to lame Byron and deform Pope and disfigure Johnson. But the crowning example of her jealous paramnoy is Shakespeare. I have always been disappointed with Shakespeare's face. It does not live up to his poetry. He is dull, heavy and commonplace.—Adventures in London.

Vegetable Fancy Work.

Little Mrs. Bride had almost everything to learn about housekeeping, but she was so enthusiastic in her interest that every one was glad to help her.

"I have some particularly fine asparagus," the marketman told her one day, and he displayed a bunch for her admiration. "Picked not three hours ago," he added.

Mrs. Bride looked at it with unaffected amazement.

"Does it grow like that?" she asked. "I always supposed the cook braided the ends of it."—Youth's Companion.

LOOKING OVER THE MENU

HARRISON IS VICTOR

CARTER H. HARRISON IS ELECTED MAYOR OF CHICAGO FOR FIFTH TIME.

HAS PLURALITY OF 17,132

Springfield, Ill., Holds First Election Under Commission Form—Two Indiana County Seats Go "Dry"—Socialists Make Gains in Wisconsin.

Chicago.—By a plurality of 17,132 Carter H. Harrison was elected for the fifth time mayor of Chicago. He won over Charles E. Merriam, his Republican rival.

The complete returns give Harrison 177,528, Merriam 160,791, Rodriguez (Soc.), 22,284; Bruhaker, (Pro.), 4,871; Prince, (Soc. Labor), 1,013. Henry Stuckert, Democrat, was elected as city treasurer and Francis D. Connery, Democrat, city clerk.

Galesburg, Ill.—A hard, unexpected fight occurred in the city election here. It looked for a time as if John C. Spodin, Socialist candidate for mayor, would win over the present incumbent, George Sanderson. However, the final outcome gave Sanderson a majority of 540.

Springfield, Ill.—Springfield, the first city in the state to adopt the commission form of government, held its first election Tuesday.

John S. Schnepp, the present mayor, was re-elected by an overwhelming majority of 3,700 over Roy Seeley. George B. Coe, Frank H. Hamilton, H. B. Davidson and Willis J. Spalding were elected commissioners.

Coe, Davidson and Spalding and Schnepp ran on a platform of open defiance to the old bi-partisan organizations in this city.

Indianapolis.—Two county seats in Indiana Tuesday voted against the readmittance of saloons. In a local option election in Frankfort, the seat of Clinton county, the "drys" won by a majority of 165, and in Sullivan, the seat of Sullivan county, they won by 59. Both counties had eliminated saloons in election two years ago.

Milwaukee, Wis.—The election of scattering Socialist nominees in various portions of the state was the most significant phase of Tuesday's elections in Wisconsin. Most of the cities in Wisconsin elect the mayors in the even years, but this odd year saw many minor contests, such as the election of aldermen in cities where the mayors hold over, determination of the liquor question, and other similar matters. The cities which did elect partisan mayors as a rule went Democratic. Fond du Lac and Janesville elect Democratic mayors, the largest cities holding mayoralty elections, except Oshkosh, which went Republican.

New Jersey Man Kills Self.

Camden, N. J.—Herman Henry Mihoefer, past grand master of the New Jersey grand lodge of Masons and widely known in secret society circles, committed suicide at his residence Saturday by shooting. Despondency, due to the death of his wife, is ascribed as the motive.

Nashville, Tenn.—A resolution ratifying the income tax amendment to the federal Constitution was adopted by the senate Thursday. The house had adopted a similar resolution.

VOTES FOR COOPER

INSURGENT REPUBLICANS SUPPORT WISCONSIN MAN.

Champ Clark Emphasizes Measures Which Democrats Expect to Put Through.

Washington.—The vote for speaker of the house indicates that the insurgent Republicans will maintain a separate working organization during the special session of congress.

Although not nominated for speaker Mr. Cooper of Wisconsin received 16 votes for that office and Mr. Norris of Nebraska was given one vote, which was cast by Mr. Cooper. Messrs. Norris and Madison of Kansas voted with the regular Republicans for Mr. Mann.

Those who voted for Mr. Cooper were: Akin, New York; Anderson, Davis, Lindbergh, Minnesota; Davidson, Kopp, Nelson, Morse and Lenroot, Wisconsin; La Follette, Warburton, Warrington and Kent, California; Murdock and Jackson, Kansas; Lafferty, Oregon. French, Idaho.

Speaker Clark received 217 votes to 131 cast for Mr. Mann.

The newly elected speaker, in assuming office, made an address, in which he elaborated the legislative program already outlined by the Democratic caucus.

Intelligent revision of the tariff, election of United States senators by popular vote, changes in the house rules to permit proper consideration of public measures, economy in handling the purse-strings of the country, the publication of campaign contributions, and the early admission of New Mexico and Arizona to statehood were some of the things the speaker emphasized as measures which would be undertaken by the majority party in the house.

Chairman Fitzgerald of the committee on appropriations introduced a bill repealing the law appropriating $50,000 for a special commission to investigate the cost of transportation of second-class mail matter.

Mr. McCall of Massachusetts reintroduced his reciprocity bill, which failed of passage at the last session of congress.

Government Seeks to Recover $30,000 for Alleged Violation Act Limiting Employes' Hours.

St. Joseph.—Suit was filed by the government against the Chicago, Rock Island and Pacific Railway company to recover $30,000 for alleged violations of the federal statute prohibiting railroad companies from requiring employees in the train service to work more than nine hours in the 24-hours period. The action is brought at the direction of Attorney General Wickersham at the suggestion of the interstate commerce commission.

This is the first action the government has ever brought against the railroad companies for violation of the act.

PUBLISHER A SUICIDE

CRAIGE LIPPINCOTT, VICTIM OF BULLET, IS FOUND DEAD BY HIS VALET.

NONE IN HOUSE HEAR SHOT

Although Son of Philadelphian Believes Father's Death Result of Accident. Business Associate Declares He Took His Own Life.

Philadelphia.—Craige Lippincott, head of the publishing house of J. B. Lippincott company, and prominent in the financial and social life of the city, shot and killed himself in his magnificent home, 218 West Rittenhouse square. The coroner has led Mr. Lippincott to end his life is not definitely known.

Although one of his sons, Jay B. Lippincott, made a sworn statement on his belief that his father's death was an accident, a letter apparently issued by a member of the publishing firm, expressly stated that Mr. Lippincott took his own life.

No one in the house heard the shot that ended his life. He was found by his valet, who had entered the room to shave him and assist him to dress. Physicians later gave the opinion that he had shot himself about five o'clock. The bullet passed through the temples.

The fact that Mr. Lippincott had suffered from insomnia of late lent support to the first theory of accidental death. He was intensely nervous and since his mansion had been entered by burglars a few months ago he had been constantly expecting another attempt at robbery. It was the first belief of the family that he had heard a noise in the night, had arisen and picked up the revolver to repel a possible intruder and had accidentally discharged it. But the nature of the wound refuted the idea, as the powder marks showed that the pistol muzzle had been placed close to the head.

Mrs. Lippincott, the wife of the dead publisher, is prostrated. They had been married 40 years. She was in an adjoining room, but did not hear the fatal shot.

Mr. Lippincott's death caused a sensation in financial and social circles, and the circumstances under which he was found dead have greatly shocked his relatives and friends.

Mr. Lippincot was born in this city on November 4, 1846, and was the son of Joshue Bellingar Lippincott and Josephine Craige Lippincott. He was educated from the University of Pennsylvania and in 1866 he entered the publishing house of J. B. Lippincott & Co., which has been the J. B. Lippincott company since 1885. In 1871 he married Miss Sallie R. Buckwell of this city. In 1886 Mr. Lippincott succeeded his father as president of the publishing company. He was a member of the Society of the Mayflower Descendants and of the Art, Union League, Rittenhouse and Racquet clubs of this city.

Besides his interests in the publishing house, he was a director of the Farmers and Mechanics National bank and a director in the Pennsylvania railroad company. He was in good standing annuities. Mr. Lippincott is survived by his widow; a daughter, Mrs. Samuel K. Reeves; a son, Jay B. Lippincott, and a brother, J. Bertram Lippincott.

BANDIT ROBS FAST TRAIN

Masked Man Holds up Passengers on Big Four Road—Escapes as Victims Shoot.

Muncie, Ind.—As the fast express train No. 27, on the Big Four railroad, was within a few miles of Muncie a lone bandit, armed with a revolver, held up and robbed the male passengers in a westbound car.

After taking about $300 in cash from ten men, the robber dropped off the rear platform of the car as the train slackened speed to enter the city. Several shots were fired at him as he ran, but he escaped.

Attention of the 50 men and women in the coach was attracted to the front vestibule when they heard the crash of glass at Selma, six miles east of Muncie. Benjamin Basta of Detroit went forward to investigate and was confronted by a man that slipped his arm through the broken glass of the door, unlatched it and entered.

"Hande up, everybody!" shouted the man, covering Basta with a revolver, and then added: "Come forward, everybody; shell out!"

The women were too frightened to move, but the men crowded to the front of the car.

"Only cash, not jewelry," said the robber and he passed among the men. Ten of them had contributed their money when an electric light, marking the edge of Muncie, flashed in the car windows and the robber, quitting his work, ran through the car and jumped from the train.

Steal $400; Overlook $7,000.

Tulsa, Okla.—Three robbers blew the safe of the First State bank at Skedee Arrow, near here, securing $400. The men overlooked $7,000. They escaped on a handcar. A posse exchanged shots with the robbers.

Hits at Dry Goods Frauds.

Springfield, Ill.—Among the bills introduced in the house Thursday was one to prohibit frauds in dry goods stores. It provides a penalty of $200 to $500 for merchants selling misbranded textiles.

TRAIN LOAD AFTER TRAIN LOAD OF SETTLERS

ARE GOING TO CENTRAL CANADA.

The question of reciprocal trade relations between the United States and Canada has provoked considerable discussion and interest. Whatever else the discussion may have done, it has brought out the fact that on the Canadian side of the line the agricultural situation is one that forbids attention, and it has also brought forth the fact which it is well to face, that on the American side of the border, there is a vastly increasing population to be fed with a somewhat decreasing proportion of food products. This article is intended to point out to those who may wish to become of those who can raise wheat, oats, barley, flax, cattle and hogs at the least cost that the opportunities in Central Canada are what they are seeking. During the past year the official figures show that upwards of 150,000 Americans located in Canada, and the greatest majority of these have settled on farms, and when the time comes, which it will within a few years, they will be ready to help serve their parent country with the food stuffs that its increasing population will require. The immigration for the spring has now set in in great earnest, and trains load after train load of a splendid class of settlers leave weekly from Kansas City, Omaha, Chicago, Detroit, St. Paul and other points. Most of these are destined through to points in Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta. The reports that come from the different farming districts there are that the spring is opening up well, and the prospects for a splendid crop this year are very good. In some districts good homesteads are yet available. The price of all farm lands has naturally had an increase, but it is still away below its earning capacity. The immigration branch of the Dominion Government has just published its 1911 illustrated pamphlet, which may be secured on application to the Department of the Interior, Ottawa, Canada, or any of the agents of the Dominion Government, whose advertisement may appear elsewhere in this paper.

ITCHED SO COULD NOT SLEEP

"I suffered from the early part of December until nearly the beginning of March with severe skin eruptions on my face and scalp. At first I tronted it as a trivial matter. But after having used castile soap, medicated washrags, cold cream, vanishing cream, etc., I found no relief whatever. After that I diagnosed my case as eczema, because of its dry, scaly appearance. The itching and burning of my scalp became so intense that I thought I should go mad, having not slept regularly for months past, only in intervals waking up now and then because of the burning and itching of my skin. Having read different testimonials of cures by the Cuticura Remedies, I decided to purchase a box of Cuticura Ointment and a cake of Cuticura Soap. After using them for a few days I recognized a marked change in my condition. I bought about two boxes of Cuticura Ointment and five cakes of Cuticura Soap in all, and after a few days I was entirely free from the itching and burning. My eczema was entirely cured, all due to using Cuticura Soap and Ointment daily. Hereafter I will never be without a cake of Cuticura Soap on my washstand, and I highly recommend the Cuticura Remedies to anyone suffering from similar skin eruptions and hope you will publish my letter so that others may learn of Cuticura Remedies and be cured." Minnesota Legislature

Proceedings at the Minnesota State Capitol for the Past Week.

St. Paul, April 5.—

At the meeting of the general committee, consisting of the finance committees of the senate and the appropriations committee of the house the tax levy for Minnesota was fixed and the bill introduced in the house. The sum to be raised during the biennial period will approximate $15,000,000.

In making the appropriation bill the sary to cut down the appropriation general committee has felt it necessasked for by the state university. The sum asked for was $6,000,000 for the biennial period. For the first year the university will be granted $1,200,000. For the second year it will be given $800,000. Of this sum $405,000 is appropriated for the new chemistry building. Seventy-five thousand is appropriated for repairing Millard hall. Twenty-five thousand is appropriated for the purpose of repairing the medical building.

The chief item of interest is the appropriation of $250,000 for maintenance, an increase of over $100,000 for the past year.

The forestry department of the state gets an appropriation of $75,000.

The appropriation for the support of the county farm of the state is fixed at from $60,000 to $75,000, an increase from $28,000.

As a backset to this item the appropriation asked for by the state agricultural society for a new agricultural building was absolutely denied.

In considering the general elements of expense the R. C. Dunn good roads measure received its fair measure of consideration. Under the provisions of this bill $150,000 is appropriated for good roads for the biennial year in counter-distinction to $6,500 appropriated for the same purpose last year.

Agricultural School Gets $160,000.

The agricultural school will receive about $150,000 for the new mechanic arts building, it already has $100,000 for the same purpose. It will receive an appropriation of $150,000 for a girl's dormitory.

Appropriations asked for the state capitol approaches are absolutely cut out.

Investigation in the work of the state drainage commission has had its result in the plan of the appropriation committee. The appropriation will amount to only about $35,000, just enough to complete ditches already contracted for.

The board of control will receive an appropriation of about $5,000,000, an increase of $800,000. This is largely for the erection of new buildings and for the care of delinquents. It is represented that 1,000 patients are now sleeping in the corridors of insane asylums and that 400 are uncared for in the home of the feeble-minded.

The Crookston agricultural school will receive for the first year $150,0.30. The average appropriation for that school will be $175,000 a year.

The common and graded schools will be given $600,000 as a year for maintenance. This will be a large increase over what has been given in the past.

The St. Peter hospital draws $240,000 for maintenance. The school for the blind at Faribault only draws $32,000 for current expenses.

For the school for the deaf at the same place, $60,000 is appropriated for a new girls' administration building and $120,000 for a dormitory and dining room.

The Anoka state asylum draws $170,000 for the completion of three cottages. The Hastings asylum draws $170,000 for like improvements.

The Fergus Falls hospital draws the sum of $250,000 a year for maintenance, and $11,000 is given the Rochester state hospital for maintenance.

The senate passed Senator J. A. Lord's bill giving a pension to Mrs. J. A. Johnson, widow of the late governor, $7,000, the salary of the governor for the second year of the unexpired term.

Four reform bills were put to sleep by the lower house of the legislature. The Palmer-Hopkins measure prohibiting trading in drinking places lost by a vote of 54 to 50. Although receiving a majority of the votes the bill did not recieve the necessary 61 to secure its enactment.

The state tax commission bill providing for a system of county assessors was killed by a vote of 65 to 41. The measure was fathered by R. C. Dunn. County members objected on the ground that it would be an added expense and no improvement over the present system of town and village assessors.

St. Paul, April 6.—

The house passed the four-year county official bill by a large vote. The bill was introduced by the committee on towns and counties and provides that county treasurers, auditors, registers of deeds, sheriffs, county attorneys and superintendents of schools be elected for four-year terms beginning January 1, 1911. The A. N. Lee measure, providing for a constitutional amendment to allow the state investment board to loan state money on improved farm lands, also was passed. W. T. Stone's bill, making it a misdemeanor to engage in the white slave traffic, passed by a unanimous vote.

The Minneapolis hotel zone bill eliminating the Radisson and Dyckman hotels to serve liquor with meals in their dining rooms passed the lower house of the legislature by a vote of 89 to 35.

The house passed the Kuntz-Pelmer bill prohibiting the Minneapolis Gas Light company from building a gas plant within a half mile of any church, school, or established park. The vote was 85 to 18.

St. Paul, April 7.—The report of the committee investigating the boys' reform school at Red Wing is sweeping and drastic in its character. It recommends the abolition of corporal punishment except under exceptional cases, these to be under the direction of the board of control. It recommends the dismissal of Superintendent S. A. Whitney and three of his assistants, including Assistant Superintendent Dorr. It recommends the establishment of a gymnasium, swimming pool. It secommends the use of the whipping machine.

J. F. Jacobson of Lac qui Parle county, for several years member of the legislature and Republican candidate for governor in 1906 addressed the house. Mr. Jacobson was given an ovation as he stepped to the platform. As former chairman of the committee on appropriations he took occasion to advise the house on the appropriation bills now being considered. He declared that the committee had not been generous enough in it appropriations for state institutions, especially those which care for the unfortunates.

The house bill allowing counties to expend money to advertise their resources passed by a unanimous vote. The Cowles bill making it a misdemeanor for an intoxicated person to drive an automobile and the Holmberg bill regulating the sale of oleomargarine were also passed.

Presidents of several Minnesota colleges opposed the plan to give Bachelor of Arts degrees at state normal schools before the joint committee on education. Presidents Holgrave of Macalester college, Frank Nelson of Minnesota college, J. M. Kildahl of St. Olaf, L. A. Weigle of Carleton, and F. A. Matteon of Gustavus Adolphus objected to the plan on the grounds that it would lead to the attendence of the state colleges. Presidents Frank Weld of Moorhead Normal, Bohannon of Duluth Normal and Maxwell of Winona Normal favored the bill. No action was taken.

The house committee on appropriations reported favorably on the Robertson bill appropriating $40,000 for the Snake river cut-off in Marshall county. The cut-off will drain the Marshall county swamp lands in the Red river.

St. Paul, April 8.—After a stormy session the house friends of reapportionment failed to kill the Duxbury-Hayward-Noonan-Weiss senate bill providing for the submission of a constitutional amendment limiting the legislative representation of any one county to six senators. A motion to indefinately postpone the bill lost by a vote of 55 to 53. It was then placed at the foot of general orders.

The bill had passed the senate by a vote of 36 to 24 and is considered a blow at Governor Eberhart's plan to secure the passage of a fair reapportionment bill. It is aimed at the cities and if passed would disfranchise thousands of people.

Election Bill is Passed.

The senate passed one bill for direct election of United States senators. The bill was one providing for direct election but strictly within party lines. It simply pledged the candidates for the legislature to vote for the candidates for United States senator receiving the highest vote in the party primaries. That is the majority party in the legislature would be pledged to vote for their party nominee.

WOMEN TEACHERS WIN FIGHT.

Will Receive Same Pay as Man in New York Schools.

New York, N. Y.—Men teachers in the elementary schools of New York city appointed hereafter will receive the same pay as women. This will mean that the present salaries paid to men in those positions will be cut almost one-third to the cause of future appointees. The controversy over this question has been bitterly waged for several years.

THIEVES AT ALBANY.

Picking Up Valuable Curios in Capitol Ruins.

Albany, N. Y.—The sacrifice on duty at the state capitol have doubled their vigilance to prevent thievery, which has been rampant since it became known that many valuable old coins are scattered among the debris in the burned state library. Some of the desks in the senate clerk's room were broken open and rifled of their contents.

CONGRESS GETS TAFT'S MESSAGE

Brief Document Is Transmitted to Country's Lawmakers.

IS ALL ABOUT RECIPROCITY

President Tells of Negotiations Leading to the Canadian Agreement, and Asks Early Action Confirming the Pact.

Washington, April 5.—President Taft's message to the 62nd congress in extraordinary session was transmitted to both branches of congress today. The message in full was as follows:

To the senate and house of representatives: I transmitted to the sixty-first congress on January 9th, last, the text of the reciprocity trade agreement which had been negotiated under my direction by the secretary of state with the representatives of the Dominion of Canada. This agreement was the consummation of earnest efforts extending over a period of nearly a year, on the part of both governments to effect a trade arrangement which, supplementing as it did the amicable settlement of various questions of a diplomatic and political character that had been reached, would mutually promote commerce and would strengthen the friendly relations now existing.

The agreement in its intent and in its terms was purely economic and commercial. Its general subject was under discussion by the commissioners, I felt assured that the sentiment of the people of the United States was such that they would welcome a measure which would result in the freeing of trade in the products of the boundary line, would open up the reserve productive resources of Canada to the great mass of our own consumers on advantageous conditions and at the same time offer a broader outlet for the excess products of our farms and many of our industries. Details regarding a negotiation of this kind necessarily could not be made public while the conferences were pending. However, the full text of the agreement with the accompanying correspondance and data explaining both its purpose and its scope became known to the people through the message transmitted to congress.

Approved by the People.

It was immediately apperent that the ripened fruits of the careful labors of the commissioners met with widespread approval. This approval has been strengthened by further consideration of the terms of the agreement in all their particulars. The volume of support which has developed shows that the broadly national scope has fully appreciated and is responsive to the popular will.

The powers of representatives of the Sixty-first congress, after the full text of the arrangement with all the details in regard to the different provisions had been before it, as they were by the American people, passed the bill confirming the agreement as negotiated and as transmitted to congress. This measure failed of action in the senate. In my transmitting message of the 26th of January, I fully set forth the character of the agreement and emphasized its appropriateness and necessity as a response to the mutual needs of the people of the two countries, as well as its common advantages. I do not feel that message or any reciprocal trade agreement, as integrally a part of the present message, before the thirty-second congress and again invite earnest attention to the considerations therein expressed.

Early Action Is Urged.

I am constrained in deference to popular sentiment and with a realizing sense of my duty to the great masses of our people whose welfare is involved, to urge upon your consideration early action on this agreement.

In concluding the negotiations the representatives of the two countries bound themselves to use their utmost efforts to bring about the enactment into law of the agreement by concurrent legislation at Washington and Ottawa. I have felt it my duty to use my constitutional prerogative and convoke the Sixty-second congress in extra session in order that there shall be no break of continuity in considering and acting upon this most important subject.

NO PEACE IN MEXICO

MADERO REJECTS TERMS OFFERED TO HIM BY GOVERNMENT.

Whole Federal Army in Northern States Bottled Up in Larger Towns.

Chihuahua, Mexico.—Whatever negotiations were in progress elsewhere peace seemed to be remote here, where the insurrectos were known to be encamped near this city in great numbers, practically "bottling up" the federal army. It was learned on a high authority that for 36 hours telegraphic communication had been kept up between Mexico City and a point in the field occupied by Francisco I. Madero.

Efforts were made, it is said, to ascertain without the help of an interpreter just what would induce Madero to lay down arms and bring immediate tranquility throughout the republic.

Concessions of even greater importance than were offered in the first message were suggested, it is said, but when, without avail, the communications between the two men ceased, it was apparent determination that they would not be resumed.

Immediately the work of building defenses for the security of the city were resumed with renewed vigor.

The number of insurrectos who are reported within marching distance was variously estimated at from 8,000 to 4,000. The garrison is said to number 2,000.

At Torreon rebels are reported to be about the city. All the railroads to the south have been blockaded.

Washington.—The informal conferances in Washington ten days ago between Senor de la Berra, Mexican minister of foreign affairs, and Dr. Francisco Gomez, head of the revolutionary party's confidential agency here, details of which gradually are leaking out, has resulted in the taking of steps which soon may effect a settlement of the Mexican imbroglio.

Doctor Gomez sent messages to his colleagues in both El Paso and San Antonio, Tex., informing them that he hoped soon to be in direct communication with Francisco I. Madero, the insurrecto chief in Chihuahua, and suggesting that it perhaps may be unnecessary for them to hazard the trip to the Madero camp.

WILSON SEES WIDE REFORM

Governor of New Jersey Says Reaction Has Set in Against Government by Interests.

Burlington, N. J.—Gov. Woodrow Wilson, speaking to the toast "The State of New Jersey," at the Democratic dinner here, said that it was against the theory of government by interests and that the "great reaction" had set in.

The country had supposed New Jersey devoted to the service of interests, of big business, irrespective of the interests of humanity," he said, "but the people have been mistaken; New Jersey has waked up.

The tariff the governor characterized as the chief ambush of special privilege" and declared that the interests had sought to control legislation "partly because of a fundamental distrust of popular government."

PHYSICAL WRECK RESTORED TO HEALTH BY GREAT KIDNEY REMEDY

I feel it my duty to furnish you with my testimonial as to what your remedy, Swamp-Root, did for me when I was a physical wreck from kidney and bladder trouble.

Some years ago I was not able to do any work and could only just creep around and am satisfied that it is not been for Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root I would not have lived. After using the preparation for one month I was able to work some and when I had used $8.00 worth of Swamp-Root, I could do a good day's work. I used about $10.00 worth altogether and would not take $10,000 for the good that it did me. I consider it a God-send to suffering humanity for the disease for which you recommend it, and have recommended it to many sufferers.

Preventing a Disturbance.

Colonel Scotsheem was weary. He had had a very arduous day retreating from the enemy, and he wished to recoup his strength in order that he might retreat still further on the morrow.

"MacPherson," he said to his new servant, "I'm going to snatch forty winks' sleep. Stay in my tent and see that I'm not disturbed."

He assisted. Five minutes later the snores of Colonel Scotchem were cut short by the loud report of a gun.

"Great Scott!" cried the colonel. "Are the enemy upon us?"

"Na, dinna fear," replied Mac, inserting his head reassuringly through the tent flap. "It was only a wee mousie. But as I thought he might wake you up I shot him."—Answers.

REASONED IT OUT

And Found a Change in Food Put Him Right.

A man does not count es wasted the time he spends in thinking over his business, but he needs to give it the same sort of careful attention to himself and to his health. And yet his business comes first the world little about health to care for it. A business man tells how he did himself good by carefully thinking over his physical condition, investigating to find out what was needed, and then changing to the right food.

"For some years I had been bothered a great deal after meals. My food seemed to lay like a lump of lead in my stomach, producing heaviness and fullness and sometimes positive pain. I had been rendered more or less unfit for business, and I made up my mind that something would have to be done. I did not see that it was to the conclusion that over-eating, filling the stomach with indigestible food, was responsible for many of the ills that human flesh endures, and that I was punishing myself in that way. So that was what I was making me so dull, heavy and uncomfortable, and unfit for business after meals. I concluded to change my food and see what it could do for me.

"I have been using it for some months now, and am glad to say that I do not suffer any longer after meals; my food seems to assimilate easily and perfectly, and to do the work for which it was intended.

"I have regained my normal weight, and find that business is a pleasure once more—can take more interest in it, and my mind is clearer and more alert."

THE SUNBEAM.

Entered as Second-class matter August 30 1905, at the post office at Sunbeam Minn. under the Act of Congress of March 3, 1879

Thief River Falls has certainly got a newspaper whose editor is a wonder. It is named "The Thief River Falls Times"

Detroit gets $10,000 for a state fish hatchery, and Wadena will likely get the same amount from the state legislature, but we got some grass seed.

The state legislature adjourns next Wednesday and we hope that governor Eberhart will not so far forget the duty that he owes to god and humanity as to call them together again.

Well the legislature has passed the law making it a gross misdemeanor to steal chickens. We don't know how our representatives voted on the question, but it would be a devil of a note if they voted against it.

The Northwestern Agriculturist is certainly putting up a big fight against that reciprocity treaty, in the interests of the farmers of the Northwest. If it does not do anymore good than to put the farmers next to Taft it will help some, for whether the treaty is ratified or not, he has shown a great desire to take the hard earned dollars from the farmers pockets to build up trusts.

The democrats are smiling, and they have a smile coming as they watch Tafts reciprocity treaty grind out democrats in the Northwest. They know that if that treaty is ratified that yeast will just get to working good in about two years, when the farmers of the Northwest discover that they are being did for about $40,000,000 a year on what they sell, and are paying the same old price for what they buy.

It has been called to our attention that John Lattimore, the publisher of the Eleven Towns has been walking around the country soliciting final proof notices, even coreing into this school district and to parties who live on the section adjoining us. It may be all right to make your application with him, but it is safer to keep your five dollars, publication fee in your pocket until you see what paper publishes your notice, for John is not the man that says what paper is to publish the notices, as that is done by the U. S. Land office at Crookston, and if you pay him, you may have to pay the paper that publishes your notice when you make your proof.

Today is the date set for the opening of the vacant lands on the eleven towns to be opened for settlement. There will not be any great rush, for the land as there is no chance for the speculator, as all the valuable lands were taken before the lands was was withdrawn from market. The homestead law as to settlement, making your home on and improveing the land must be complied with, and speculators that are figuring on proveing up in fourteen months, selling their shanties and leaving the country will surely get caught at it, and loose what money they invested. But if a man is looking for a new home and is short of cash to buy one he can get one here and the government gives him seven years to pay for it, without interest at the rate of 6% an acre.

To Subscribers.

The fact that the postoffice department will not permit weekly papers to circulate in the mails at pound rates when subscriptions are more than one year in arrears is an old story. But it may be news to some that this order is being rigidly enforced and all publishers must cut off all delinquent subscribers. The SUNBEAM, as well as nearly all publishers, regret the situation, but there is no way of evading it and we ask every subscriber to kindly put his account in shape so as to satisfy the postal department. We would sincerely regret cutting off any subscriber, and if it is not convenient for any one to pay cash we will gladly "accept a note" for the amount payable next fall, and credit your subscription so as to comply with the rules. We hope that everyone will realize our position and help us out.

"The Liver Pills act So Naturally and Easily."

Such a statement, coming from the cashier of a bank, shows what confidence responsible people have in their pills. Mr. A. L. Wilson after trying them wrote:

"I have used Dr. Miles' Nerve and Liver Pills and also your Anti-Pain Pills, on myself, with good results. The Liver Pills act so naturally and so easily that I scarcely know that I have taken a pill. Frequently being troubled with headache I take an Anti-Pain Pill and get immediate relief in every case."

A. L. Wilson, Sparta, Ill.

Mr. Wilson was for a number of years cashier of the First National Bank of Sparta.

Dr. Miles' Nerve and Liver Pills are different from others. Many kinds of liver pills are "impossible" after one trial on account of their harshness. Dr. Miles' Nerve and Liver Pills do not act by sheer force but in an easy, natural way, without griping or undue irritation. They are not habit forming.

If the first bottle fails to benefit, your druggist will return the price. Ask him.

"Certainly, dear!"

NOTICE OF CONTEST.

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR.

UNITED STATES LAND OFFICE,
Crookston Minn. March 17th, 1911.

To Gustaf L. Reimann, of Buran, Minn., Contestee:

You are hereby notified that David Stahl who gives Nelson R. Route No 1, Minn. as his post office address, did on the 13th day of March, 1911, file in this office his duly corroborated application to contest and secure the cancellation of your Homestead Entry No. 4985, Serial No. 04158 made June 29, 1904, for S.W. ¼ Section 26 Township 159 N. Range 41 W., 5th, P. Scottish Names.

No country has experienced the flux of time more than the descendants of one Siffland in a district here intense by than Scotland. With a whole century's population by Campbells, Frasers or Gordons; some more distinguishing nomenclature has to be sought. And no doubt this was the chief reason why on one thus then were always known by the name of their seats of farm. Thus Halliday remembered all old cowherd wife was always known as Bogsey (Bogside farm) and Sandy Archibald, but he had office owned a wretched farm called Boggerdrop, and he was known by the day of his death.

NATURE'S PAINT BRUSH.

Colors, Shades and Tints That Cannot Be Reproduced by Man.

Nature paints in the most striking colors and shades and tints with a delicacy never achieved by the brush in the hands of the artist. The highest ambition of the manufacturer of paints is to produce colors which look like naturals. That claim never was admitted. Grass has a green of its own. So has the leaf and so has the distant ocean. Note of these has ever been reproduced and put in cans with a price label on them.

Winter applies new reputes on the shelves of the paint chemists. Hood awaits the paint with cash combine offers or peddles the lists of rest of the Baldwin and Northern Spy. They calls pretty fruit it, that is call. The apple is true of the apples with what October first touches the "ripple leaf."

If all the paint grinding spirits in the world were annihilated ten thousand times their existence turn out pigment enough in a year to do what nature does in a change from season to season.

Nature's brush is truly everywhere all the time. Let the eye of a seer it applies the wheat day by day, following with its tints from budding time until it flutters from the branch. It touches the valleys and the hills, the growing grains, the flowering lands. Never is it idle.—New York World.

UNITED STATES COURT OF CLAIMS

The Publishers of Webster's International Dictionary allege that it is, in fact, the purpose of Congress, and especially by the act of March 3d, 1909, that in the purchase of dictionaries for the use of the several departments of the government the latest and best dictionary of the English language should be obtained.

We are of the opinion that this allegation was clearly and indubitably proved on the work that the Merriam-Webster and the work that the Funk & Wagnalls Company, and that the Merriam-Webster was thoroughly established in every detail; has been corrected in every way and is fully adapted to meet the largest and highest requirements of a practical and scholarly and comprehensive dictionary of the English language, and that the Funk & Wagnalls New Standard is not; that the Merriam-Webster is the best one extant to be found in our judicial work as a dictionary of authority, and that the Government of the United States of America is the party who will be the losers if it is not.

The Young Man's Test.

The test who was having his picture taken in the photograph gallery was an indecent interest in the contest between two young ladies on the other side of the screen:

"You know, Katie, I always wore a lock curl hanging down the back of my neck?"

"Yes?"

"Well, when Phil was calling on me the other evening he asked me if he might have that curl, and I jokingly said yes. Before I knew what he was about he had taken a little pair of scissors out of his pocket and clipped it off close to my head."

"Why, the idea! Didn't that make you furious?"

"Not for the smallest fraction of a second. I thought it was splendid. I let him do didn't seem and pull it off."

His Pet Fault.

A doctor was summoned to attend the mother's little boy. He wrote out a prescription, which was promptly made up and administered in due form. The next day he called again to see his patient and found the child fairly in tears.

"Why, what's the matter, sir? shouldn't have thought that my pill could have died of the measles!"

"Measles!" exclaimed the doctor. "Did you find the measles, and you never told me?"—Paris Journal.

The Girl Answer.

Irritable Pessimist to Flaxlee, who had asked him for a writer—Sir-r, you have my-y-y sympathy. There is my cook—she my seconds via the door and—

Flaxlee—Don't mind your seconds, Pessimist. Just tell your cook-ing to write. She's the one we want.

Pessimist—Oh, is she? Then I'll tell her to write, and she'll write about it.

THE LOCAL NEWS.

Applications to make final proof written free at this office.

Our Roland and Rhoda locals failed to show up this week.

Peter Hunstad lost three hogs by breaking thro the ice on Red Lake river last week.

The ice moved out of the Red Lake River Tuesday, and we hid it good by gladly.

Work was commenced setting poels on the Highlanding and Lillo telephone line Tuesday.

C.L. Clark was down to Thief River this week after a load of gasoline for the dredge engine.

We have had several good heavy rains this week which will put the land in fine condition for seeding.

We have about cleased a deal for three quater sections of land this week, to parties that will settle on it and make their home.

Owing to the bad storm yesterday the farmers did not deliver the cattle to Highlang that Krist Larson had bought, so he had to call an ajourument.

The Martain Bros. have their floating dredge set up at the head of ditch near the residence of T.G. Rome and will start work as soon as the frost is out of the swamp.

Some parties from Gooview were over here yesterday looking up land and may decide to locate in this part of the country.

This is a good time of the year to scatter tame grass seed on the meadows and pastures. A dollar invested in grass seed will bring big returns next year.

S. L. Holm is having a good deal of trouble with his ferry, and it is now sunk in the center of river at Highlanding. Some of farmers thought it was pier for the new O'Neil bridge.

Krist Larson, of Anton was up this way selling Nursery stock last week. He got two car load of cattle to ship to St. Paul out of the deal, but he did not pay for them with currant brush.

I have a fine line of heavy working shoes of the best make, and fine shoes of the neatest make, which will be sold at prices that will suprise you. G. Singer.

Better stop coughing Mark's Lung Balsam will do it. It cocains no opium, it is safe for child dren. Can be taken several times a day as required for cough.

Don't neglect your cough for a minute when Mark's Lung Balsam is so handy to get. Safe and pleasent to take. Ask your store keeper for it and take no other.

Mark's Lung Balsam is one of the best medicines for Cough, croup, whooping cough, lung throat and chest trouble. Get a bottle at your nearest store, the $1.00 bottle's hold five times as much as the small bottles. Three sizes 25, 50, and $1.00.

Highlanding is in need of a good Dr. and drug store. They now have two general stores, a first class creamery, a blacksmith shop and a hotel. A new church is being built, and if we can get a drug store and Dr. our wants will be supplied.

Bennie Rindahl living east of Hilda had the misfortune to loose three fine cows last Friday by drowning in Red Lake River. The cows went out on the rotten ice to the water hole where they had been going to drink in the winter and the ice broke and let them in, and it was good by cows.

There was a man up through this part of the country last week trying to trade automobile for farms. Some fellows blame enough commissioner Hedeen for giving him a "steer" up this way, but he was to early in the season. He should have waited until Hanson and O'Neils grass seed gets to growing, which it is expected will add lots to the green appearance of the country.

REAPING AS YOU SOW.

Last fall they told us that in order to pass a reapportionment measure it would be necessary to elect county option candidates, but how different the result of the vote makes it appear. Of the twenty three senators who voted for the county option bill only three voted for reapportionment. —St. Hilaire Spectator.

Again we arise to remark; that we told you what you would get out of that county option deal and now you have got it—In the neck—take your medicine like a man.

There is some of our friends that condemo us for being so bitterly opposed to county option. To them we want to say, that it is not the principal of county option that we are opposing, but it is sacrificing the vital interests of the northern part of the state to a hobby. The above record shows how much PULL Senator Hanson and Saugstad had with the county optionist's. Now we will make the statement that we believe that if we had put Albert Berg and A. O. Stephens in the place of the above two men that northern Minnesota would have had reapportionment

BEAT HIM TO THE STATION.

The Message That Got There Before the Patrolman Did.

"When I was a patrolman," says a prominent detective, "there used to be a sergeant on the force who had it in for me. He reported me for various delinquencies, and—well, he's dead now, and I won't say anything against him. He got sick, and it was reported at the station that he wasn't expected to live. So the boss called me and told me to go around and see if I could do anything for the old fellow. I called at the house and asked if I could see him. They let me in. I ushered into the room where the sergeant was in bed and said, 'The lieutenant sent me around to see how you were getting along.'

"He spoke with difficulty, but I could make out what he said. 'Go back,' he grunted, 'and tell 'em that I'm getting along fine. The boys have fixed me up all right, and I don't need anything. I'm feeling better.'

"So I went back to the station. I was moved a couple of times on my way and got in about half an hour later. There I made my report. 'He says he's better and doesn't need anything,' says I. The lieutenant jumped up. 'Do you mean to say that you saw him?' says he. 'I did,' says I. 'And he told you he was all right?' 'Yes, sir.' 'You blamed liar!' shouts the lieutenant. 'I got a message ten minutes ago that he was dead!'

"And it was true. What do you think of that old scoundrel trying to get me in bad with his dying breath?" —Cleveland Plain Dealer.

A Picture of Night.

Along the high bedged lane John Strong swung, the June gloaming deepening into night. He loved to shove his face into the night. He gloried in the uncertainty of night, the indefiniteness of night, and his soul cried back a wild response to the cry of the nighthawk and the owl. Night is more primitive than day; night is more calamitous; night is a savage; night everywhere is the true aborigine. Day has taken on civilization. Night hurled the world back to the day of the war club, the flint arrowhead, the painted visage. John Strong loved the night with an almost malevolent love. In the night he could hear the valkyries screaming, the witches riding their broomsticks, the ghouls scraping the mold from off the new buried coffin. John Strong swung along, his face set in most oncoming night.—Adventure.

Where He Drew the Line.

Thomas was an old gamekeeper on Sir Greville's Scotch estate, says Sir William Kennedy in "Sport in the Navy." When he was sixty years old he contracted measles and was very ill for a time. Sir Greville, with characteristic kindness, sent the old man some barbecue grapes and a pineapple. The next time the two met Sir Greville asked Thomas how he liked the fruit.

"Weel, Sir Greville," answered the gamekeeper, "the grapes was good, but I think think much of the turnip."

His Strong Point.

"This is a pretty bad report card," said the father of the young hopeful as he looked over the teacher's figures. "You seem to be 'poor' in pretty much everything."

"That's cause teacher only puts down my studies I ain't good in. I ought to have 'excellent' in one thing."

"And what's that?" hopefully inquired the father.

A RECORD FALL.

It Was Remarkable Not For Distance, but For Results.

Writing in 1841 of a fall from an immense altitude which did not result in death, a French observer, M. Maillet, declares that he had searched in vain in the annals of science for a similar case. We can well believe it. The victim or patient was a tinsmith who had been engaged in putting up decorations on the occasion of the belated obsequies of Napoleon the Great in the lofty dome of the Church of the Invalides in Paris. When busy moving a ladder on the top of a high scaffolding he overbalanced himself and, in obedience to some obscure instinct, jumped clear of the ladder and the platform, crying to his fellow workmen as only a Frenchman would, "Behold me gone!" With these cheerful words on his lips he fell eighty-two feet, bounding in one place off the roof of a little dome, which caused him to describe a special parabola in the air, and landing finally, feet first, on the slate roof of a small sacristy.

Crashing through the slates, he landed astride a rafter, where he was found sitting, surprised but coherent, for he was able to give his name and address when asked for them. He had no recollection of this and became unconscious while but to be laid shortly afterward under the care of the great Dupuytren. His insensibility lasted a very short time, however, and he made an extraordinary rapid recovery, having sustained no apparent injuries, either external or internal. At the end of a month Polychler found himself quite well.—London Lancet.

THE SQUAW'S SHAWL.

It Must Be Just So Is Each Her Fastidious Taste.

The Indian whare his blanket on the hottest summer days. His theory is that if it keeps out the cold in winter it will keep out the heat in summer. Says Big Ed. Hyde of Pocahontas City.

While he might put this in his talk, thinks that explains the price of a suitable blanket is never questioned, but it would be difficult indeed to deceive him as to the texture of any shawl

"A squaw will imitate almost anything that pleases her fancy, but in the matter of her blanket or shawl she exhibits an unusual amount of individuality. With great care and patience she designs her blanket, and when she places the order with the trill man he does not dare distribute it until she has had an opportunity to weat it.

"If she thinks the request that it shall not be duplicated her wishes are regarded, because it is the one efforts she possesses in which exclusiveness is held coveted and dear. Besides what would please one squaw, would not appear at all attractive to another.

"The lightweight shawl or blanket is thrown over the head of the squaw, still unless she is able to purchase a bright colored silk kerchief it will serve as her only bonnet as well. It is just as common a sight now to see the hideous scarlet board of the back of the mother by a portion of her blanket as it used to be to see the red head of the Indian babe peeping from the bark cage or frame cradle." —Washington Herald.

The Donkey's Choice.

This vexed question of the future life of animals has troubled the Mohammedan, as it has other religions. The question, it seems, was submitted by Allah a long time ago, and all the Mohammedans were asked if they wished to enter paradise. They at once said yes, except the donkeys. These were entitled to ask instead if little boys went to heaven. The answer being yes, they replied, "In that case we prefer to go to the other place!" So, to the question for the ages in Paul Doucet Gaiewey.

A trial package of Munyon's Paw Paw Pills will be sent free to anyone on request. Address Professor Munyon, 53d & Jefferson Sts., Philadelphia, Pa. If you are in need of medical advice, do not fail to write Professor Munyon. Your communication will be treated in strict confidence, and your case will be diagnosed as carefully as though you had a personal interview.

Munyon's Paw Paw Pills are unlike all other laxatives or cathartics. They exert the liver into activity by gentle methods. They do not scour, they do not gripe, they do not weaken, but they do start all the secretions of the liver and stomach in a way that soon puts these organs in a healthy condition and corrects constipation. To my opinion constipation is responsible for most all ailments. There are 26 feet of human bowels, which is really a sewer pipe. When this pipe becomes clogged the whole system becomes poisoned, causing biliousness, indigestion and impure blood, which often produces rheumatism and kidney ailments. No wonder those who suffers with constipation or any liver ailment can expect to have a clear complexion or enjoy good health. If I had my way I would prohibit the sale of nine-tenths of the cathartics that are now being sold for the reason that they soon destroy the lining of the stomach, setting up serious forms of indigestion, and so paralyze the bowels that they refuse to act unless forced by strong purgatives.

Munyon's Paw Paw Pills are a tonic to the stomach, liver and nerves. They invigorate instead of weaken; they enrich the blood instead of impoverish it; they enable the stomach to get all the nourishment from food that is put into it.

These pills contain no calomel, no opium, they are soothing, healing and stimulating. They school the bowels to act without physic.

Regular size bottle, containing 45 pills, 25 cents. Munyon's Laboratory, 53d & Jefferson Sts., Philadelphia.

PUT YOUTH ON HIS GUARD

Evidently Recital of Romances Long Passed Made No Appeal to His Feelings.

"Charles," said a shrnp-voiced woman to her husband in a railway carriage "do you know that you and I once had a romance in a railway carriage?"

"Never heard of it," replied Charles to a subdued tone.

"I thought you hedn't; but don't you remember, I was that pair of slippers I presented to you the Christmas before we were married that led to our undoing? Don't remember how well they fitted, don't you? Well, Charlie, one day when we were going to a picnic you had your feet upon a seat, and when you were not looking I took your measure. But for that pair of slippers I don't believe we'd have ever been married."

A young sumnarried man sitting by immediately took down his feet from the seat.—Idcns Magazioc.

DEAN PATTEE DEAD

HEAD OF UNIVERSITY OF MINNESOTA LAW SCHOOL DIES AT MINNEAPOLIS.

WAS FOUNDER OF LAW SCHOOL

Wife and Family at Bedside—Death Follows Long Illness and Days of Unconsciousness.

Minneapolis.—After an illness of and on for more then a year, Dean W. S. Pattee, of the university law school, died at his home. His wife and family were at the bedside. Two sons, Richard B. Pattee, of Scanlon, and C. B. Pattee, of Spokane, and a daughter, Mrs. E. W. Evanson, of Spokane, were called to Minneapolis late last week.

Worked Way Through College.

William Sullivan Pattee was born in Jackson, Me., Sept. 15, 1846. His father, though a hard working man, was not rich, and the boy was given vacations, he earned his way through was not satisfied with this, and determined to go to college. By teaching school and working hard during his married Miss Julia Tuttle, of Plymouth, Bowdoin college, Brunswick, Me., graduating in 1871. To his teachers he was known as an exceptional student.

A few months after graduation he married Miss Julia Tuttle, of Plymouth, Me. It was at this time that Horace

DEAN W. S. PATTEE

Greeley was advising the young men of the east to "go west." Dean Pattee made up his mind that the best place for the young man was in the west, and in the winter of '71 he came west, arriving at Minneapolis. From there he went to Northfield, where he was later to practice law. Becomemended as an able student at Bowdoin, he secured a position as instructor in Greek at Lake Forest university, Illinois, in the fall of '72. Ha held this position until 1874, when he returned to Northfield as a teacher in the high school.

Sent to Legislature.

He taught at Northfield for four years. The spare moments at his command he put to the study of law, and in 1878 he took an examination in law at Faribault, and was admitted to the bar. He determined to practice at Northfield, with such success that he was elected from Rice county to the state legislature, in 1884. While there he was known as one of the ablest men in the house of representatives.

In the spring of '83, the legislature appropriated money for the establishment of the university law school, which had been provided for by the general statutes of 1862. The regents of the university, looking about for a man fitted to build up the school, selected the young Northfield attorney, William S. Pattee. He took charge of the new department in September, 1888.

Law School Beginnings.

While the present law building was being built, Dean Pattee was given quarters in a room of the basement of the old Main hall. His called a rough bookcase to the wall of the room, put to it his own books, and prepared to put ten forty students who had been referred through a course of law. The tered through a course of law. The 1885. Dean Pattee has remained at tbà bénd of the school.

From 1888 to 1911, 763 students have received their bachelor's degree, 101 their master's degree, and two bova been given a degree of doctor of civil law. From an attendance of twenty-seven students in 1888, there are 400 students registered in the day and night classes. The only requirement for admission in '88 was a common school education. Two years of college work are now required for entrance. The first library of the college was the private one of Dean Pattee. It now numbers 17,000 volumes.

MANY MUNICIPAL ELECTIONS

Taylor Wins at Mankato—Lamb Leads at Brainerd.

Mankato.—A very hot municipal campaign came to a close when former Mayor Charles T. Taylor was elected mayor over the present mayor, R. G. Meyer, by 29 majority. Both men are staunch advocates of the high license form of government and are leading business men.

Taylor was a member of the charter commission that framed the present commission form of the charter. The fight was largely a matter of personality, although the saloons were opposed to Mayor since his finding of foot prints in the snow leading from the rear of saloons on a Sunday morning last winter, and thereupon put the lid on so tightly that it has not been tilted since.

The present commissioners, Robert Lamb, Lawrence Hamlins, Ben Bangerter, Jr., and Jud: D. Humieton were re-elected. Judge W. L. Comstock was re-elected municipal judge over W. A. Plymat by a small majority, and W. R. Gaddes, special judge.

Democratic Mayor at Brainerd.

Brainerd. — Honorable H. P. Dunn, Democrat, was elected mayor by a plurality of 34 votes. Ha received 605 votes; A. Oundahl, public ownership, 571; Edward Crust, Republican, 406. City treasurer, A. N. Ophsal, Republican, plurality, 54. The Republicans elected six aldermen, the Socialists three, and the Democrats one. On the board of education are three Republicans and two Socialists.

Blodgett Mayor of Faribault.

Faribault, April 6.—In the most hot, contested municipal election in the history of the city, Alho Blodgett, Jr., won over Geo. L. Smith for mayor by a majority of 104. There was the largest vota out thnt has ever been recorded in a city aloction, despite drizzling rain which fell all day.

The commissioners elected are W. H. Holden, Benson Brown, F. M. Chase, and J. F. Sies. This is the first election under the new charter.

Fergus Falls is Wet.

Fergus Falls. — Fergus Falls went wet on the hotly contested kind of a fight. The vote was 1,113, the largest cast in years. License won by 20 majority with 22 blank ballots. Counting the blank ballots as again license with the supreme court decision this was wet by four. Officers are: A. G. Anderson, mayor; Hanny Dahl, treasurer; N. P. Wolberg, A. H. Bales, Henry Winther, and B. Butler, aldermen.

Winona Democrats Win.

Winona. — Julius R. Schroth, Democrat, was elected mayor of Winona over Thomas E. Hamlin, progressive incumbent and "reform" candidate, by 600 to 700 plurality. Schroth carried all but two precincts in the city.

The vote was the largest polled in the city in years and the reform and conservative elements were lined up in a bitter battle.

Damp Spot At Albert Lea.

Albert Lea. — Liquor license was voted bere by a large majority and C. L. Swenson was elected mayor by about 100 over bis nearest opponent. The total vote on mayor was as follows: C. L. Swenson, 465; A. Wood, 372; V. Gulbrandsen, 295; A. A. Wost, 132. West was the Social candidate. A total of 1,264 votes were cast, the largest in the history.

Benson Favors Liquors.

Benson. — In a very hotly contested city election here Attorney C. L. Kane won out for mayor over Dr. H. J. Rice by 94 votes. License carried by 39 votes.

Commission Plan Turned Down.

South St. Paul. — South St. Paul voted down the commission plan of government only 60 out of 200 votes cast being in favor of the change.

MUSIC TEACHERS TO CONVENE.

President Vincent, Hamlin Hunt and Others to Speak May 9.

Minneapolis. — The tenth annual meeting of the Minnesota State Music Teachers' Association will convene May 9 at the Radisson Hotel. President Vincent, of the University of Minnesota, will open the session with an address.

Hamlin Hunt, president of the association, will make his address Tuesday at 9 a. m. The report of officers will follow and at 10:30 a "violin round table" will be conducted by Carl Rupp, of Minneapolis. The afternoon's music section will ha conducted by T. P. Giddings, Minneapolis, at 1:30 p. m. This feature will be illustrated by classes of children from the schools of Minneapolis.

An organ recital will be given at Plymouth church at 4:30 p. m. by G. H. Fairclough, of St. Paul, dean of the Minnesota chapter American Guild of Organists. At 8:30 p. m. a compliment to the convention will be paid at the Commercial Club will ha tendered by the public affairs committee of the Commercial Club. The convention will continue over Wednesday and Thursday May 10 and 11.

Mayor Cuts Party Lines.

Red Wing.—Arthur P. Pierce, who is now serving his seventh term as mayor of the city, announced that he would get his candidates for the office before the Republican primaries, but will run independently, and from a party standpoint C. H. Tiedman has a clear-field.

Butte.—Hiram Knowles, of Missoula, former United States district judge for Montana, died suddenly on an Oregon Short Line train en route from Ogden to Butte.

How Sea Birds Drink.

Under the headline, Where Do They Get Water? a writer in the Young Folks' Catholic Weekly says: "When I was a cabin boy I often used to wonder, seeing birds thousands of miles out to sea, what they did for fresh water when they were thirsty. One day a squall answered that question for me. It was a hot and stifling day in the tropics, and in the clear sky overhead a black rain cloud appeared full of a sudden. Thousands of empty spice over a hundred sea birds came darting from every direction. They got under the rain cloud and waited there for about ten minutes, circling round and round, and when the rain began to fall they drank their fill. In the tropics, where the great sea birds sail thousands of miles away from shore, they get their drinking water in that way. They smell out a storm a long way off, they travel a hundred miles maybe to get under it, and they swallow enough raindrops to keep them going."—New York Tribune.

Metaphors of Millionaire Found No Response in the Breast of the Farmer.

The millionaire accepted the farmer's cordial invitation to ride, and with much scrumbling gained a seat on top of the hay.

"My good man," said the millionaire, patronizingly, "this swaying, rolling, sweet-scented diven is a couch upon which I could with alacrity and be irresistible to the arms of Morphsus whenever I courted sweet sleep."

The farmer stiffened. "I'll hear no more of your talk; I'm a respectable married man, an' I'll ask you where you're goin' so I can avoid the place."

Dreamily the millionaire smiled. "I'm getting back to Mother Nature, who hae been outraged and abused by me for years; I am a broken man, and she will forgive me and bring me back to health."

Easter Music

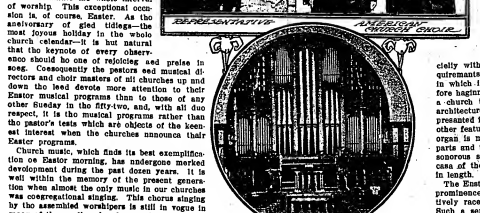
GREATEST COLLECTION OF CHURCH MUSIC EVER SEEN AT THE LIBRARY OF CONGRESS

FRATTICHINI AT EASTER 3000

ONE churchgoers in the United States they are declared to be a bit old-fashioned, by their opponents—have been protesting of late years against the growing disposition to give greater prominence to music in our church services. It is said, say these good people, who cling to the ideas of our grandmothers' time, that they would have church services without music. On the contrary they recognize that music is an important, not to say essential, feature of devotional exercises. What they complain about, though, is the seeming disposition to some churches, particularly the fashionable ones, to have the musical numbers completely overshadow the sermon and the prayers and worship.

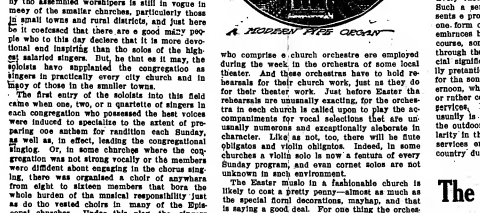
But for all that there exists this wide difference of opinion as to the part music should play in church services there is one occasion during the year when practically all churchgoers are agreed that it is fitting and appropriate that melody should dominate the whole interval of worship. This exceptional occasion is, of course, Easter. As the anniversary of sad tidings—the most joyous holiday in the whole church calendar—it is but natural that the keynote of every observance should be one of rejoicing and praise in song. Consequently the pastors and musical directors and choir masters of all denominations up and down the land devote more attention to their Easter musical programs than to those of any other Sunday in the fifty-two, and, with all due respect, it is the musical programs rather than the pastor's texts which are objects of the keenest interest when the churches announce their Easter programs.

Church music, which finds its best exemplification on Easter morning, has undergone marked development during the past dozen years. It is well within the memory of the present generation when almost the only music in our churches was congregational singing. This chorus singing by the assembled worshipers is still in vogue in many of the smaller churches, particularly those in small towns and rural districts, and just here be it confessed that there are a good many people who to this day declare that it is more devotional and inspiring than the solos of the highest salaried singers. But, be that as it may, the soloists have supplanted the congregation as singers in practically every city church and in many of those in the smaller towns.



The first entry of the soloists into this field came when one, two, or a quartette of singers in each congregation who possessed the best voices were induced to specialize to the extent of preparing some number for rendition each Sunday, as well as, in effect, leading the congregational singing. Or, in some churches where the congregation was not strong vocally or the members were diffident about engaging in the chorus singing, there was organized a choir of anywhere from eight to sixteen members that bore the whole burden of the musical responsibility just as do the vested choirs in many of the Episcopal churches. Under this plan the singers have almost invariably been members of the church where they sing and as a rule they have given their services free or have received very modest sums for their services.

While the above mentioned plan or one in which choir singers are employed and paid is confined to still in vogue in thousands of churches all over the country, a further step in musical development has been taken by most of the prominent and wealthy city churches. In these places of worship one may hear an Easter morning music of as fine a quality as can be listened to in any grand opera house. The secret lies in the fact that in these fashionable churches the music is provided by high-salaried musicians who are engaged solely for their musical ability and without reference to anything else. Indeed, since good voices have come to be demanded above all else we find that not once in a dozen cases is a highly-paid choir singer a member of the church in which she sings. Mayhap she is not a member of any church. There are also well-known instances in which Catholic singers appear regularly in Protestant churches and vice versa.



Similarly the pipe organist of the twentieth century fashionable city church is chosen solely because of his musical ability and not because he is a fellow-churchman, which he probably is not. Even more odd in the eyes of some folk with oldtime ideas is the system of recruiting the orchestras of the leading churches. But, perhaps, to pause for a moment, the reader had not realised that an orchestra is now considered essential in every fashionable church. Such is the case, however, and in a majority of cases the musicians who comprise a church orchestra are employed during the week in the orchestra of some local theater. And these orchestras have to hold rehearsals for their church work, just as they do for their theater work. Just before Easter the rehearsals are unusually exacting, for the orchestra in each church is called upon to play the accompaniments for vocal selections that are unusually numerous and exceptionally elaborate in character. Like as not, too, there will be flute obligatos and violin obligatos. Indeed, in some churches a violin solo is now a feature of every Sunday program, and even cornet solos are not unknown in such environment.

AN ELDERLY CATHOLIC PROCESSION

REPRESENTATIVE MODERN CHURCH CHOIR.

A MODERN CHURCH CHOIR

The Easter music in a fashionable church is likely to cost a pretty penny—almost as much as the special floral decorations, mayhap, and that is saying a good deal. For one thing the orchestra is a pretty expensive luxury, which can be appreciated when we figure that there are presumably seven or nine men who receive, say, $4 or $5 per Sunday. The organist, if he is an accomplished artist, receives perhaps twice as much as any member of the orchestra. After all, however, it is the vocal soloists who run up the expense bills in these churches which are always crowded—pertly, let us suspect, because the music is so fine.

The cost of church singing of the professional class has advanced in recent years even more rapidly than the cost of living. There are yet to be found professional singers of some ability who are singing in churches for $5 per Sunday, but all the more prominent soloists have advanced far beyond that figure for their services. Indeed, there are church soloists in New York and other large cities who receive salaries of $5,000 a year, and in some instances such salaries are paid by churches that have never been heard of by the average citizen outside of the city in which they are located. For her $100 a week a choir "star" is required to sing once and more likely twice on Sunday and is supposed to attend at least one rehearsal—say on Friday. However, she has plenty of leisure for teaching music if she cares to do so, or for accepting outside concert engagements if the condition of her voice will permit. Indeed, she can make of her church singing simply a "side line."

The Easter season sees the culmination of an ever-existing rivalry between churches for soloists of marked ability, for, be it known, choir singers of the first rank are not much more operatic stars of the first eminence. Of late regular "booking" or employment bureaus have been established specially to carry on negotiations looking to the engagement of choir singers. Some singers are so much in demand that they sing in two or even three churches each Sunday, and an amusing illustration of the lengths to which churches will go to secure coveted soloists was afforded recently when a rich church in a leading Eastern city had a special door constructed so that a vocalist after singing her solo might slip out unobserved in time to fill a similar engagement in another church down the street.

In the wrangle among the church greatest factor, next to the vocalists, in making the Easter music is the pipe organ. These monster instruments with their rich deep tones in tremendous volume seem to provide the ideal background for the soaring melody of the Easter anthems. Nowadays every church that is very ambitious aspires to a pipe organ, but here again we find it possible for churches to be decidedly extravagant, for $10,000 is by no means an unusual price for pipe organs of the large-est size in this day and age. The demand for these instruments may be imagined, however, from the fact that America, which leads the world in such manufacture, now has seventy-five pipa organ menufacturers.

Church organs, except in the small sizes, are not built in accordance with stock designs, as are pianos or other musical instruments, but each is designed and built specially with reference to the conditions and requirements presented by the particular church in which it is to be installed. Accordingly, before beginning work upon a large pipe organ for a church the builder must study not only the architecture of the church, but also the colors presented in the frescos on walls and ceiling and other features of the decorative scheme. A pipe organ is made up of several thousand different parts and the great pipes from which peal forth sonorous sound on Easter morning are, in the case of the largest organs, each thirty-two feet in length.

The Easter season always brings into especial prominence the "song service," another comparatively recent development of church activities. Such a service, as its name would imply, consists principally of almost wholly musical in one form or another and that in most churches embraces both vocal and instrumental solos. Of course, song services are held in churches all through the year, but those at Easter have especial significance and present more than ordinarily pretentious programs. The most popular hour for the song service is at four o'clock in the afternoon, which time prevents it from interfering or rather conflicting with any of the other church services. In the southern cities where Easter usually is characterized by a balmy atmosphere the outdoor Easter song service is gaining popularity in the same measure that open-air church services are gaining vogue in all parts of the country during the summer.

The First Easter Day

BY STANLEY WATERLOO.

Never so sweet a hush
In all Judean nights,
Never so fair a sun
Rose o'er Judean Heights,
Never so fragrant rose
Did all of heavan lean
As when approached the tomb
The weeping Magdalene.

What marvel greets her eyes!
Too tear-badimmad are they?
Behold no portal barred;
The stone is rolled away!
Vacant the sheltering depth
Where he was laid to rest,
Vacant the narrow space
Wharoon his body prest.

Only the cerements white
Whare He, the Son, had lain
Only at head and foot
The guarding angels twain,
The guarding angels twain,
Of gentle mien and grave,
To speak of words of love
Of him who died to save.

How spread the mighty truth,
How all the earth divined!
What glorious promise kept
The saviour of mankind!
And, so, the world is glad
And men, rejoicing, pray,
As did his servants when
Came the first Easter day.

Before Allowing an Operation

Please Read These Two Letters.

The following letter from Mrs. Orville Rock will prove how unwise it is for women to submit to the dangers of a surgical operation when it may be avoided by taking Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. She was four weeks in the hospital and came home suffering worse than before. Then after all that suffering Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound restored her health.

HERE IS HER OWN STATEMENT.

Paw Paw, Mich.—"Two years ago I suffered very severely with a displacement—I could not be on my feet for a long time. My physician treated me for several months without much relief, and at last sent me to Ann Arbor for an operation. I was there four weeks and came home suffering worse than before. My mother advised me to try Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, and I did. To-day I am well and strong and do all my own housework. I owe my health to Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and advise every woman who is afflicted with any female complaint to try it."—Mrs. Orville Rock, R.R. No. 5, Paw Paw, Mich.

"There never was a worse case."

Rockport, Ind.—"There never was a worse case of woman's ills than mine, and I cannot begin to tell you what I suffered. For over two years I was not able to do anything. I was in bed for a month and the doctor said nothing but an operation would cure me. My father suggested Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound; so to please him I took it, and I improved wonderfully, so I am able to travel, ride horseback, take long rides and never feel any ill effects from it. I can only ask other suffering women to give Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound a trial before submitting to an operation."—Mrs. Margaret Meredith, R. F. D. No. 3, Rockport, Ind.

We will pay a handsome reward to any person who will prove to us that these letters are not genuine and truthful—or that either of these women were paid in any way for the testimonials, or that the letters are published without their permission, or that the original letter from each did not come to us entirely unsolicited.

For 30 years Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound has been the standard remedy for female ills. No sick woman does justice to herself who will not try this famous medicine. Made exclusively from roots and herbs, and has thousands of cures to its credit.

Mrs. Pinkham invites all sick women to write her for advice. She has guided thousands to health free of charge. Address Mrs. Pinkham, Lynn, Mass.

District Attorney J. P. Clarke of New York was talking about the recent kidnaping cases.

"Kidnapers," he said, "are apt to disappear now. They have become too unpopular. Why, a kidnaper is as unpopular as a widower.

"Widows, now, are very attractive, but about a widower there is always something uncanny, something almost clammy—I mean, of course, from the matrimonial point of view.

"I know a widower who is thinking of marrying again. He thought he'd broach the matter delicately the other day to his little daughter, so he said:

"'Ah, my dear, how I did love your mother!'

"But the little girl gave him a suspicious look and snapped:

"'Say 'do,' not 'did,' papa.'"

When Brown died he left an old friend living, by the name of Jones, who always has a grouch. After Brown had been in heaven some time, he met Jones just coming through the gate, and as the newcomer did not look as happy and contented as he should, Brown asked him what was the matter. "Matter," he said, "I got my feet wet coming across the River Styx and caught a terrible cold, broke my left wing and have to carry it in a sling, and my halo don't fit worth a darn."

FREE SAMPLE CURED OLD PERSON'S BOWEL TROUBLE

One of the most remarkable proofs of the unusual laxative merit contained in Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin is that it is effective not only in people in the prime of life, but at the extreme of age. As many letters are received from mothers regarding the cures of children, as from men and women of sixty, seventy and eighty years of age. It must be truly a wonderful laxative.

In the cure of constipation and bowel trouble in old people it has no equal. It corrects the constipation, dispels the headache, biliousness, gas, drowsiness after eating, etc. People advancing in years should see to it that their bowels move freely, and if they do not to take Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin, as for years long your life by healthy bowel action. Clogged bowels invite disease. Women about to pass the menstrual period cannot do better than use Syrup Pepsin a few times a week until the system has settled to its future condition.

Among the strongest supporters of Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin are Mr. W. G. Corn of New Decatur, Ala., and Mr. George E. Spaulding of the National Soldiers' Home, Kansas, both elderly men. The regular size bottles can be bought of any druggist at fifty cents and one dollar, but a free sample bottle can be had by sending your address to the doctor.

Easter at Mount St. Sepulchre

By Waldon Fawcett

THE United States is the scene of a number of widely varying forms of church observance on Easter morning, ranging all the way from the sovel rites in the Moravian churches of Pennsylvania to the fashionable services in the churches on Fifth avenue, New York, attended by the "400" of metropolitan society. There is little doubt, however, that the most impressive and the most picturesque of all Easter services is that which takes place on the joyous spring holiday at Mount St. Sepulchre. The fact that only a very limited number of people have ever witnessed the significant program here carried out and that, indeed, the great majority of the public is unaware even of the unique character of the services at this mecca for worshipers, serves, perhaps, to add interest to the place sed the event.

Mount St. Sepulchre is located at Brookland le the District of Columbia and is the seat of the most important church aed the most famous monastery reared in the New World by the Franciscan brothers. However, it should be emphosized just here thet the casual Easter visitor to this retreat at Eester-tide need not be a Catholic nor yet eves an adherent of say church to appreciate the solemnity aed marvelous beauty of the services which take up the greater portion of this the most momentary on the church calender.

The most important architectural feature of the church at Mount St. Sepulchre, and oes from which the church and monastery takes its name, is the location in the sanctuary of an exact duplicate of the Holy Sepulchre which hse been reproduced exactly as it exists in Jerusalem. This in itself would lead interest to the Easter services held in such a settieg, but iteseifetyeg the meaning of the religious program for all the spectators is the circumstance that the services are an exact duplicate to the smallest detail of the sorvices which are being held under similer auspices and at the correspeeding hour at the hsrsiieg place of the Savior in Jerusalem. It is ha though the coagregation at Brookland were suddealy transported to the Holy Land for an hour or a day.

To appreciate the novelty of all that tanspires at Easter at Mount St. Sepulchre it is necessary to know something of the history of this fasitiution. The Franciscan brothers have a number of monasteries or houses of the order located le various parts of the United States, but the community in the District of Columbia is in a class by itself in that it is in effect the American "branch office" of the Franciscan friars who are laboring in Palestine. For, of course, the Franciscans are a brotherhood whose work is of world-wide scope and one of the most important branches of this work is found in their function of "keepers of the holy places." For more than seven hendred years the Franciscans have been in possessica of almost all of those places in the Holy Land, which are the most dear to all adherents of the Christian faith-such places as the spot where Jesus was born in Bethlehem and the Holy Sepulchre in Jerusalem—and this order of monks has made of it a labor of love to restore and preserve these sacredly historic localities.

A large share of all the foeds with which this work is carried on comes from America and most of the Franciscaas who are now serving actively as "keepers of the holy places" have been educated for their task in the United States—at the impressive institution at Mount St. Sepulchre. Officially this community is designated the Chapel and College of the Holy Land and the thirty monks who meke ep the communaity are known as the Fathers of the Holy Land. Not only is this a college for the education of the young members of the order who are to go as guides and missionaries to the Holy Land, but it is also the headquarters eed business office of the Commissariat of the Holy Land. This latter is a legally organized corporation which is authorized by law to receive bequests and donations of all kinds made for the purpose of commemorative and restorative work at the holy places le Palestine. A country-wide organization of laymee known as the "Crusade for the Holy Land" is ever active in the cause and the fneds raised by the "Crusaders" or by means of the collection taken ones a year in all Catholic churches are sent to Moeet St. Sepulchre for transmission to Palestine.

With anch an inspiration it is, of course, not at all strange that the Franciscans at Mount St. Sepulchre are enabled to preeent particularly impressive services at Easter. Moreover a number of the members of the community have resided for years at a time in the Holy Land and are familier from long participation with every detail of the Easter services as conducted at the tomh of our Lord in Jerusalem. This is the case with the present superior of the community, Rev. Father Bede Oidgeerieg, who is the celebrant of the solemn high mass which is the principal feature of the Easter program.

It is doubtful if any church in America is embellished with a more leviah floral decoration than that in the Chapel of the Holy Land on Easter morning and equally notable is the speciel music by the choir of male voices made up of members of the community with one of the brethren acting as organist. The chapel at Mount St. Sepulchre, and which is all too small to eccommodate the throngs that come hither on Easter, is in the shape of a five-fold cross, the large cross forming the main body of the church and the small crosses being represented by chepels. This cross, symbolic of the five wounds of our Lord, appears again and again at Mount St. Sepulchre and a representation of it in Venetian mosaic forms the pavement of the church. The central aisle of the large cross has, at the entrance of the church, a portico which supports a gallery, while at the other end is the sanctuary. The whole interior with its rows upon rows of colamne and arches and its significent white and yellow decoration, is stately and majestic in the highest degree and affords the best poesible background for the Easter decorations.

The whole arrangement of the interior conduces to focus attention upon the sanctuary which is the main point of attraction in the church and especially so on Easter when it becomes the locale of much thet transpires. The architect who directed the erection of the duplicate of the Holy Sepulchre spent much time in Jerusalem studying the original and he hss produced a marvelously faithful and accurate replica. Two marble stairways, one on either side of the Sepulchre, lead to Mount Calvary, which forms the high altar of the visitor reaches the representation of the place where the Savior was led. From the ceiling depend memorial lamps and every detail of the tomb in Jerusalem is reproduced, even to the famous silver panel by Raphael representing the Resurrection. Above the Sepulchre, as already explained, is Mount Calvery, the altar being a replica of the one at Jerusalem. While the Sepulchre itself is naturally the climetic point of interest on Easter, services of special character are held in the church throughout the week preceding this, the most significant Sunday of the year.

Of the throngs of Easter visitors to Mount St. Sepulchre, no women and very few men are admitted to the "enclosure" of the monastery—for this institution, being designed as a college as well as a chepel, is built on the old monastic plan with a courtyerd laid out as a garden—the traditional cloister in the form of an open gallery measuring 200 feet on each of its four sides, which serves the friars for their walks on rainy days when it is inconvenient to take exercise in the open. However, visitors, though denied a peep at this sheltered retreat, are admitted to the wonderful shrines and subterranean chambers heneath the chapel and which are in large measure responsible for the rapidly growing feme of this institution.

Rssehed by flights of stone steps from the mein chapel are two underground chepels, one being a representation of the Grotto of Nazareth and the other the Grotto of Bethlehem where Jesus was born. The two grottoes are connected by means of an underground passage which duplicates in appeerance the Catacombs of Rome and this passage has at its central point a crypt in reproduction of the ancient sepulchre) chambers where an altar was erected over the tomb of some famous martyr. From this crypt another underground corridor leade to the subterranean Chepel of Poor Souls which is intended for funeral services. In these underground ehrines burn votive lampe that are never extinguished, day or night, from one end of the year to the other. These underground shrines, representative of the spot where Jesus first opened His eyes upon this world and the humble homs of the Holy Family in Nazareth, are both, as in the case of the Holy Sepulchre, exact reproductions of the originale in the fer-off Holy Land. Indeed, so faithful is the duplication even in little things that we see in its proper places the stone hanch upon the counterpert of which in the Holy Land eit the Turkish sentinels who stand guerd over the spots so hellowed by Chrietiens.

Through a second door in this fecsimile Sepulchre — an opening ever lower in height than thet above mentioned — we enter the tomb. In the middle of this, supported by a low pedestal, there is a fragment of the very stone on which the messenger of Heaven rested when he gave the glad tidings on thet memorable Easter morn. Naturally this is an object of the most intenss intereet to the Easter throng.

TWO JUDGES IN COURT.

"A man has been passing judgment on women for centuries. It is high time that a women be permitted to judge men. And I am perfectly sure that a female court would not get eway with it ot a women's tribunal, as handsome women are doing every day in courts preaided over by men."

That's what Mise Mary Coleman, lawyer ned suffragette, remarked when I called on her with the new proposel, hecked by e number of women's clubs, thet eli the officers of the women's rights court, from the magistrate down, he women.

"I don't think an all women's court would be a good thing.

"I don't thiok an all man's court is any better.

"The ideel court will exiet only when justice has gone into partiearship. In this court there will be two judges—a man and one e woman. Each will learn from the other. And they will eit jointly and pass judgment on both men and women."

"I have heard two criticisms of women as judges, especially of their own sex," I remarked. "One person says they would be too sentimental. Another writes essays on women's inhumenity to women."

"Well, we can't be both things," Miss Colemen replied, briefly. "As a metter of fect, I don't think we're either. I believe that the best justice prevails when head and heart works together, and I think this excellent combination is more often in women than in men.

"Either a man is obsolitely inflexible and cold-blooded, or he is wholly emotional. A Judge and jury of men rarely fell to be influenced by a handsome, etractive woman. But I sm equally sure that the fascinated men criminels could wield no such influence over women on the bench."

MECCA FOR LONELY

Rich Tourists Have Unique Club in Paris.

Fabulous Travelers' Club Where Rich Americans Will Meet "Desirable" French, and Avoid "Undesirable" Americans at Palva Palace.

Paris.—When very rich and prominent Americans like J. Pierpont Morgan, W. K. Vanderbilt, Jr., Frank Gould, Pierro Lorillerd-Reynolds, Jefferson de Mont Thompson—and others too numerous to mention—arrive in Peris it is with two naturel social requirements: to meet desirable French and avoid undesirable Americans.

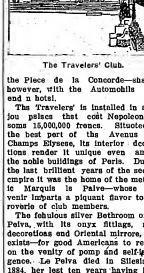
A unique Paris club, the Travelers', aids them in both ambitions. Nor does it prevent them, in spers moments, meeting and avoiding each other.

We all do it. All Americans of Paris, except simple tourists, are under a strain of meeting and avoiding. It might seem snobbish were the cause less painful; Paris is so lonely for Americans.

Hundreds of ell kinds of depressed fellow countrymen approach us in cafes or public squares and plead: "Do let me hear you talk; I'm dying for the sound of the dear home tongue!" The craving is so genuine, and the thing has been done so often, that we oil "avoid" a little.

Otherwise we would be loaded up with bores and helpless parties, bottenieg on us for emusement and society. And so it is exactly with Mr. Sharpless of Philsdelphia, Mr. Macy of New York, Mr. Keep of Chicago, Mr. Lambert of St. Louis, and all the other American members of the Travelers' club. Only more so.

It is a unique club in Paris. It is not English, French or American, but ell three in one. Americans above the tourist clcss cannot get on alone in Peris.



It is, by far, the most magnificently housed club in Paris. The Jockey club is situated above the Grand cafe. The Union Artistique has valuable grounds of the Champs Elysee; but its building is ramshackle. The Club of the Rue Royale has a slice of Gabriel's noble old columned palace on the Place de la Concorde—shered, however, with the Automobils club end a hotel.

The Travelers' is installed in a hijou peiace that cost Napoleon III. some 15,000,000 francs. Situoted in the best part of the Avenue des Champs Elysees, its interior decorations render it unique even among the noble buildings of Paris. During the last brillient years of the second empire it was the home of the meteoric Marquis de Palva—whose convenir imparts a piquant favor to the reverts of club members.

The fabulous drawing-room of Le Palva, with its onyx fittiags, ruby decorations and crystal chandeliers, still exists—for good Americans to reflect on the vanity of pomp and self-gratulence. La Palva died in Silesia in 1884, her last ten years having been spent in piety and charity.

She was a beautiful beauty of the humblest origin. Her husband was a little tailor. He disappeared. She came to Paris to seek work and turned out to be musicel. Introduced to the literary and artistic set by the musician Heinr Herz, she fascinated Napoleon the Third. A Spanish nobleman, the Marquis de Palva, married her—at Napoleon's request—to give her respectebility. She lived with the marquis in this palace pleasantly until one day, the marquis gave a great dinner party, and et dessert blew his brains out. Which gave him heck respectability. Later, she fled Paris, under suspicion es a Russian spy, leaving all her treasures behind to end her life in peace and charity. She married Bismarck's cousin, the Count Schonhausack, first governor of Alsece-Lorreine. There was a woman.

Now the Palva palace, unique for its heavy splendor, is this club house. Arsene Houssoye, in his "Confessions," tells how the reprodiction of its ceiling fired French imeginations of his day. The famous architect, Pierre Manguin, called in the leading artists of the second empire to execute his pleas. Paul Baudry, De Launey and Cerrier decorated its salons. Belleuse sculptured its marbles and painted its allegorical figures. There are panels of wood carving that took six years to execute. In all ten years were occupied. The kitchens in the basement extend under the entire building. Dinners of 110 covers have been cooked in them without straining their resources.

Easter Betrothals in Hungary

During the first centuries of the Christian church, Easter was celebrated on the same day of the Jewish Passover, because Christ rose from the dead on that day. In the early days of the church Easter was the favorite time for performing miracle plays; priests became actors, and the churches, theaters for the time being. One of the most popular of the mystery plays is based upon the cowardice of Pilate in condemning Jesus.

"Three days after the death of Christ," runs the old legend, "the pious women of Jerusalem came in a crowd to the palace of the great ruler and hurled hitter reproaches at him for his cowardice. Pilate retired to the innermost part of the palace to escape the reproaches. Still the voices of the women reached him, crying, 'Coward!' At last Pilate became so infuriated at their cries that he ordered the pretorians to drive them out by throwing water on them. This seemed effective, for the mob dispersed and quiet was restored. But to the horror and consternation of Pilate, as he passed from his palace and entered the streets of Jerusalem, the cry of 'Coward' filled the air as if from a thousand tongues.

"Nature herself takes up the curse, and a sudden shower breaks, in which every drop of rain calls the wretched man 'Coward!' The sun, the sea and the rivers take part in the great demonstration, and the word coward wrung from the heart of man forced nations not to rag in Pilate's ear until death frees him from the curse."

From this legend springs a curious custom practiced in Hungery on Eester Monday. At dawn the men of the village wait for the meiden of their choice to appear; as each sees the maiden of his heart he runs after her, and drags her, shrieking and protesting, to the nearest fountain or well, where he proceeds to drench her liberelly with water. Thoroughly drenched, the maiden is supposed to pay for the courtesy with a kiss. Often she breaks away from her tormentor, and there is a hot and merry chase until she is captured. Of comse, she is soon caught and is usually a willing victim, for this is one of the Magyar betrothal customs, and an early marriage follows the rite.

TALES OF GOTHAM AND OTHER CITIES

Chinatown Tragedy Is Cleared Up

NEW YORK.—Puzzling conditions surrounding the murder of Dr. Frederick Eugene Post, a wealthy dentist of New York city, have been cleared up, revealing a wanton crime. Dr. Post was mortally shot while in a muddled condition by John Dalton, a youthful criminal with a long record, in the presence of another man and two Chinatown women.

Information on which Dalton is charged with the crime was given to the police after much persistent questioning by Lulu Smith, 28 years old, a lodger in the Chinatown district.

"I hod known Dr. Post pretty well for n long time," she said. "He didn't have to live in Chinatown because he hod a good deal of money, but he seemed to like the life there. I knew him well enough to know he had begun to use morphine like so many of the rest of us.

"Last Thursday I went to see him. I never used to knock at the door, and when I opened it Thursday I surprised him and this May Mascell. They looked foolish. There was a blame good reason for this May Mascell looking foolish, because her fellow, Dalton, is a gunfighter. I run over to Pall street and found Dalton and his pal, John Rice. I told them what I had seen and they went back to Dr. Post's house with me. When we got there Dalton and Rice pulled their guns and Dalton shot the door.

"Now," he soys to Dr. Post, "I've got you right. I'm going to give it to you now."

"He oad Rice jumped on Dr. Post. When they had gotten all the doctor's clothes off they tacked him up sgniast a well and Dalton shoved his revolver ngainst Dr. Post's body and fired. Dr. Post screamed and Dalton fired again. Then he and Rice put their revolvers back in their pockets and walked out." Dr. Post was taken to o New York hospital and died o few hours inter.

Hall and Churches for Courting

CHICAGO.—Lady Tennessee Claflin Cook has become the champion of Chicago tyrants, and would introduce a system in the churches whereby young men and women would be enabled to abandon the street corner as the place of meeting and courting, out of sight of unsympathetic parents. She would furnish halls and churches where they might carry on their love-making unmolested, but under the supervision of not only the church, but also of the state.

Lady Cook at heart is a matchmaker, and says she is proud of it. She declares the reason for so many unhappy marriages is that the young men and women have no real chance to become well acquainted before matrimony.

In her apartments at the Congress hotel, surrounded with flowers, books and candy, tributes from her Chicago admirers, Lady Cook told her views on love-making.

"Yes, I am a matchmaker. Why not? I am proud to be one. There is no better work that a person can do than to start the boys and girls on the right path to a happy marriage. What I would do is to open the churches which lie idle all week and there allow the young people to meet.

"I would it not be better for those young men and girls to meet in a holy place and become acquainted than to be forced to use the street corner as a meeting place? Boys could come from the streets and meet girls who otherwise would be forced to stay at home.

"Some people say that the sexes should be kept apart. I say that it is natural for boys and girls to grow up together to pure man and womanhood, and that this plan will aid in their doing so.

"At these meetings there should be present some older person—he may be a minister or not—who will supervise the whole plan. If this idea were followed, allowing the boys and girls to really know each other, great good would be accomplished.

She Runs Hotel for Good of Town

COUNCIL GROVE, Kan.—Running a hotel for the good of the town is the last word in civic pride and profit for this degree of patriotism belongs to Mrs. Lewis Meade.

Her husband is president of a bank here and amply able to furnish his wife with any money she needs for enjoying life, but she continues to manage the Cottage hotel, much to the satisfaction of her regular boarders and the traveling public.

Twenty years ago Meade sold his hardware business and bought control of a national bank. He and his wife decided they would build a new house and bought a desirable lot on which there was a hoarding house, intending to remove the building and erect a modern home.

The house was full of boarders when they came into poeession and all were told to find other places. Two of them begged so hard to ha allowed to remain that Mrs. Meade yielded and she has been in the business ever since.

"I can't tell you whether it pays to run a hotel," said Banker Meade, when asked about the profits of "The Cottage," "because if there are any profits they go to Mrs. Meade and if there is a deficit it comes to me. The deficits, however, do not come often. What we like about this hotel business that we were forced into is that we are able to furnish a comfortable home for strangers who come here and that is profit enough so long as Mrs. Meada likes to run the place and she seems to enjoy it."

Like Miracles to Mountain Folk

NASHVILLE, Tenn.—Mountaineers regard as miracles the hookworm cures recently performed in Tennessee. The state has 70,000 hookworm out and they have discovered about 1,000 cases since last July.

These field workers do not treat cases unless there is no other physician available. The plan is for the field worker to travel through the country calling upon such persons as are reported suffering for a prolonged period. He explains his mission and asks permission to make the hookwork investigation. If a diagnosis shows the hookworm disease, he calls in the family physiaan and gives him the data obtained and consults with him as to treatment. Dr. Olla West of Nashville says:

"In middin Tennessee a little boy who had had been flat on his back for three years walked six miiiat to see a field doctor and walked home again the same afternoon. This was within a month afar his first treatment."

A woman who had been doctored for years for heart trouble was treated for hookworm and a complete recovery followed.

"We are literally taking them out of their beds," says Dr. West, "and many cases are reported of man bedridden for several years who are now able to work."

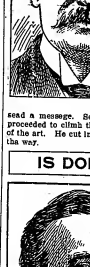
While this hookworm campaign is on the field workers are making reports on sewerage, sanitation, tuberculosis and typhoid fever.

Secret Chinese Industry.

Ever since Hongkong was established vermilion making, entirely in the hands of the Chinese, has been an important industry. The secret of manufacture is kept inviolate from European knowledge. The Chinese made artificial cinnabar long before Europe was a civilised country.

IN THE PUBLIC EYE

TO REDUCE COST OF LIVING



With this spring the city of Memphis, Tenn., inaugurates an experiment which, it is believed, by the foremost authority in the farmers' co-operative demonstration work in Washington will prove the practicability of a plan capable of reducing the cost of living in America by the cost of living in America by reducing it half that amount.

Dr. B. A. Knapp, the chief of the co-operative demonstration office in the department of agriculture at Washington, in announcing the inauguration of the Memphis experiment, dwells particularly on the efficiency of boys in showing that, by the use of proper modern methods, enormously increased crops can be raised on ground which gave previously but meager returns to the toil and the crude systems in vogue among the men farmers of their respective districts. In brief, the corn-club plan is to be applied to town lots and back yards.

The plan, not altogether novel in its central features, yet truly astounding in the imposing magnitude contemplated, proposes that every family in the United States shall utilize the spare ground attached to its dwelling in the raising of the vegetables used on the home table. It is obviously impossible to shut one's eyes to the fact that there are many thousands, perhaps millions, of families who, living in city localities so densely populated and so completely bricked, have no spare ground available for even a foot of parsley.

ONCE A TELEGRAPH OPERATOR

United States Senator George S. Nixon of Nevada is a man of varied attainments. He never held an office in his life except one term in the state legislature as a state representative until he was sent to the United States senate. Senator Nixon got his start in life as a telegraph operator. It must have been mighty paying, as he is now the owner of sevoreI banks, land and a theatar or two, all of which would be worth at least 20 millions of dollars.

A story of one of his feats of telegraphy has recently been told. He was on one of the California limiteds a few years ago, when there was a wreck. They were away off in the wilds where, so to speak, with the methods of communication of that day, the conductor of the limited said that they had a telegraph instrument aboord and always carried it, but unfortunately there was no one that could send a message. Senator Nixon heard him, called for the instrument, and proceeded to climb the nearest telegraph pole with all the agility of one born of the art. He cut in, and in less than five minutes a wrecking train was on the way.

IS DOING MUCH FOR PEACE

Never before has the peace movement evoked such unanimous enthusiasm in Great Britain. The most striking fact is the cordial response given by the German official press to the overtures of Foreign Minister Sir Edward Grey.

Of all the great European newspapers the Paris Temps alone strikes a discordant note, but its cynical doubts are drowned by the cordial welcome extended to the movement by the other French papers.

Sir Edward Grey himself is optimistic, and he is a man of singularly calm and unemotional character. Peace advocates here, while warmly appreciating his work, wish that he was endowed with more fire and energy to avail himself of the present temper on both sides of the Atlantic, to make an immediate and decisive advance in the good work. Thoroughly sincere, determined and single-minded, Sir Edward Grey lacks the touch of imagination that might at the moment arouse the people of Europe to a full sense of the folly and barbarism of armaments and war.

MEXICO'S NEW AMBASSADOR

The latest addition to the diplomatic corps at the nation's capital is Manuel de Zamacona e Inclan, who was selected by President Diaz as Mexican ambassador to the United States as a successor of Francisco Leon de la Barra, who has accepted the post of minister of foreign affairs in the new Diaz cabinet. Senor Inclan is at present the financial representative of the government of Mexico in London. He has had considerable experience in diplomacy.

He studied in the United States and Europe when a young man, and in 1876-80 filled the position of attache to the Mexican legation in Washington while his father, Manuel M. de Zamacona, was minister. From 1880 to 1895 he was secretary to the local board of the Mexican Central railway. From 1895 to 1897 he was paymaster to the military commandery of the federal district and administrator of the stamp tax at Inclnca, capital of the mining state of Hildalgo. From 1897 to 1902 he was postmaster general of Mexico, and on April 16, 1902, he was promoted to be treasurer of the nation. The new ambassador is 51 years old.

WASHINGTON GOSSIP

Illinois Is Ahead in Absenteeism

WASHINGTON.—Illinois still holds the national championship for long distance statesmanship in congress. The complete congressional record for the last session just issued establishes the state's claim to this distinction beyond any doubt.

No other delegation even approaches the mark set by Illinois in the number of congressmen absent at all times, the number of roll calls missed by each and the total number of days each was away during the session.

While none of the Illinois representatives achieved the distinction of representing his district without once appearing at the capital, there were several who outdid all former feats and approached remarkably close to this goal. Unfortunately they were handicapped by the provision of the law for the payment of salaries.

A member may draw his salary of $7,500 a year, his $1,500 allowance for clerk hire, and $125 for stationery without coming to Washington, but it is necessary for him to appear at least once in order to receive his traveling allowance of 20 cents a mile.

It is doubtful if an absolutely perfect record of nonattendance ever will be made even by one of the Illinois champions, unless this irksome requirement of the mileage provision should be modified. The generous allowance makes it a real object for a congressman to come to Washington at least once each session.

Unsophisticated persons may suppose representatives who attend a session of congress only a few days of the entire period refrain, as a matter of propriety, from drawing their entire salary, or perhaps return it to the treasury.

For the information of such he it stated the cashier in the office of the sergeant at arms was asked if any member of the house had not drawn his salary for the last congress or had refunded it for any reason.

"Members of the house refund salary!" exclaimed the official. "Never knew it to happen, and I've been here sixteen years."

President Loves Innocent Jest

"LIFE is a jest, and all things show it:
I thought so once, and now I know it."

sang the poet Gay, and although the president appreciates the necessity of upholding the dignity of the chief executive, still, like Oliver Cromwell, he "loves an innocent jest."

He was to attend a fashionable bazear held at the New Willard for a sweet charity's sake, and started out accompanied by Capt. Butt and two secret service guards, Messrs. Sloan and Wheeler and Secretary Joe Mitchell Chapple in the National.

The party was cordially welcomed by the reception committee, and were about to be permitted to enter the hall when the president whimsically decided to pay his way in like the other patrons of the charity. Walking up to a desk where the tickets were on sale, he inquired: "How much are the tickets?"

"Two dollars," replied the young lady in charge sweetly.

Plunging into his spacious trousers' pocket, the presidentiel right head brought forth two one dollar bills, which he pessed to the ticket seller, and nodding to his trio of companions, he entered the hall.

"Lend me two dollars, Jack," whispered Captain Butt to Wheeler, "left my money at home."

"So did I," mourned Wheeler. (The party were attired in dress suits.)

"Never mind, I'll take care of you both," heetily offered Jimmie Sloan, with becoming magnanimity. The others breethed a sigh of relief as he approached the desk. "Three tickets, please," he announced calmly, producing a crisp five-dollar bill.

"Another dollar, please," gently remarked the young lady at the bazear.

"Another dollar! H—how m—much did you say those tickets were?" demended James.

"Two dollers each."

Jimmie was blushing a rosy red when Wheeler came to the rescue. A passing bell-boy was taken by the collar and a few of the morning's tips were removed from his inside pocket. Then four silver quarters were placed triumphantly upon the table, and the three passed inside.

As Breeding Ground for Alaska

AN odd plan is on foot to make the Coloredo mountains a sort of proving ground for agriculture in Alaska. Of course, there are a good many kinds of agriculture in Alaska that not need proving. They are already an established success, both scientifically and commercially. Hundreds of tons of potatoes, oats and cabbage are grown and sold in the territory each year and there are a dozen other successful crops.

But Alaskan nights are too cool to mature string beans and corn, for instance, and the question is whether hardy, cold-resistant varieties could not be produced by selective breeding that would give Alaskans all the fresh luxuries from their garden that the states have.

There are farms in the Colorado mountains near Denver that have an elevation of nearly 10,000 feet and the conditions at this altitude in Colorado are almost identical with conditions at 1,000 feet elevation near the arctic circle. That is the days are warm and sunshiny, but the nights are almost cold even in summer, while the severe winters are apt to kill all but the hardiest perennials.

A bill was recently introduced into congress for the establishment of just such work in Colorado and also for experiments that would breed drought-resistant vegetables for the desert.

Lack of Horses Alarms Officers

ARMY officers and department of agriculture experts are uneasy over the lack of proper horses in the country for use of the cavalry and artillery in case of war.

A comprehensive report on the subject has been published by the bureau of animal industry of the war department. It appears that there is much trouble in finding suitable horses for the army in time of peace, to say nothing of the demands that would be made in case of war of any magnitude.

In this country now are about 23,000,000 horses. It would seem that out of this number there would be an ample number for the equipment of the cavalry and for artillery and other army uses in case of war, but in an article on breeding horses for the United States Senator George S. ELIMINATING SPACE.

Or devices for the elimination of space there is no end. There can be none, until the people stop progressing. Occasionally, a project is proposed of more than usual daring. The particular prize for which the commercial world is now striving is the irndo of South America, says the Cleveland Plain Dealer. North America and Europe each want the bulk of it. The natural advantage which this continent possesses has so far been more than balanced by European aggressiveness. And now Europe proposes to cut in two the time distance that separates her from the object of her commercial longing. It is figured that five days are long enough to transport European goods to South American consumers. To establish such a schedule involves engineering and financial difficulties which may, of course, finally prove its impossibility. By reliable parties the "Ibero-Afro-American railway is proposed, first, to cross Spain to Gibraltar, where ferry boats will transport trains to the African coast; thence run to Batlhurst, the nearest point to South America. From Bathurst to Pernambuco, Brezil, is but a three-day run for fast steamers. The cost of carrying out this project, daring as it seems, would be but a mere fraction of what the United States alona is paying for the Panama canal. And a half dozen European nations would be benefited by it. It seems by no means impossible.

An unusually peculiar damage suit has just been decided in New York by which the widow of a fire chief has been awarded $25,000 for the loss of his life in a furniture establishment fire. The chief fell through an open well hole in the building into a cellar half filled with water and was drowned before he could be rescued. The open well hole was in violation of a city ordinance. This suit, with its large damages, will help to emphasize the highly important fact that such ordinances are intended to prevent just such accidents, and that disregard of them leads to criminal and civic liability when a life is lost. There are many ordinances of the kind hold lightly in regard until a fatal accident shocks the authorities into enforcement.

Since it has been decided to establish municipal baths for the smallpox at Coney Island, other and ever more ambitious plans for its improvement have been formulated. These include a continuous walk and drive along the entire five miles of its water front, and a new bulkhead line, which has been authorized by government engineers. A contract has been let for a rip-rap wall, forty feet thick at its base and twenty feet at the top, surmounted by a concrete wall. This will protect the island from those periodic invasions by the Atlantic which have frequently been quite destructive. All of which is expected to attract a higher average of patronage than the resort has hitherto enjoyed.

The barbers of Annapolis have appealed to the secretary of the navy to compel the musicians in the Academy band who have opened barber shops "on the side" to abandon competition with local tonsorial artists. From the consumer's point of view there may be poor expectation of getting a velvet shava from the band that hammers the bass drum, although this is offset by the prospect of an expert massage from the nimble-fingered flutist. Possibly the barbers, per se, may force the issue by carrying the war into Africa, form a band of their own and serenade the commandant at unwonted tours.

Alfred Giraudet, professor of operatic expression at the Paris Conservatoire, says that he knows there must be good voices somewhere in the United States, but that thousands of the Americans who apply for instruction in singing are terribly handicapped by never having studied piano-playing. If the gifted Frenchman's statement increases the number of young Americans who take lessons on the piano, he will incur the resentment of folks who live next door.

A certain minister of the Gospel hailing from New Zealand advocates a plan to tattoo the chins of married women to distinguish them from their unmarried sisters. If a mark were tattooed for every marriage, some of our society queens would resemble picture galleries.

STORM KILLS MANY

WESTERN TOWNS ARE SWEPT BY TORNADO AND TWO ARE WIPED OUT.

NEARLY 100 PERSONS HURT

Whiting, Kan., and Big Haart, Okla., Devastated—Fort Leavenworth is Hit—Many Buildings Reported Destroyed—Wires Are Down.

Kansas City, Mo.—Thirteen persons are known to be dead, two towns practically wiped out, almost a hundred persons injured, scores of buildings wrecked, and almost every telegraph and telephone put out of commission by a heavy windstorm, which in some places attained the velocity of a tornado and which was accompanied by rain, hail and lightning, that swept over western Missouri, Kansas and Oklahoma Wednesday.

Leavenworth, Kan., is reported devestated. Many government buildings are said to have been destroyed and business houses in the city wrecked. The damage to farming property in the surrounding country is great. All wire communication with Leavenworth is cut off. It is known the storm swept a wide area, and immense destruction of property undoubtedly has occurred.

The tornado levied its greatest toll of dead at Big Heart, Okla., where eight persons were killed, ten injured, and almost every building in the town wrecked. Whiting, Kan., was practically wiped off the map, 40 buildings being blown down, 30 people hurt and Mrs. David Stone killed.

At Powhatan, Kan., a woman and child were killed. A high school building was wrecked at Eskridge, Kan., a number of houses damaged and from fifteen to twenty persons injured.

At Hiawatha, Kan., school was blown down, an eight-year-old boy named Felton was killed and several buildings were struck by lightning. Several persons are known to have been hurt at Netawaka, Kan. A boy was killed at Manville, Kan.

The Kansas end of the tornado started near Whiting and swept in a southeasterly direction for a distance of more than fifty miles.

It is thought that many more people were killed and injured than have been reported at this time. Telephone and telegraph crews are working to get the wires in shape. It is a big task, as only one wire was left intact between Kansas City and Topeka, and telegraph communication between Kansas City and Oklahoma points was cut off.

IOWA DEADLOCK ENDS

W. S. KENYON IS ELECTED U. S. SENATOR.

Succeeds Lafayette Young and Will Be One of Youngest Members in Upper House of Congress.

Des Moines, Ia.—W. S. Kenyon was elected United States senator by the Iowa legislature Wednesday. Voting on senator has been going on since January. 13, and nearly 100 ballots have been taken. Mr. Kenyon is to succeed Lafayette Young, editor of the Des Moines Capital.

The action of the legislature ends a deadlock which bes existed since the beginning of the session and is a victory for the progressives.

The election followed a stormy session. Mr. Kenyon received 85 votes to 19 for Supreme Court Justice Horace D. Deemer, his Republican opponent, the candidate of the "stand-patters."

The deadlock has existed since January 17, when the first ballot was taken. At that time Senator Lafayette Young, the present incumbent, was the leading opponent of Mr. Kenyon, but was succeeded by Justice Deemer on the twenty-third ballot, about six weeks ago.

Mr. Kenyon will be one of the youngest members of the senate. He was born in Elyria, O., June 10, 1869. His father was a Congregational minister. He was educated at Grinnell, and later was graduated from the law department of the University of Iowa.

He was elected circuit judge when he was barely thirty years old, but left the bench after one year and became the general counsel for the Illinois Central railroad.

A year ago last month he was appointed assistant to the attorney general of the United States, and succeeded Wade Ellis as the "official trust buster" of the attorney's office.

IS LIBERAL TO INSURGENTS

Minority Leader Mann Announces Assignment of Republican Members on House Committees.

Washington.—House Minority Leader Mann announced the Republican assignments to committees Tuesday. Every leading progressive or "insurgent" was given an important committee. The house elected the committees, both Democratic and Republican members, without change or objection.

Mr. Mann takes as his only committee assignment that of chairman of the committee of the minority. It is a new chairmanship and indicates Mr. Mann's purpose to substitute conferences of party leaders for party caucuses on legislative matters wherever possible. Former Speaker Cannon was given ranking minority membership on the appropriation committee, an assignment for which he asked.

HINES UNDER FIRE

BUSINESS RIVAL TELLS OF LUMBERMAN'S BOAST ABOUT LORIMER'S ELECTION.

THOUGHT IT WAS EGOTISM

Packer Tilden Objects to Giving Inquiry Committee Access to His Bank Deposit Records—Marquette Developments Are Related.

Springfield, Ill.—Edward Tilden, the Chicago packer, was a witness before the Helm committee here Thursday. He is alleged to have been treasurer of the Lorimer $100,000 fund.

After naming the different banks in which he carries accounts, he declared he had strenuous objections to giving up his records of deposits in the Drexers' Deposit National bank, of which he is president. The questions of Attorney Healy, conducting the examination for the committee, brought out that a subpoena had been issued for these papers, but that they had not been obtained.

Mr. Tilden was served with a subpoena duces tecum to produce the books and accounts of his bank desired by the committee.

Herman H. Hettler of Chicago, president of the Herman H. Hettler Lumber company, told the committee that Edward Hines declared to him he had elected Lorimer. He said he met Mr. Hines at the Union League club in Chicago May 29, 1909.

"The mailing," said Mr. Hettler, occurred by accident at the cigar stand in the club. I stopped in the Union league club on the day of Senator Lorimer's election. As I was buying some cigars I felt a tap on my shoulder. I looked around and met Mr. Hines.

"Mr. Hines was apparently elated and happy. He said: 'I have just had a telephone call from Springfield and I have elected our next senator.'

"I was not much interested in the senatorial fight and with a view of changing the subject I brought up the subject of the tariff," Mr. Hettler added. "Mr. Hines said that he had been having a great time in Washington and that he (Hines) had beaten President Taft on the tariff."

Mr. Hettler declared under cross-examination that Mr. Hines had said nothing to him regarding money or the use of improper methods in the election of Lorimer.

"I simply took Mr. Hines' actions as an outburst of personal exultation at the election. He was bragging, more or less, about the election of Mr. Lorimer."

M. B. Coan, investigator for the committee, followed Mr. Hettler with a story of a conversation of Mr. Hines with several citizens of Marquette, Mich., in which the Chicago lumberman is said to have boasted how he made from a poor boy to a millionaire and crowned his career by electing William Lorimer senator.

Mr. Coan declared that the Marquette men who had given him the story had refused to come to Illinois as witnesses because of their friendship for Mr. Hines. As a substitute for their testimony Mr. Healy has affidavits from Frank Russell, Robert C. Lowe and I. D. Mosher. The Hines company has been supplied to have been at either Bush's saloon or at a hotel bar. Russell, Selby B. Jones and Robert Culver are three of the affidavits to have been with Mr. Hines.

"We have put Lorimer over, but it cost us a lot of money," was alleged to have been Hines' boast.

HOUSE ADOPTS DIRECT VOTE

Approves 295 to 16 Constitutional Amendment for Election of Senators by the People.

Washington.—Election of United States senators by popular vote was approved by the house of representatives Thursday by a vote of 295 to 16. The constitutional amendment now goes to the senate. Senator Borah, who championed it in the last congress when the resolution failed of the necessary two-thirds majority by a margin of four votes, expressed the belief that this time the senate will give the measure half a dozen more than the necessary two-thirds and speed it on its way to adoption by the requisite number of states.

The debate lasted six hours and while spirited at all times, never dropped into partisan channels.

U. S. Troops Invade Mexico.

Agua Prieta, Sonora, Mexico.—During a battle between 55 federals and 150 rebels under the command of "Red" Lopez, which lasted all of Wednesday afternoon and resulted in the capture of this city by the rebels, American troops crossed the border and stopped the fighting. The firing was endangering the lives of Americans in United States territory.

Washington.—Andrew Zorn, the Swedish painter, who is now doing a portrait of Vice-President Sherman, will begin next week a portrait of President Taft.

WINE RIOTS SPREAD

TWELVE THOUSAND TROOPS ORDERED OUT IN MARNE.

Feared Moba Will Resort to Dynamite —One Bomb Thrown, Wounding Three Troopers.

Epernay, France.—The riots which followed the action of the senate in wiping out the territorial delimination on the champegne question is bringing forth startling developments throughout the wine districts of the department of Marne.

The frenzy of the rioters exceeds all bounds, and it is feared that they will use dynamite, a large quantity of which disappeared from the quarries last week. News comes from Ay that a bomb was thrown at the cavalry, wounding three troopers and killing a horse.

All around Epernay the country is dotted with blazing cellars, and the whole sky is aglow.

At Ay two more establishments were wrecked. Cavalry charged repeatedly, but the mob showed stubborn resistance, hurling broken bottles and stones at the men and horses.

Fed by incendiaries, a conflagration threatens all the village. The inhabitants have abandoned their houses. A regiment of cavalry arrived from Epernay. The rioters have left it in the direction of Montreuil, pursued by troopers.

Troops continue to pour into this district. It is estimated that there will be 12,000 troops on duty. The soldiers have orders to use their arms in case of resistance.

Seven thousand wine growers, well organized, are marching on Epernay, the champegne entrepot, from Damery, with the intention of destroying the wine cellars.

An important division of the wine manifestants succeeded in evoiding the troops and reached Epernay. Then the separate bands reformed and sacked several depots of champagne. Troopers charged the rioters with drawn sabers and several persons were wounded.

TOM L. JOHNSON IS DEAD

Four-Time Mayor of Cleveland Passes Away—Succumbs to Cirrhosis of the Liver.

Cleveland, Ohio, April 12.—Tom L. Johnson, former mayor of Cleveland and known throughout the nation for his fight for three-cent street car fares, died of cirrhosis of the liver. He had been ill for over two years but had been confined to his bed only since March 16. Mr. Johnson was at one time a multi-millionaire and, by his own confession a monopolist. But he was the author of the famous 3-cent fare which he will be remembered by the people of the United States long after the other phases of his career are forgotten. He was pronounced by Lincoln Steffens "the best mayor of the best-governed city in the United States."

MICHAEL S. LINK IS DEAD

Ex-Legislator Found Lifeless at Home in Southern Illinois—Laid to Apoplexy—Had Predicted the End.

St. Louis.—Michael S. Link, former member of the Illinois legislature, who was indicted by a Chicago grand jury for perjury and turned state's evidence in the investigation of the election of United States Senator William Lorimer, was discovered by his wife early Monday morning dead in a bathtub in his home at Mitchell, Ill.

Symptoms Were There.

"You husband might have a little solid food directly he begins to mend," said the doctor. "But how am I to tell?" inquired the anxious wife.

"The commonest stages of influenza," replied the doctor, "are marked by a slight irritability."

The next day he called and found the patient's wife radiant. "Wheu I refused to order his steak and onions," she explained, "he came into the kiteben and smashed fourteen soup plates and a dinner service; so, of course, I sent out for steak at once."—Stray Stories.

His Destiny.

"I wish Willie bad been born a girl!"

"Why?"

"Oh, he is such a cry baby! I wish I could do something to stop his shriveling at everything that comes up."

COFFEE CONGESTION
Causes a Variety of Ills.

A happy old lady in Wisconsin says:

"During the time I was a coffee drinker. I was subject to sick headaches, sometimes lasting 2 or 3 days, totally unfitting me for anything.

"To this affliction was added, some years ago, a trouble with my heart that was very painful, accompanied by a smothering sensation and faintness.

"Dyspepsia, also, came to make life harder by bents. I tried all sorts of patent medicines but none of them helped me for any length of time.

"The doctor finally told me that coffee was not good for me; but without coffee I felt as if I had no stimulation to my system at all. It did not 'come up' as coffee used to. The bad spells with my heart grew less and less frequent, and have ceased altogether, and I have not had an attack of sick headache for more than a year. My health in good, too, and I am thankful that I am once more a healthy woman. I know my wonderful restoration to health came from quitting coffee and using Postum." Name given by the Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich.

"There's a reason," and it is this. Coffee has a direct action on the liver with some people, and causes partial congestion of that organ preventing the natural outlet of the secretions. Then may follow biliousness, sallow skin, headaches, constipation and finally a chance of the blood corpuscles and nervous prostration.

Read the little book, "The Road to Wellville," in pkgs. "There's a Reason."

MASCOTS or PETS ON OUR WARSHIPS

ONE of the most interesting side-lights on American naval life, and one that gives insight as to the kind-heartedness of Uncle Sam's blue jackets, is afforded by the care and affection bestowed upon the mascots or pets on our warships. There is probably not a single craft, big or little, in the whole American navy, that has not its mascot, and in many instances—particularly in the case of big battleships—there are aboard anywhere from two to half a dozen pets that vie with one another for the homage due a ship's mascot.

The number of pets or mascots aboard ship depends somewhat on the good nature of the captain, for the commander of the warship has the say as to whether or not any prospective pet be allowed to find a home aboard the craft. Indeed, the naval regulations—that hulky blue-bound volume which lays down the law for everything in the navy—dignifies this subject of pets by devoting a paragraph to it. In this reference to pets in the naval book of etiquette it is set down that the officer of the deck (who corresponds to the officer of the day at a military camp) must not allow any pets to be brought aboard unless the permission of those in authority on the vessel be obtained.

However, it is only an exceptionally grouchy commander who ever makes any objection to the presence on board of any reasonable number of pets. Indeed, many a naval officer with a natural fondness for pets, has come to have a genuine affection for four-footed friends aboard ship. Moreover, the presence of pets helps to keep the seamen contented. And finally it is just as well for an officer—considering the well-known superstitions of tars—to recognize that ancient tradition of the sea which declares that the presence of certain animals aboard a ship will bring it luck.

Almost any pet having found a domicile on board a floating fortress, especially advances to the dignity of a "mascot," no matter whether the aforementioned pet belongs to one individual in the ship's company, or is the property of the crew at large. And in this connection it should be mentioned that there are several different ways in which a pet or mascot may find a berth aboard a naval craft. The most dignified entry is that made by the animal which has been officially designated in advance as the official mascot of o now warship, and is brought aboard with due ceremony at the time the vessel is placed in commission. Often such o mascot is a native of sad o donation from the state or city after which a warship is named, as, for instance, the handsome white goat which was presented to the battleship Kentucky by children of the blue grass state when that craft first went into commission.

Another favored manner of introduction for pets aboard warships is by transfer from other craft. This is apt to occur only when one vessel is being placed out of commission and another and newer craft is being placed in commission at about the same time, and presumably at the same navy yard. There have been instances when entire crews have been transferred thus from one ship to another, and even when a warship is merely being laid up for repairs and will retain A "skeleton crew" aboard it usually happens that there is quite a contingent of blujackets to be shifted to some other floating home. These boys naturally like to take with them their pets or mascots, and the officers of ships to which the tars thus transferred can seldom find much fault with mascots thus enlisted, since such veteran pets are experienced in all the ways of life aboard a warship and there is no dangar of them making trouble, as do some newcomers until they get their "sea legs."

Many a cat or dog has begun an honorable career as a "mascot" rather ingloriously by wandering aboard as a "stray" or wait; being allowed to remain on suffrage, and finally winning a place in the affections of a large portion of the ship's company. After all, however, the method most commonly in vogue in the recruiting of mascots is that whereby the individual blujacket takes aboord ship o pet that has caught his fancy on shore. Under such circumstances the tar who has discovered the mascot is accounted the owner so long as the pet remains aboard ship, and his rights of ownership are respected, however much the other jackies may pet the mascot or teach slim tricks.

The story of a warship usually prefer to have every pet thus individually owned, for it makes one individual aboord responsible for the animal; for his feeding, etc., and for his behavior. Indeed, there are so many advantages to the schema that on many ships it has become the custom to designate one enlisted man as the keeper of each pet, even though the mascot has come aboard under circumstances that make it the common property of the crew. The problem of feeding a mascot is not one that need give anybody any concern for, as may be imagined, the average naval mascot is hopelessly overfed by his indulgent masters, but the responsibility for keeping o pet in hie proper place aboord the vessel and seeing to it that he behaves, is a different matter. Especially must a sharp watch he kept on his deportment if there be several pets aboard, for then the animal jealousy that usually appears under such circumstances is fanned to a fierce fieme, and free-for-all fights on deck would be a daily occurrence, save for the vigilance of the bluejockete detailed to keep order.

Many persons who seldom visit United States warships have long been of the impression thnt dogs and cats constitute almost the sole representatives of the animal kingdom holding positions as naval mascots. This is very far from being the case. To be sure these household favorites do head the roster, numerically, of navel mascots, but they are by no means in a majority in the whole enseme of pets afloat. On the contrary, wn find included in the census of the mascots of Uncle Sam's nnvy pretty nearly every animal that could be mentioned, except the ones that are too largo to find qunrters aboard ship and thn vnry wild ones which are too ferocious to be tamed, even by the blandishments of the bluejackets. Furthermore, a wide variety of birds have proven their eligibility to classification as naval mascots.

Among the more or less dumb companions selected by Yankee tars to help enliven life aboard our warships there might he mentioned bears, Shetland ponies, monkeys, pigs, geese, deer, ducks, olive, burros, kangaroos, raccoons, canaries, parrots, an endless variety of tropical birds, and almost all the small fur-bearing animals. A warship spending most of her time along the seacoasts of the United States may have a small and circumspect lot of pets aboard, but let a vessel go on a cruise to the tropics or around the world, and she is likely to come home with n veritable menagerie aboard. Once homn ports are reached, however, such a collection is rapidly thinned out, for many of thn sailors send to their homes on shore or hostow upon friends the living trophies they hnvn brought bome, particularly the birds and monkeys and the quaint little dogs that are brought from China and Japan.

It is no morn thnn it to be rxpncted that thn pets aboard our warships are as a rule possessed of a wonderful line of accomplishments. When a warship is engaged in an extensive cruise, thn majority of the nms aboard have, at one time or another, plenty of leisure at their disposal, and they dnvnte a considerabln portion of it to teaching tricks to the pets aboard. Many persons who have witnessed thn really wonderful "stunts" done by naval mascots or have noticed four-footed mascots marching in parade with a naval battalion, and conforming to all the military orders given, have gained the impression that the bluejackets possess an especial and almost unique knack for imparting dumb animals. The secret of their success, however, lies in the devotion of much time to the task, combined with the circumstances that the tars have a seemingly inexhaustable supply of patience and an almost unfailing fund of good bumor, which, when reinforced by plentiful supplies of wrects, will ultimately win over the most stubborn furred or feathered captive.

One of the most remarkable tricks to the credit of any naval mascot is that of a fnmous cat that was domiciled aboard the cruiser Chicngo e few years ago. This cat would sit on its hind legs and "salute" with one front paw when the band played "The Star-Spangled Bennor," and eny person who knows how difficult it is to teach tricks to cats can appreciate what this performance meant. The battleship Vermont has a goat that will smoke a pipe with evident relish and one of the ships bas in a mescot e bear that will engage in wrestling matchee with members of the crew to the delight of audiences of cheering tars. Of course, the pets of our warships have fearful and wonderful vocabularies, and the monkeys ere adepte in clever tricks. Especially is this the cnse with e small rnd monkey on board the cruiser Chester. In some instances a naval pet will evince e fancy for some certain part of the ship, and will not be induced to leave it under any circumstances. A striking case in point is that of an Eskimo dog on the battleship Minnesota. He selected o bome, high up on the bridge of the vessel (possibly because it is cool and airy, and remincent of his home in the north), and he remains constantly on this lofty platform, eating and sleeping here, no matter whether the vessel be anchored in port or cruising in a beery sea.

DEMONSTRATION in METZ

Great stress is being laid in France upon on agitation that hne prevailed in Metz lately, the New York Sun says. It started one Sunday evening when a local association called La Lorraine Sportive attempted to give a concert in e room in a hotel which it had hired for the purpose. No sooner had M. Samain, the president, arisen to make an address of welcome in French than an inspector of police and eight constables took possession of the stage and announced that the concert could not be held because it was a public meeting and contrary to law.

There were loud protests, but in vain. Samain and the leader of the orchestra were arrested but the musicians went on playing. They played thn "Marche Sembre et Meuse," which is a French air. Thn trumpets sounded French fanfares. The police ordered the audience to disperse; instead it hooted the police and shonted "Vive la Lorraine!" Finally it marched out singing the "Marseillaise," the trumpets still playing.

Samain was held prisoner for more than a week. The police endeavored to get a full list of members of La Lorraine Sportive, but failed. One of its committeemen, M. Schl, was arrested, however. Samain was interrogated in court every day on charges of inciting rebellion. Public opinion remained at high tension and in the middle of it all M. Forel, a member of an old family of Metz, was elected mayor, or as the Germane prefer to say, burgomeister.

It is said one ordnr for the police action came from the central authorities of the annexed province of Strasburg. Some are of the opinion that it was designed to provoke demonstrations which would cause postponement of the new constitutional scheme for Alsace-Lorraine. In the long run the government seems to have become alarmed at thn violence of the pro-French sentiment revealed by the holdout. Of a sudden Samain and Schl were released without bail and no one seemed to know whnther they will ever be prnceded any further.

Meanwhile thn bitter feeling nganist Germenization in generally expressed in talk and finds rent in thn papers in protests against the so-called constitution as a scheme of Prussian tyranny. In France there is unmistakable emotion in all classes over what is taken to be irrefragable proof of the innate loyalty of the sundered people to the French flag.

THE ALARMING PREVALENCE OF ECZEMA

Finds Victims Among Every Race, Age and Condition.

Of all the diseases of the skin and scalp which torture and disfigure mankind, three-fourths are eczematous. Millions are born with eczema, and it is the only thing other millions have left when they die. Neglect in infancy and childhood, irritating conditions affecting the skin, ignorance of its real nature, improper remedies and many other causes that might be mentioned have created an eczeme which, with varying severity, has afflicted countless humbers during their entire lives. Eczema is a skin disease. It is not regarded as hereditary, nor contagious) and is impartially distributed among the rich and poor, the high and low. The agonizing itching and burning of the skin, causing loss of sleep, is usually the most distressing symptom and is caused by the bursting of little vesicles filled with an acrid fluid, which burns as with fire the denuded skin. Now vesicles form, fill and burst, scales form upon scales, and crusts upon crusts until disfigurement is added to torture.

One of the most successful treatments for eczema, whether applied to the youngest infant or the oldest person, is hot bathe with Cuticura Soap and gentle anointings of Cuticura ointment. For more than a generation these pure, sweet and gentle emollients bove proved the most efficient agents in the speedy and permanent relief of all forms of eczemas, rnshes, itchings and irritations of the skin and scalp. Although Cuticura soap and ointment are sold by druggists and dealers everywhere, in order that those who have suffered long and hopelessly and who have lost faith in everything may make trial of them without charge, a liberal sample of each will be mailed free to any address, together with a 32-page pamphlet, giving a description and treatment of the various forms of eczeme, as well as other affections of the skin, scalp, hair and hends—send to "Cuticura," Dept. W, Boston.

THE SUNBEAM.

BY W. G. HUNT, J

Published every Friday, at Sunbeam, Penolngton County, Minnesota.

Subscription price $1.00 per year in advance. If not paid in advance $1.50

Entered as Second-class matter August 30 1905, at the post office at Sunbeam Minn. under the Act. of Congress of March 3, 1879

County treasurer Trovaton has been kept so busy since the taxes began to be paid in that he has not had time to study law, and County Attorney Stanton has to look after the legal part, without any assistance.

Congressman Steenerson has been appointed a member of the committee postoffices and post roads. It is one of the most important committees of Congress and the people of this district are very fortunate in having our able congressman a member of it.

We have worked at almost all kinds of honerable employment, and growed up in northern Minnesota, but we never trampped around the country begging for a "hand out," and we are not going to commence now, Whether we publish your final proof notices, or not you will notsee the editor of THE SUNBEAM becomes tramp. We are to much of a farmer to run around begging "bandouts".

We are of the opinion that the early variety of dent corn can be successfuly grown here and to prove that it can we are going to plant five acres on the Sunbeam farm this year. We are, not going to give it any extra care but will cultivate it about the same as the Iowa and southern Minnesota farmers do and expect to raise about 60 bushels per acre.

Some of the city dudes that came up here looking for homesteads make the natives smile. Before they leave St. Paul they make up their mind about what kind of a farm they might homestead, discribed as follows. 40 acres of fine maple and black walnut timber, 80 acres of fine prairie land, 40 acres of meadow with a fine brook running across one corner with plenty of trout in it. A fine graded road on two sides of it, to run automobils on. If they can find a farm of this kind they might be reveiled upon to homestead it. But we are of the opinion that opportunities in homestead farms of this kind are rather scarse, but we would advise any tender foot to consult County surveyor C.H. Martz, who will tell them at what station to "get off at," and not charge them a cent for the information.

Miss May Arndt has filed a contest on a valuable claim in the town of Goodridge, and moved on and started farming very early on the morolog of April 15th,. That is what we like to see! Let the farmers have the farms. What is the use of letting Bankers and Merchants get and steal these goverement lands for speculation. They will never go on them and farm, but are taking it to make mooey on. Look up the land records, and if you want to see coo these fellows just drive to his farm and we will tell you what you will find: An empty old shanzie, with an old rusty stove pipe sticking out of the roof, and from one to five acres of land that has been broke up and left to grow up to weeds. Them are the improvements to PROVE UP ON. But if you want to see the homestead flier you have got to go to his store, bank, or law office. That is the class of people that are a detriment to the improvement of a new cotntry and the sooner that they can be weeded out and the land settled on by farmers that will farm it, the better it will be for the country.

To Subscribers.

The fact that the postoffice department will not permit weekly papers to circulate in the mails at pound rates when subscriptions are more than one year in advance is an old story. But it may be news to some that this order is being rigidly enforced and all publishers must cut off all delinquent subscribers. THE SUNBEAM, as well as nearly all publishers, regret the situation, but there is no way of evading it and we ask every subscriber to kindly put his account in shape so as to satisfy the postal department. We would sincerely regret cutting off any subscriber, but if he is not convenient for any one to pay cash we will gladly accept a note for the amount payable next fall, and credit your subscription so as to comply with the rules. We hope that everyone will realize our position and help us out.

Halcyon Days.

"Alcyone, or Halcyone, the daughter of Aeolus, married Ceyx," said the Latin professor. "And therefore, therefore, the halcyon days, the last of the year, are therefore called halcyon days—days of tranquility, a kind of very late Indian summer. Here in America we have no real halcyon days, but the myth of Alcyone and Ceyx comes from the Mediterranean, and in that blue and gold region it is a fact that the year is ushered out by a procession of still, mild, splendid days—silent and glittering days of halcyon weather."—Washington Post.

Lifting a Child.

"I wish," said the woman who has children of her own, "that women would understand the delicate mechanism of a child. How would they like a giant to come along and suddenly drag them from the ground by one arm, as I have seen so many people do to children? When you're lifting a child lift it evenly by both arms or around the waist. Don't yank it by a dyeh at one wrist and then wonder why it cries. It makes me so angry I always want to pull the arm of that inconsiderate woman hard and see if she wouldn't cry too. It's a thing that mothers and aunts and sisters ought to learn."—Philadelphia Times.

His Expectations.

"Have you 'Great Expectations?'" asked the fluffy haired maiden as she entered the circulating library and cast her large, lustrous blue eyes upon the bespectacled person at the desk. His mental equilibrium upset for the moment by her loveliness, stammered out:

"Well—er—no, miss. I can't say exactly that, but I believe I'm heir to my old aunt, who's got something just under a hundred pounds in the postoffice savings bank."—London Telegraph.

"Dr. Miles' Nervine Completely Cured Our Little Boy of Fits."

A family can suffer no greater affliction than to have a child subject to fits or epilepsy. Many a father or mother would give their all to restore such a child to health.

"I am heartily glad to tell you of our little boy who was completely cured of fits. He commenced having them at 10 years of age and had them for four years. I tried three doctors and one specialist but all of them said he could not be cured, but Dr. Miles' Restorative Nervine and Dr. Miles' Nerve and Liver Pills made a complete cure. He is now hale, hearty and gay. It has been three years since he had the last spell. I shall give Dr. Miles' medicines praise wherever I go. You are at liberty to use this letter as you see fit and anyone writing to me I will gladly answer if they enclose stamp for reply."

Dr. Miles' Nervine

is just what it is represented to be, a medicine compounded especially for nervous diseases, such as fits, spasms, St. Vitus' dance, convulsions and epilepsy. These diseases frequently lead to insanity or cause weak minds. Dr. Miles' Nervine has proven most effective in relieving these dreaded maladies.

Dr. Miles' Nervine is sold on a guarantee. If the first bottle fails to benefit your money is returned.

NATURE'S PAINT BRUSH.

Colors, Shades and Tints That Cannot Be Reproduced by Man.

Nature paints to the most striking colors and shades and tints with a delicacy never achieved by the brush in the hands of the artist. The highest ambition of the manufacturer of paints is to produce colors which look like nature's. The phare never succeded. Grass has a greee of its own. So has the leaf and so has the distant ocean. None of these has ever been reproduced and put in cons with a price label on them.

Winter apples now repose on the shelves of the paint chemists. Honor awaits the man who can combine colors to produce the tints of red of the Baldwin and Northern Spy. They come yet nearer it, that is all. The same is true of the colors with which October first touches the maple leaf.

If all the paint grinding works in the world were multiplied ten thousand times they couldn't turn out pigment enough in a year to show what nature does in a change from season to season.

Nature's brush is busy everywhere all the time. In the life of a leaf it applies the brush day by day, following with its tints from budding time until it flotters from the branch. It touches the valleys and the hills, the growing prairies, the flowering plants. Never is it idle.—New York World.

Judges' Wigs.

The wig is only worn by English barristers to give them a stern, judicial appearance, and no one can say that it fails in this respect. The custom was originated by a French judge in the seventeenth century when, happening to don a marquis' wig one day, he found it gave him such a stern and dignified appearance that he decided to get one for himself and wear it at all times in court. This he did, and the result was so satisfactory from a legal point of view that not only judges, but barristers also, took up the custom throughout Europe.—Boston Globe.

The Publisher's Claims Sustained

UNITED STATES COURT OF CLAIMS

The publishers of Webster's International Dictionary allow that it "is, in certain points, far inadvanced of any formerly issued by them," but, not content with resting upon their laurels, have labored to secure this largest and most accurate of all existing dictionaries of the English language.

We are of the opinion that this education most clearly and successfully describes the work that has been accomplished in the revised International Edition. Every word, every name, has been thoroughly verified in every part, and is succinctly adopted to meet the largest and severest requirements of a succession which demands those of popular and universal favor. Its use in the courts of last resort is unanimously recommended.

It is perhaps needless to add that we refer to the dictionary in our decisions as one of the highest authority in accuracy of definition; and that in the future as in the past it will be the source of constant reference.

Graves in China.

There are various kinds of graves in China. The graves are sometimes from twelve feet to thirteen feet below the ground, while, according to an old custom, the mounds over the graves of emperors were thirty feet in height, those of territorial lords fifteen feet and those of barons without territories and of lord stewards eight feet, while for inferior officials and common people no more than four feet in height were erected. Pines were planted on the tombs of emperors, a species of oak on those of territorial lords, a species of willow on those of barons and lord stewards and elm trees on those of inferior officials. Although the rules are territorial lords and lord stewards now in China, men of high rank still have their tombs constructed in accordance with this old custom.

He Loved His Enemies.

James MacNeill Whistler looked upon life on upon a kind of warfare and was never so happy as when he was quarreling with somebody. He is quoted as having said when asked if he did not have many friends, and I am grateful to them, but those whom most I love are my enemies, not in a Biblical sense. Oh, no, but because they keep me awake, busy, always up to the mark, either fighting them or proving them idiots."

Than He Sulked.

"Mrs. Guschley remarked to me that it must be pleasant to be married to a clever man," said Brindley's wife.

"And what did you say?" queried Prindley.

"I told her, of course, that I didn't know; that I had only been married once."

All of the farmers are busy seeding this week.

The meadows are putting on their spring coat of green.

C. L. Clark was transacting business at Highlanding Tuesday.

S. L. Holm got his ferry out of the river this week, by hitching Henry Besses stump puller on to it.

D. A. Kolstrud and Sjur Stoane were at Sunbeam Monday making application to make final proof on their homesteads.

The Red Lake River is lower now than it was at anytime last last fall, and there can not any boats be ran on it until we have some heavy rains

Better stop coughing Mark's Lung Balsam will do it. It contains no opium, it is safe for children. Can be taken several times a day as required for cough.

Henry Arndt came over to Sunbeam last Friday to exchange some of his burbank potatoes for our early markets. While here he improved the opprotunity to make application to make final proof on his homestead.

Don't neglect your cough for a minute when Mark's Lung Balsam is so handy to get. Safe and pleasant to take. Ask your store keeper for it and take no other.

P.C. Wold went down to Roland Tuesday to take insurance for the Farmers Mutual Ins. Co., of Bray. This is a safe and cheap insurance for farmers, but you have to have your chimney in proper shape

Run Away: A black bronco mare, weight about nine hundred pounds has a saddle and bridle on. Any information that will lead to her recovery will be rewarded. Address, Carl Narveson, Sunbeam Minn.

Mark's Lung Balsam is one of the best medicines for cough, croup, whooping cough, lung throat and chest trouble. Get a bottle at your nearest store, the $1.00 bottle's hold five times as much as the small bottles. Three sizes 25, 50, and $1.00.

Wm. Cousins and Andrew Ellingson both squatted on the vacant lands on section 28 on April 15th. Mr. Ellingson, the merchant has gone to St. Paul to order a big stock of spring and summer good for Ellingson Bros. store, and the farmer Cousins is busy cutting in a crop on the land, and there you are.

Charlie Erickson of Rhoda made this office a pleasent call on Wednesday. He will make final proof on his Deer Park homestead next month. Some of his friends who used to live over in Clearwater county lost their land by letting their seven years run out, and he says none of that for mine, I am going to prove up.

D.P. O'Neil and Representative Frankson from Frechorn county had a flat fight in the house of representatives Tuesday. The'dispatch did not say who got the best of it but it is to be hoped D. P. did. That's the stuff Dan, if you can't preach any sense into some of them fellows from the southern part of the state, knock it into them

The school children and teacher had quite an exciteing time fighting prairie fire Wednesday. They were raking up and burning the rubbish on the school house grounds and the fire got away from them and struck out acroass the prairie like a race horse, and did not stop until it got to Red Lake River. Walter McAndress went over and helped them to save the building on the Ellingson farm and the fire did no damage whatever, but was worth lots to the land owners, as it cleared their meadow lands of a lot of old dead grass and rubbish.

If you expect to make final proof before your seven years are out you should make your application in time to get your six weeks publication. No applications will be written at this office after your seven years are out, as your proof will then be what Senator Clapp calls a case to be delt with separatly.

HE PUNISHED GRANT.

The Cadet Was Guilty of Dismounting Without Leave.

While a student at West Point U. S. Grant excelled in mathematics and horsemanship. He jumped his horse over a bar five feet six inches high, which made a record for the academy and a close second to the highest jump ever recorded in American. He received little honor for some of his efforts, however, notably in the case recalled by Nicholas Smith in "Grant, the Man of Mystery." But perhaps the honor of it reconciled him.

The riding master was one Hershberger, "an amusing sort of Grant," and on one occasion, whether seriously or as a joke, he determined to "take down" the young cadet.

At the exercise Grant was mounted on a powerful but vicious brute that the cadets fought shy of and was put at leaping the bar.

The bar was placed higher and higher as he came round the ring till it passed the record. The stubborn rider would not say "enough," but the horse was disposed to shy and refuse to make the leap.

Grant gritted his teeth and spurred at it, but just as the horse gathered for the spring his unwilling body burst the girth, and the rider and saddle tumbled into the ring.

Half stunned, Grant gathered himself up from the dust only to hear the "strident, cynical voice" of Hershberger calling out:

"Cadet Grant, six demerits for dismounting without leave!"

Acquitted.

"Sir!" said the young woman, with what seemed to be indignation.

The young man looked embarrassed.

"Yes, I did kiss you," he admitted. "But I was impulsively insane."

"That means that a man would be a lunatic to kiss me?"

"Well, any man of discretion would be just crazy to kiss you."

This seemed to end the strain, and no jury being present to muddle affairs, a satisfactory verdict was reached

If You Do, Why Don't You Make Them Yourself—It's Dead Easy.

Many a man says that he would be glad to do chores about the house, to trim the grass or weed the garden if he had overalls.

The trouble is that when he wishes to wear overalls the stores are closed and he cannot buy them. I wonder that men do not make them for themselves.

To provide a pattern you must have an outline or perspective plan of your contour from the belt line down to the ankles. This may be obtained by sitting in wet clay and, on arising, pouring plaster of Paris in the impression. When this hardens lift the mold, lean it against the wall and obtain measurements with a tapeline. Another way is to dust talcum powder on the carpet until it is thickly coated. Then sit down on the talcum powder and carpet, thus removing the talcum from the floor where you have been. Then cut around the outlines of that impression with a sharp knife, remove the carpet so detached, and you have a pattern for one side of the overalls.

Purchase several yards of denim and cut it into the shape indicated by either pattern you have now obtained. Make two sets of these pieces and sew them edge to edge. Pockets may be made by cutting slits in the material and sewing empty salt sacks.—Wilbur D. Nesbit in Delineator.

ELECTRIC LIGHTS.

Their Use on an Important Scale Dates From 1875.

The first experimental philosopher to discover that electric light could be produced by a dry battery was Sir Humphry Davy, who in 1810 exhibited a light three inches long, between carbon points, before the Royal society of London. But no commercial value was attached to the use of electricity as an illuminant until more than half a century later. The Centennial exhibition, held in Philadelphia in 1876, really marks the era of our present form of electric light, though electric lights had been in use abroad prior to that time. The exhibition of models and practical demonstrations of electric lights at Philadelphia in 1876 attracted the attention of scientists and capitalists in this country, and the first incandescent lamps and the first arc system were put to practical use in a small way in 1878. The Brush arc light gained favor in the beginning as the most adaptable for street light ing, and Cleveland, O., the home of Charles Francis Brush, the inventor, was the initial American city to adopt the arc system for street lighting.

Since 1878 both the Brush arc system and the Edison incandescent system have developed.—Marc M. Reynolds in Moody's Magazine.

Minnesota Legislature

Proceedings at the Minnesota State Capitol for the Past Week.

St. Paul, April 12.—Superintendent Whittier of the Red Wing Training school was given a clean coat of whitewash by the lower branch of the legislature. By a vote of 53 to 30 the house cut out the heart of the majority report of the legislative investigating committee which severely censured the superintendent for his indiscriminate application of corporal punishment and recommended his removal. The report as later adopted simply contains the findings of the committee without any recommendation whatever.

This action was taken in one of the wildest scenes enacted at the present session of the Minnesota lawmaking body.

With the adoption of the report as amended the house went on record as blaming the state board of control for the conditions which exist at the Red Wing Training school and also in favor of corporal punishment. L. A. Lydiard continuingly cross-fired the board of control for its lack of interest in the state school in his opening address. He spoke as follows:

Mr. Lydiard's Speech.

"This report shows that the spirit of kindness and good will at Red Wing has been replaced by the rule of the cash. It shows that instead of recognizing the reform spirit of the institution and instead of recognizing the fact that modern thought has evolved a new method of dealing with delinquent children. Armed with a whip, the present superintendent of this institution has gone about among these unfortunates as the incarnation of the spirit of fear. Fastened to a machine or appliance, hands clenched, backs bared, these boys have received 10, 20, 30 or hamlet, many as 100 lashes.

"The superintendent is recommended for removal. His assistants must go, but fixing the blame upon these men above is a mere subterfuge.

"Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the house, the shame of Red Wing is not the asset of a mere subordinate. The members of the state board of control are responsible for that condition, and the sentiment of this state should demand the resignation of the members of that board, save one."

Motion is Made.

R. C. Dunn moved that the entire section D be stricken from the report and that it then be adopted. This was the tone of the contention. Section D declared superintendent's admission that he could not run the training school without corporal punishment and recommended that he should be removed as well as several subordinate officers. R. C. Dunn defended the superintendent.

"We have been hearing too much of this hysterical gush from kind-hearted men and women of this state," declared the gentleman from Millo Lacs. "The conditions at Red Wing have been grossly exaggerated. Superintendent Whittier in my estimate is a worthy man and a perfect gentleman. His methods may not have been absolutely correct, but he has been the victim of circumstances.

"Many people seem to think that the boys who go to Red Wing are saints. They are bad and that is the reason why they are sent there. Supt. Whittier has been cribbed for administering corporal punishment. I believe in corporal punishment when it come to dealing with boys of the class at Red Wing."

Millions Appropriated by Senate.

Just to show how easy it was to do business when they had their minds made up, the Minnesota legislature passed the omnibus appropriations bill, disposing of about $16,000,000 in the senate in less than one hour.

Only one argument was precipitated in the senate and that was over an item of $1,000. It wasn't the money involved that started that argument, but a desire to deal a crushing blow to Dr. Bracken, secretary of the state health department, that caused it. Through the entire session, many senators have expressed their disapproval of Dr. Bracken's methods, and this feeling culminated to the adoption of Senator Moonan's amendment to the appropriations bill cutting Dr. Bracken's salary from $5,000 a year to $4,000.

Senator Hackney said that many members had favored giving the state fair an agricultural building and the state university more buildings, but that perfect harmony had prevailed in committee and he commented on this wonderful unanimity that was shown by the senate in passing practically without an amendment an appropriations bill that necessarily failed to give many senators what they thought they were entitled to and what their districts were interested in.

Few Salary Cuts Made.

After a slight application of the pruning knife the house passed the omnibus bill. The bill providing for state institutions under the board of control was left practically intact. A few cuts in salaries were made on the state department bill.

W. T. Stone of Park Rapids, posing as the watchdog of the state treasury, offered nearly 20 amendments, striking out sections where salary increases were allowed for state officials. He succeeded in only two instances. The house refused a $250 increase for the deputy state auditor and an increase of $1,000 for the actuary in the state insurance department.

Dr. Stone offered several amendments which would have practically cut off the appropriation for the state board of health. In each case the amendment was defeated.

Andrew Anderson of Stillwater succeeded in amending the section governing the $325,000 appropriation for the state university. The bill provided for an annual appropriation of this amount. The Anderson amendment provided for the appropriation only for the next two years.

W. F. Kunze, W. D. Washburn and L. C. Spooner favored the handing appropriation on the ground that the board of regents in planning the future of the state university should know the amount of money that it will receive from year to year. Country members declared that it would be just as well to allow the legislature to make the appropriation every two years. The amendment was passed by a vote of 67 to 32.

Senator Heoson's malt bill prohibiting the sale of malt liquor except in saloons passed the house by a vote of 98 to 13 and now awaits the governor's signature to complete its enactment into a law.

R. C. Dunn's bill prohibiting the licensing of saloons outside of an incorporated city, village or hamlet, passed by a vote of 67 to 47.

The house passed the Lande bill giving o right of action for damages to people injured as the result of the unlawful use of firearms by others. Hoffman bill placing o license of $160 a year on district and county agents of breweries.

After a spirited debate the bill calling for an equal tax rate in every part of the state was passed by a vote of 38 to 11. As finally amended the bill called for the basis of taxation to be 33 1-3 per cent on the actual valuation. Senator Wallace, of Minneapolis, was the author of the bill.

St. Paul, April 13.—Swept aboard the Cashman handwagon by the recent Sunborn decision, which declared the reduction of Minnesota railway rates unconstitutional and confiscatory, the lower branch of the legislature passed the Cronin railroad tariff bill by a close vote of 62 to 56. The bill is now up to the senate, where Senator Cashman, its champion of many years' standing, will attempt to press it to a final vote. The bill which took its present several weeks ago is now claimed by its advocates to have the support of a majority of the senators and as admitted by its opponents to have more than an even chance of becoming o law.

The bill which as introduced was an exact copy of the Cashmun measure was amended extensively by its authors. As introduced it provided for accepting passenger rates from its effect and making it become effective on Jan. 1, 1912. It was also changed so as to discriminate between the large and the small railroad companies. It allows the railroad and warehouse commission to agree upon the maximum rates which may be charged by the companies and provides that the railways should be divided into three classes, the classes ranging from the smaller amount of gross earnings being allowed a higher maximum rate than the larger companies.

With these exceptions, the bill is on exact copy of the Iowa distance tariff law. It simply means that there shall be no variance to railway rates in any part of the state. Railroads can charge no more for carrying a like quantity nod like quantity of product for a distance of one mile or one part of its line than another. In other words, if the company charges five cents to carry one ton of hay one mile out of Winona, it must charge the same rate out of Duluth or out of any other town in the state.

The speaker in a strong appeal for southern Minnesota declared that it was pretty near time that some thing was done to eliminate the unjust discrimination which exists in favor of the cities in railway rates. He pointed out that rates in which the large cities are favored are much lower than those given the country districts and that as a result the cities have shown an abnormal gain in population to the detriment of the country districts.

Mr. Dunn also referred rates which exist in the country districts of the state and compared them with the rates in Iowa, where a distance tariff bill exists, to show the unfairness of the present schedule.

Speaker Dunn in his speech sounded the city against. As country cry was was evident during the debate which lasted for nearly three hours. When the final vote was taken the members representing Minneapolis, St. Paul, Duluth, St. Cloud, Winona and Mankato lined up almost solidly against the bill, while the country members favored it. When the roll call was completed the vote stood 62 for the bill and 56 against, which was one short of passing. Before the vote had been announced by the chair, Andrew Anderson, or Stillwater, and Frank Kelly, of Madella, changed their votes from nays, thereby passing the bill. Great excitement prevailed when Speaker Dunn moved that the vote be reconsidered and expressed the desire that the motion be lost. The eyes and nays were again demanded and the motion lost by a vote of 70 to 47.

The Final Vote.

The roll call was as follows:

Yees—Aker, Anderson, Andraw, Anderson, A. V. Anderson, J. J., Bouck, Brown, G. W., Brown, D., Bricelo, Conley, Convarse, Crane, Davies, Davis, Denzer, Dieszner, Dunn, H. H. Farley, Frahlson, Haffins, Hanley, Hague, Henion, Hoffman, Hopkins, Johnson, C. E., Johnson, J. N., Johnson, J. T., Kelly, Kliemer, Knutson, Lee I. J., Lee, J. F., Lee, S. N., Lindberg, McKenzie, McMartin, Micette, Morier ity, Nelson, A. Nygren, Papke, Peters Peterson, A. J., Peterson, O., Putman Reed, Robertson, Robinson, Rustad Saggau, Sampson, Schwartz, Skeen Stone, W. T., Sulerud, Utechi, Virtue Vorland, Warner, C. H., Warner, E. Wescott, White, Whiting.

Nays—Boothroyd, Borgen, Burnquist, Campbell, Crane, Congdon, Davis, Dunn, R. G., Edwards, Ferguson Fowler, Fuchs, Greene, Healy, Herberg, Hillman, Holmberg, Hoyt, Hurley, Jellnek, Just, Keefe, Knepp, Koenig, Kunze, Lennon, Liberal, Lundeen Lydiard, McDonald, McNeil, Matteen Mettlog, Morton, Nash, Nelson, H. Nolan, Nye, O'Brien, O'Neil, Orr Palmer, Perry, Peterson, J. H. Preseler, Rheocck, Rice, Rines, Schuler Sessenbrenner, Stone, C. B., Sullivan, Thiel en, Untiedt, Washburn, Weis, Winkelwski.

Gov Peterson's bill appropriating $5,000 for o monument over the grave of the late John A. Johnson passed the house by a vote of 97 to 1.

The Koure-Hopkin-Johnson bill repealing the law making it a misde meanor to attempt suicide passed by a vote of 69 to 9.

A Bill to make wills and test laments void unless there were written evidence of the will, was passed by the seonte. Senators Fossem and Wilson of Minneapolis were the leaders of the bill.

The house passed the Hennepin county delegation bill allowing the city of Minneapolis to issue bonds for the purpose of developing the waterpower by the city.

The blow at brewcries which own or operate saloons was aimed in a joint resolution introduced by Senator Sundstad. It directs tha attorney general to dissolve all brewlog corporations owning saloons.

St. Paul, April 14.—There will be no extra session of the legislature following the defeat of reapportion in the senate. Governor Eberhart has decided it would be better to wait an extra session. The governor feels the responsibility for the defeat of reapportionment has been definitely passed the lower house of the legislature by a vote of 107 to 14 after a series of amendments were adopted. The principal amendment included judges of the supreme, district and municipal courts.

The bill does not allow the appointion of the recall until it goes into the official hal taken office. Members of the legislature, however, would be subject to be by as soon as they had filed their oaths of office.

Automobilists without licenses will be subject to arrest, according to a house bill passed by the seonte. No licenses will be issued to drivers under 15 years of age. The original bill required that an applicent be 18 years of age.

A department of weights and measures was created by tha passage of a bill by Senator Fossem. The bill introduced in the house by Representative Nash, had already passed that body. It creates a state department to keep absolutely accurate weights and measures by which the whole state can be regulated. The state standards will be regulated. The state standards will be checked up annually with those of the federal government at Washington.

The house got down to work and passed about 30 bills. G. H. Sullivan's bill abolishing the fixed term sentences of criminals, was adopted by a unanimous vote. The bill provides that all prisonars ha sentenced on the reformatory plan and who are released until tha prison authorities believe that a reform has been affected.

The Farley bill, abolishing the poll tax and providing for a cash payment of road tax, passed without a dissenting vote. Clinton Robinson's bill providing a severa penalty for persons convicted of carrying on a white slave traffic, passed without objection.

REPUBLIC PROCLAIMED.

Spain's King Has Another Incipent Revolution.

Madrid, Spain. — A republic has been proclaimed at Comillas de Acetune, in the province of Malaga. The populace of the town rebelled against the royal authority and attacked tha barracks of the civil guard.

Several persons were wounded in the fifhting that followed. Reinforcements of troops are being hurried to the scene.

SUICIDE IS VERDICT.

In the Case of the Death of Craige Lippincott.

Philadelphia, Penn.—A coroner's jury, empaneled to inquire into the death on Thursday of Craige Lippincott, president of the J. B. Lippincott Company, publishers, rendered a verdict of suicide. The inquest was brief. Members of the family were not called as witnesses, instead their sworn depositions were read and accepted by the coroner.

ACQUIT LABOR IMPORTERS.

Who Took Laborers to Rainy River, Ont., From St. Paul.

Toronto, Ont. — Justice Sutherland quashed the conviction of Johnson and Carey of Rainy River, who were fined $200 by Judge Fitch of that place for a breach of the alien labor act for bringing in railway laborers from St. Paul. The conviction is quashed on the ground that the consent to prosecution required by the statute had not been filed.

POINT OUT DEFECTS

ATTORNEY GEORGE SPEAR FINDS NEW CONVENTION BILL MISFIT IN BIG DIVISIONS.

POLITICAL ABUSES ARE FEARED

Races Lawyer of Fifteenth District Cites Supreme Court Nominations as Endangered by Legislation.

Grand Rapids.—The lawyers of the Fifteenth judicial district are not pleased with the pending bill providing for the election of the delegates to district judicial conventions, and also for the selection of delegates at the district judicial conventions to the state judicial convention.

George Spear, well known in this district and formerly prosecuting attorney for Itasca county, points out two objections from the standpoint of the people of the larger districts. The Fifteenth district, in which Grand Rapids is located, is composed of eight counties and is over 150 miles long and hundred miles wide. While the primaries might elect delegates to a convention in that district, Mr. Spear thinks that where there was no party organization and not the ordinary inducement to influence delegates in attending a convention, it would not be reasonable to expect many from remote parts of the district to attend a convention held, for instance, at Grand Rapids.

Few Likely to Attend.

The location of the convention, it will be remembered, is according to the terms of the bill, to be determined by the secretary of state. If for any reason he should select International Falls on the northern boundary, it is safe to say that very few delegates from the southern part of the district would attend and pay their own expenses. The case would not be important as much if the convention was located anywhere along the Great Northern railroad, so far as delegates in Minneapolis and Aitkin are concerned, or from Koochiching county.

The same difficulties occur in a less degree in the Seventh district, which exteods from Clay county, of which Moorhead is the principal town on the northwest to Stearns county, west of the river, and Mille Lacc county, on the east. That would open the door for political manipulation through tha payment of railroad fares for delegates or proxies, and, in Mr. Spear's opinion, is also subject to more politics more than it has been heretofore.

Other districts present problems nearly as difficult to solve in respect to the distence to be traveled by delegates.

Political Manipulation Feared.

The bill provides, also, that the district convention shall select delegates to the state convention. Here again, Mr. Spear suggests the opportunity created for political manipulatiio, if, for instance, the district convention could be left in doubt as to what delegates from all parts of the district, the delegates to the state convention would be left in the hands of those who might seize the opportunity to pack the state convention with delegates in the interests of some particular candidate.

If it were desired, Mr. Spear holds, the present legislature could not be unmindful of the supreme court might be improperly influenced, the provisions of this bill would seem to provide them.

He contends that the present conditions do not apply in the smaller districts, where delegates to a judicial convention could be gotten together more easily and a more general and fair representation expected, but the conditions are quite wide and, in his judgment, are going to create exceedingly unsatisfactory conditions in many of the larger districts.

He recognizes the weaknesses of the primary system and concedes the evil and wrong intent of the framers of the bill, but believes that they have not thoroughly considered all the conditions which must exist and have not realized tha opportunities they create for the introduction of policies into the selection not only of judges of the district court, but members of the supreme court as wall.

FREE DELIVERY OF MAIL.

Promised by P. O. Department For Two Harbors.

Washington.—Free postal delivery for Two Harbors, Minn., is promised by the postoffice department as soon as the postoffice of the city is moved into new and larger quarters. Two Harbors is entitled to free delivery as a volume of business done by the postoffice. Representative Miller took the matter up with tha department today and was assured that it would be granted.

As Result of Injuries Received in Minneapolis Trifluno Fire.

Seattle, Wash. — Charles Alf Williams, aged 51 years, assistant managing editor of the Seattle Times, is dead as the result of injuries received in The Minneapolis Tribune fire on November 30, 1889, when eight persons were killed and tha lives of 40 more were saved by the heroism of Williams, then managing editor of The Tribune.

POLITICAL RIVALS UNITED.

Son of James A. Tawney to Wed Daughter of Frank Day.

Minneapolis. — Two of tha bitterest political rivals in tha county, both of them sons of Minnesota, are to be united by ties of marriage, according to the rumors.

Everett Tawney, of the United States customs service, and son of former Congressman James A. Tawney, of Winona, who went down to defeat in the recent election, is to marry Miss Constance Day, graduate of the University of Minnesota and daughter of Frank Day, private secretary to the late Governor Johnson, and for years chairman of the Minnesota Democratic committee, maker of all its platforms and pilot of its candidates.

Miss Day at present is teaching in a school in upper Minnesota, while young Mr. Tawney is with the customs service in Washington, D. C., but recently won a transfar to the St. Paul district.

The fathers of the young man and the girl have been on opposite sides of all political issues for a number of years and always have been opposed to each other to the utmost. Outside of politics they were the best of friends.

The wedding will take place some time oext fall.

PRESBYTERY MEETS.

St. Paul Churches and Those of Adjoining Towns Make Reports.

Stillwater.—The Presbytery of St. Paul held an all-day session in the First Presbyterian church here. Reports were heard from the several churches in St. Paul, Stillwater, White Bear, Red Wing, Hastings, St. Croix Falls and Forest Lake, which were discussed by the fifty-two ministers and lay delegates.

The following were elected:

The Rev. M. M. Maxwell, Red Wing, moderstor; the Rev. J. C. Rohinson, White Bear, clerk; delegates to the general conference, which meets in Atlantic City, N. J., the third Thursday in May, the Rev. W. E. Shirley, St. Paul, the C. P. Fiske, Forest Lake; Dr. T. C. Clerk, Stillwater; Thomas H. Dickson, St. Paul.

The ladies' aiding women of the church served dinner in the parlors and a number of short-after-dioer speeches were given.

EDITOR NEEDS MONEY.

A. J. Good, of "Fedaralists," Tries to Enlist Country in Vice Crusade.

Sauk Center.—Andrew J. Good, of Minneapolis, editor of the Federalist, is making a tour of the cities and towns in this county in behalf of the interests of his vice crusade in Minneapolis and St. Paul. He is trying to secure capital for the issuing of the Federalist, a magazine devoted to the exposure of the sins of Minneapolis, and attacking the evils in Sauk Center City. At Sauk Ceoter the response to his appeal was generous, and he appealed to the people in all quarters.

Good wants to federate the people against the social evils and to have the Federalist printed on a press in the vica crusade. Good, besides telling up the offerings in the churches, visits the citizens in their homes and secures money for his work in the Twin Cities.

WANTS RIVER SHOAL REMOVED.

Representative Miller Tells Board of Engineers of Mississippi Ledge.

Washington.—Representative C. S. Miller of Duluth appeared before the board of engineers of the war department to-day in regard to the proposed removal of the ledge or shoal on the Mississippi river at Pine Knoll. This obstruction is generally supposed to be largely responsible for floods in the upper Mississippi and a preliminary survey looking for its removal has been made by Major Shunk of St. Paul.

Major Shunk, while favoring the proposition, does not recommend the removal of the ledge as a seperate project, but as a part of the general project for the improvement of the river between Brainerd and Grand Rapids.

MOORHEAD BRIDE IS SAVED.

City Employes Avert Destruction of Structure by Burning Ice Pack.

Moorhead.—Only tha prompt arrival of a half dozen of the city's street department employes prevented the demolishment of the big reservoir dam in the Red river and the carrying out of the Island Park bridge just above the dam.

A telephona call from George Fuller, living resides near the dam and bridge, was quickly responded to by the city authorities, who directed men with pike poles to hasten to the scene and the ice jam. The ice was piling up at a terrific rate and the bridge already was showing signs of being carried away by the ice.

The dam was built last year and was saved hoh structures. The dam recently was constructed at n cost of about $5,000.

WINONA FIRE LOSS IS $19,117.

Winona—The annual report of W. C. Norton, chief of the Winonn Bra department, was submitted to the city council.

The report shows interesting figures and comparisons. The statement shows 170 fires during the fiscal year beginning March 1, 1916, and closing February 28, 1917. The total loss during that tima was $19,117. In the previous year 136 fires were recorded, but the loss was $20,531.

SOIL CONDITIONS EXCELLENT

NORTHWESTERN ISSUES FIRST CROP BULLETIN OF THE YEAR.

Season Two Weeks Later Than Last Year—Seeding Retarded in Some Parts.

Winona.—Over in southern Minnesota, in the territory traversed by the Northwestern Railway, tha soil conditions are in many ways better than in any previous year, according to tha report of General Agent H. J. Wegen, of the Northwestern. The bulletin is the first this season.

"The reports issued from the general offices of the Northwestern road during the past saveral years have been accepted as authentic and an excellent guide for those closely observing farm activity. Mr. Wagen has prepared his first bulletin after careful scrutiny of the conditions, and the report carries an exceedingly optimistic tone. The report follows:

"The present season as compared with 1910 is practically two weeks later. However, the work last fall was more complete then previous seasons and conditions more satisfactory to combine the work this spring, account better preparations being made.

"There is a disposition to refrain from seeding too early, but rather to prepare the land and rush seeding as soon as the weather conditions are more assured.

Ground Conditions.

"The ground froze without snow protection and with not o great deal of moisture during the winter and early laft soil in somewhat dry conditions. However, on March 9 and 26 had a light rain involving into snow to the extent of 1½ inches. On April 2 had from 1 to 2 inches of snow over entire territory; also snow from Winona to Marshall, and 2 inches of snow, Marshall to Watertown, April 4.

"There is now more moisture in the ground then a year ago and sufficient amount to germinate the seed, the conditioos helog far better than any previous year, end with anything like the usual amount of precipitation from now on a good crop can be anticipated.

Seeding.

"In some parts of our territory seeding was started March 20, and with cheoge to cold weather since it is dais, this work has been retarded, but with favorable weather we can look for seedioq to be general in another week.

"Our reports indicate conditions are excellent in every way.

The agitation brought out in the newspapers teuding toward more scientific selection of seeds and their distribution emanating from both federal and state departments of agriculture, with co-operation of the railroads in giving the benefits similarly through the means of good seed trains which have been sent through the territory, has had the effect of considerable favorable attention on the part of farmers which will have the effect of increasing production.

Acreage.

"It is too early to formulate with accuracy our report regarding the comparison of acreage or estimates of the amount of different grains to be sown. This matter will be given consideration and n report made at a later date."

REFUSE TO CONSOLIDATE.

Clay County Fair Association Will Not Join Fargo Attraction.

Moorhead.—A complete reorganization wes the result of the meeting of the stockholders in the Clay County Agricultural sod Mechoeical Society. The officers will remain the same. E. H. Wheeler being president and John Costain secretary, but the charter under which the old organization worked has been amended. New bylaws also were passed. The question of disposing of the society's property at Glyndon was not taken up, the sentiment of the stockholders is in favor of holdiog a regular county fair in Moorhead instead of consolidating with the Interstate Fair Association in its Fargo fair.

New Hotel For Moorhead.

Moorhead.—"A new first-class hotel for this city is a sure thing" was the statement of the unanimous vote of the Commercial Club after completing a day's canvass among local merchants for money to purchase a site. The original cost of the site is $25,000. The hotel company will donate $5,000, St. Paul brewers who have branch houses in the city have given $5,000, the Moorhead banks $5,000 and local business men will make up the remainder. The new hotel probably will be constructed by the Northwestern Hotel Investment Company of Fargo, at a cost of $80,000. This will give n sixty-room modern hotel of nearly fireproof construction.

May Get a Postal Bank.

Red Wing. — Congressman C. R. Davis has taken to the postoffice department the matter of the designation of Red Wing as a postal savings depository, which has recently been inaugurated by the establishment in one depository in each state by way of experiment to undar the supervision of a board of trustees. The secretary of the board has notified Mr. Davis that the Red Wing postoffice will-ha given carafal consideration in connection with the naxt extension of the system.

The Strange Summons

By SUSANNE GLENN

(Copyright, 1911, by Associated Literary Press.)

So they all went to the lawyer's.

None of them had paid much attention to old Nelson Blake while he lived in his humble little home on the lonely mountain side. But now that they had been summoned to the reading of his will the lawyer's office was crowded with expectant relatives.

Who had dreamed the old man had anything to will? Sharp eyes asked this of each other while lips spoke commonplaces.

"Any of my aforenamed relatives who desire to participate in a share of my property must permanently take up residence in my home on the mountain," read the lawyer monotonously.

"Any such person within in residence thars to whom I may give a personal summons shall present evidence of such summons to my lawyer, who is instructed to make over my property to said person. Any attempt at fraudulent evidence will be useless, as my lawyer ond myself understand each other thoroughly."

Judson Blake, sitting in a dusky corner, watched curiously the faces before him. He was the only person in the room who had known the dead man intimately, and he was enjoying to the utmost the singularity of the will.

Some of the faces held a look of baffled greediness; some expressed contempt; others, anxiety and superstitious fear. Opposite him was a slip of a girl in a blue gown. The pale face under the drooping hat seemed to grow plinched during the reading; but when her troubled eyes met Judson's she rose impishly and came to his side.

"This is Mr. Judson Blake?" she inquired. "I am Melrose Madison. Have you seen the place, Mr. Blake? Would it be very ridiculous for me to go?"

"Its greatest drawback is the lonely situation, but we can scarcely feel loneliness, dear cousin-by-marriage," he murmured.

"Do you think they will oil go?" exclaimed the girl, incredulously. "And you?"

"Money is a great magnet," he returned, inscrutably.

"It isn't the money entirely," denied Miss Madison, "and yet it is well. But we cannot live indefinitely on just milk and eggs and potatoes, excellent as they are.

"I have lain awake nights for the last two weeks for fear I might miss his appearance."

"My dear little girl," said Judson, leaning over and taking her hands in his own, "will you tell me just what you do mean?"

"I mean that we are starved out—that I must get back to work. And—oh, I hate to go." She struggled with her tears again.

The young man looked at her breathlessly. If he could keep her! If only his pictures would sell!

"Ben here, girl," he said in a crisp, business-like manner, "you simply must not take your mother away so soon. And you must stay longer for the summons! I've just the dandiest idea, but I haven't dered suggest it before.

"I don't want to leave yet, either. I have just found my forte—I've got to paint nature if I want success, and that means staying here all winter.

"I mean to get down to real work, and I've wasted so much to suggest that your mother keep house for me so here! We'll get old Brown to do the outdoor work and get up our wood. And if you must work, there's the little school down at the corner—"

"Oh, if we could do it!" she breathed.

"Come home with me, you very impractical person," he enswered, "and I will talk with your sensible mother."

"It is going to be a cool night," observed Melrose as they left the car at the steep hillside. "Let us get some logs and have a fire in the parlor fireplace this evening. Then we'll sit cosily roned it and talk over our plans."

In the early twilight they brought in their logs and arranged them on the hearth. Then, kneeling side by side, they lighted the ragged, dry brush.

A tiny column of smoke rose to the mantel level and floated out into the room!

With a surprised exclamation Melrose flung open the outer door, while the young man peered into the chimney questioningly. Reaching up his arm, his hand came in contact with a board that completely closed the opening of the flue.

"This is certainly strange," he said. "I distinctly remember Uncle Nelson having a fire in this grate last spring, so it cannot be that the chimney is defective."

The board slipped easily and as he shoved it loose a coe and a smell in box fell with a greet noise to the hearth helow.

"It is the summons!" murmured the girl, in an awed voice.

The box was not sealed. Blake drew from it a small folded paper.

"To whom it may concern—and I strongly suspect it will prove to he my beloved nephew, Judson Blake!

"If you will present this testimonial to Lawyer Green and if you have complied with the other stipulations of my will, all my property, real and personal, shall be made over—"

Blake dropped the pencil back into the box, and turned to the waiting girl.

"Girl! Girl!" he cried, gladly; "it is the summons. And we are all right. We have got the house and the land on—and everything!"

"We?" murmured she, perplexed.

"We!" very emphatically. And he threw his arms about her in sudden fervor.

"Didn't we find the box together? And do you suppose I would ever be hoppy anywhere without you? Surely you've known I cared—that I could not speak, because I had nothing to contribute toward that hill of fare of yours?"

"Oh, well," she murmured, dosmurfly, "we could have sold the eggs occasionally we bought besides."

"Doe't, precious cousin-by-merriage," he cried, earnestly, "look at me and say that you love me, that you will help me make the most of Uncle Nelson's summons."

"I will—and—we era going to have fried chicken for breakfast," she said.

Elk Invade Washington Farms.

The heavy snows in the Olympic mountains are driving herds of elk down to the section, and they are growing the oat and hay and straw belonging to ranchers. Farmers are generally taking the invasion philosophically, as several of them have gone to the length of putting out fodder for the half-starved animals.

It is unlawful to kill elk in this state until 1915. In the meantima the elk may roam at will on the farmers' land. Many of the ranchers figure that by feeding and harboring the elk they may stay on their farms until after the closed season ends in 1915. Elk are more plentiful in the mountain regions than generally supposed and are said to be increasing.—Quinault Lake correspondence Seattle Post-Intelligencer.

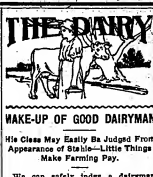
"Why not?"

"Because she's a milliner."

"What's that got to do with it?"



"Naturally, she's a trimmer."

THE DAIRY

WAKE-UP OF GOOD DAIRYMAN

His Class May Easily Be Judged From Appearance of Stable—Little Things Make Farming Pay.

We can safely judge a dairyman from his stable. If when you go into a man's stable you see his cow standing in good, dry straw e foot deep in e roomy hox stall, the fodder box arranged so that all is eaten, a good, roomy feed-box, one deep enough so that when a feed of chop is put in, the animal will not throw it all over before he eats it, you may know the owner is a good farmer.

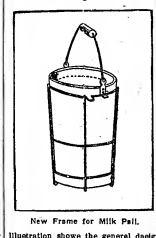
In that kind of a stall you will not find any corn cobs mixed with the bedding; they are all gathered from the feed boxes and placed in a barrel and used for kindling.



There are other things by which we may judge as to the class in which a farmer belongs. If the farm dwellings and outbuildings are neat, painted, and the fences and gates in good repair, you will not see haystacks or straw-piles standing out all winter, or see this former husking out corn in April so as to get it out of the way for another crop.

It is the little things that make farming pay, and the little things make the losing game, too.

NEW FRAME FOR MILK PAILS

Wire Structure Fits Around Receptacle and Protects It From Dirt at Bottom—General Design.

With this improvement in farming and dairy methods in general, and the demand for pure milk in particular, comes the milk pail frame, designed by an Iowa man. This frame caught he coesidered a necessary article by any stretch of the imagination, but a great many things are being used by the dairyman now that heve decided merit without heiig necessities. The illustration shows the general design of the frame, which has a pan in the holtom on which tha pail rests. Two projecting U-shaped portions of the upper ring of tha device fit over two halls at tha top of ths bucket. Whee the balls are under the ring the frame is turned a few inches to afford there a purchase and prevent their slipping out again, and the dairyman thus has hle pail aneesed in a framework that extande on all eides and protects it from dirt at tha hottom.

The Value of the Separator.

The value of the cream separator is hased on the amount it saves out of tha loss of the cream that is commoe under the old or primitive methods. Usually there is a loss of from 25 to 60 per cent. of the cream. The cream separator saves this loss, and, computing that under the average prics of hutter fat the cream separator will save the farmer $10 or more a cow per year, so we see that if the farmer milks five or six cows he saves enough in one year to buy a cream separator above tha old methods.

Dried Beat Pulp for Cows.

That dried beet pulp is a better feed for dairy cows than corn silage was demonstrated by the New Jersey experiment station. It found that the cows fed on beat pulp produced ten per cent. more milk than when fed on a corn silage ration and four per cent. more milk than on a hominy ration.

Use of Separators.

Many farmers in this section are buying separators and shipping cream. They think it pays better than making butter and saves the hard work of churning.

THE PRICE OF LAND INCREASING

THE "BACK TO THE LAND" CRY IS EFFECTIVE.

Traveling through the state of Iowa the other day, and Iowa is no exception to the story about to be related, the writer was shown a farm that was offered three years ago for $350 an acre. That appeared to be a high figure for land upon which the owner depended upon the crops of corn, hogs and cattle that could be raised upon it. But it wasn't. A few weeks since the farm changed hands at $325 an acre. Over in Illinois, down in Indiana, up in Wisconsin, across the line in Minnesota, the same experience was met with. And then attention is directed to Canada, which has been the Mecca of so many hundred thousand Americanee during the past few years. Not only in Eastern Canada has the price of lands increased, but in Western Canada, during the past few weeks, farm lands have increased from three to five dollere an ocre, with the prospect of a similar advance during the next three months. The reason for this is very apparent, and in a few words it may he pointed out that the lands are worth a great deal more than the present prices. The Northwestern Agriculturist of Minneapolis, a paper that was one of the first of the American farm popere to discover the real merits of the lands of Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta, says: "The reciprocity schedule would encourage American farmers to move to Canada, where the virgin soil will produce greater crops of grain with less labor than can be produced in our own farme in the Northwest. The result will be to enhance land values in Canada." This paper is afraid land values in Canada will he enhoced at the expence of land values in the United States. The reason for the fact that land values in the United States are increasing the remaining seventy-nine points. The reason for the advance in value of Canadian lends is partly accounted from the fact, admitted by this paper, that Canada's virgin soil will produce "greater crops of grain with less labor." But that is not the only reason. During the past twelve months 320,000 people have made Canada their home and these are mostly of the farming class. They want farme, and the demand as well as the wealth of the soil is regulating the price. A study of the increase in the acreage of land put under crop last year, which can be had from any Canadian government agecentsetive, will prove the point, that the demand is increasing at a greater ratio than even the most sanguine would have predicted.

Raising the Rarest of Flowers—Orchids

ORCHIDS are not only the rarest of flowers, but they are among the rarest of all the products of nature. To find and bring back to civilization the choicest of these petaled trophies, "orchid hunters" ere all the while braving in tropical jungles dangers and hardships as great as confront any present day soldier of fortune. Similarly there is about the whole family of orchids an atmosphere of mystery such as no longer obtains in the case of any other of mlady's standard trinkets—not even in the case of the diemond.

No wonder, then, that as theee facte have becomo moro generally known and as the peculiar history and characteristics of the orchids have become common knowledgo there have swept in upon us a great wave of eastment in behalf of tho orchid—an almost universel femilaso longing to possees and weer these strange flowers with their peculiar lists, soft velvety petals that look so artificial that moro imitations of the orchid pass muster than of any other flower, and their subtle fascination. There is no questios, too, that the secret of the fascination of these wonderful flowers is not by any means explained by the moro fact that they are so expensivo, which has so often been advanced la explanation of why so many people are eager for these flowers.

EXTERIOR OF A TYPICAL ORCHID HOUSE

No moro than half a century ngo the whole orchid femily was virtually undiscovered. Only a few varioties were known, and thoy were by no means in general cultivetion. Now thero is a mad quest in all quarters of the globo for these fashionablo flowers. The uttermost parts of the certh are being ransacked for new varieties, under the spur of the enormous prices which collectors will pay for rare "finds" eed expensivo greenhouses have been lastituted to permit the cultivation of the moro delicate members of the orchid family undor the same conditions as to light and temperaturo which obtain in its ancestral home in the tropics.

Tho orchids in their native haunts are found growing in all sorts of strange ways, and naturally when they are transplanted thor are hard plants to grow. Moreover, there are no rules for the cultivation of orchids. In other hranches of the floral kingdom all the members of a given floral family may bo expected to yield to the same general method of cultivation, varied only in minor detail to permit adaptation to the needs of each member of the family. Not so with tho eccenlric orchids, however. Every plant is seemingly a law unto itself, and likely to require methods of cultivation distinct in themselves, and perhaps the exact opposite of those which obtain in the case of other members of this fascinating family.

The rarest of the orchids, and, of course, the ones most sought and the ones which command the highest prices, do not grow after the fashion of the general community of self-respecting plants which carry their roots in the soil. Instead these orchids are, in effect, parasites, fastening themselves to tree trunks or tree limbs. It is these species which have their native bome deep in the jungles of the tropics and the hotter and damper the atmospbero of these unhealthy tropical forests—for instance, tbose of Brazil—the more the orchids seem to thrive. Now when the descendants of such tropical captives are to be nurtured and cultivated in the civilized environment of the temperate zone, it goes without saying that it is no easy task to duplicate the conditions which produced the species. To do so at all necessitates the construction of the speciel greenhouses above mentioned, with varied equipment, including a steam heating plent big enough to heat buildings many times the size of these greenhouses.

THE ARISTOCRATS OF HOTHOUSEDOM

The lure of rich reword attracts many darling and resourceful men to the orchid business, although as may be surmised, the rich prizes of gold come to the men who discover, or at least the men who bring back to civilization heretofore unknown varieties of this numerous family. Ths leading firms engaged in the orchid trade retain at large salaries men of wide experience whose sole occupation is to trail the orchid in the almost inaccessible haunts where there is ever the magnet of possible unbeard of varieties to beckon one forward.

Sometimes an orchid hunter will search for a year or more, facing the almost intolerable conditions of an unexplored land in order to capture in the end some barefoten unknown variety. During his quest, be it long or short, he must brave foul disease at almost every step; must be ever alert against the hostility of the tribes which inhabit the region he invades; and must risk all sorts of personal mishaps in grasping his prize, even after the quest has been successful, since most of the rare orchids of the tropics flourish only at, the tops of the tallest trees. The hunter must either climb the trees, or more likely he will cut them down, but he dere not trust any hands save his own to undertake the task of gathering these fragile flowers.

An energetic orchid hunter will forward great numbers of plents, some rare and others not so rare, to the orchid consuming centers of Europe and Amerlca every year, but it is no easy matter to get the orchids to the coast after they have been found and wired into boxes by skilful packers, and on shipboard, even though the temperature of special cabins be regulated to sustain these floral natives of the tropics, there are other perils to be possed, and many plants perish during the ocean voyags. Indeed, it is claimed that on every large consignment of orchids from Brazil or Madagscar or other orchid producing paradises there is a loss amounting to thousands of dollars through the demise of plants that cannot withstand the rigors of an ocean voyage and in consequence pass from their dormant condition into a sleep from which they cannot be awakened.

The roots which come safely to market are usually put up at auction, and since there are no flowers on the plants, and no means of positively identifying them—not even the orchid hunter having seen them in bloom—it not infrequently happens that what are sold for orchids of a common variety, and consequently bring low price, turn out to be rarities of great value. In this way one unidentified orchid plant that brought half a dollar at an auction sale in London was, when it bloomed, after a lapse of two years, discovered to be such a novelty that the very firm that had disposed of it at auction bought it back for $2,500. This price is by no means a record-breaker for a rare orchid, as notable specimens have been sold for sums as high as $5,750. Nor is it necessary that an orchid shall be what the layman would regard as distinctly different from all others in order to command a fancy price. It merely has markings distinct from those on the orchids of the same class which have come to light previously, it will be eagerly sought by collectors who take account of all such minor differences as do the collectors of coins or postage stamps.

ORCHIDS—THE RAREST AND DEAREST OF FLOWERS

The raising of orchids from seed is a very slow operation, and one requiring an infinite emount of patience. Orchid growers who are in the business either for profit or pleasure, prefer, as a rule, to simply buy the bulbs—brown and withered and unpromising—and by watchful care nurture the latent spark of life until in time the plant blooms. One ikklish task in connection with the raising of orchids is the keeping up of the successive periods of rest and activity natural to such species of this floral family. As the orchid plant is passing into what is known as the dormant state it requires a gradually slackening supply of weter, whereas when it is revived from this and returned to active growth there must be a continual increase in the emount of moisture supplied to the plant arousing from its drowsiness.

Orchids newly arrived from foreign parts must have an exceptional amount of attention after their long sea voyage. First, all the old leaves are removed and then the plants are allowed to repose for a time in a cool building where they have sbeds. After two or three days of preparation the new arrivals are put in pots sad "nursed" until they give evidence of active growth. After this it is largely a question of regulating temperature and moisture although such are the peculiarities of these exotic flowers that every now and then an experienced grower will lose a number of plants for no apparent reason.

These flowers, some of which are said to bave the ability to kill with their fragrance, are a reality distant cousins of our familier blooms, the snow drop and the lady's slipper. There are, all told, more then 5,000 varieties of orchids, but the ones which have been most prized are the strangely beautiful forms which have come from blistering deserts, fever swemps, the tops of mountains or other localities where it seems as though Dame Neture hed dons her best to hide them away from prying human eyes. To person who have not learned to love them there is often n suggestion eimost of the uncanny about a fanciful orchid, and such persons will not be surprised to hear that one of the choicest of orchids was first found clinging to a tombstone in New Guinea.

Orchid growers would, most of them, be in no end of difficulty in classifying and identifying their specimens, were it not for the Orchid Studbook, which is issued every years just as is the studbook of horses, which lists all of the domestic varieties of orchids with information as to their respective lines of descent from the original wild kinds. There have been many famous orchid collectors. Mrs. Roosevelt was very fond of the flower and it was due to her efforts that a respectable-sized collection of orchids has been formed at the White House conservatories.

Perhaps the most enthusiastic of all orchid collectors, however, has been Joseph Chamberlain, and the name of the English statesman will live forever in the domain or the orchid as a devotee who devoted his leisure and thousands of dollars of his wealth to the indulgence of his hobby for the gentlest and fraitest of flowers.

SEA'S BURIED GOLD

LURE OF LOST TREASURE HUNTING NOT ALL FICTION.

Millions Hidden Under Ocean—Some Has Been Recovered, but Much Remains to Be Found—Case of John Phipps.

Boston.—Not all the tales of vast treasures buried deep under the sea are evolved in the minds of novelists. Robert Louis Stevenson and a dozen other writers have made such stories famous, but there have been man, real men, who have profited by secrets of buried gold, reel gold. In fact, some of the reel stories of lost and recovered treasure can give points to romeneo and heet it with ease.

Tbe successful edventurss of John Phipps ers a case in point. Phipps, who had been a ship carpenter, towards the end of the seventeenth century, spent years trying to convince various peers that there ley a vast Spanish treasure under the sea off Hispaniolo. At last, the Duke of Albemarle lent him a ship, with the result that, after e year of adventure Phipps returned to' England, bringing with bim recovered treasure worth $1,000,000.

Phipps' welcome when he returned to England with this freight resulted, through the influence of the Duke of Albemarle, who shered his treasure, in knighthood and an appointment as governor of Messechusetts.

Ever since the time of Phipps, the search for gold has gone on. However, although centuries have passed, many a million still lies on the bottom of the ocean, and it may continue there centuries longer.

Perhaps the most valuable sunken treasure in the world is now lying at the bottom of Vigo bay. The Spanish, in 1702, to avoid capture, scuttled their largest ships laden with treasure, the harvest of four years' looting in Mexico. The treasure, in gold, silver and previous stones, is estimated to be worth $10,000,000.

On one of the islands of the Leeward group in the West Indies, either Marie Galanti or Descada Le Fitte, a French pirate of 100 years ago, buried gold and specie to the value of $1,000,000.

Among the other treasures of the ocean is the wreck of the Black Prince, which lies at the bottom of the sea off Sevastopol. The Black Prince was dispatched to Sevastopol with a general cargo for the army end $500,000 en service pay. It was sunk the day of its arrival by Russian gun fire, end went down with its cargo end treasure, none of which has ever been recovered. Another English vessel containing a large emount in specie is the East Indiman Grosvenor, now lying under water off St. John's, Cape Colony.

Laden With Treasure.

As an amusing instance of the way in which lost treasure can grow by rumor, Captain Kidd's hoard is instructive. When Kidd was hanged in London in May, 1701, a shipmate of Kidd's said that the captain hed hidden about $1,500 worth of plate and coin, which he had not been able to recover. From this small beginning grew the innumerable stories of Captain Kidd's boards, the last of which placed the emount at $5,000,000.

Find $1,250,000 in Old House.

London.—Treasure trove to the value of $1,250,000 is reported from Jersey, where it was uncovered by Athelstan Riley while he was pulling down the ruins of an old manor house built in the thirteenth century with the object of using the stone to enlarge his present manor.

The discovery includes ancient urns filled with spede guineas bearing the British arms on a spede-shaped shield. One urn heers the monogram of Emperor Vespesian, the Romm who flourished in the first century.

Use Flattery for Health

What Women Need Is Not so Much Medicine But a Lot of White Lies.

And now comes a very learned man, a psychologist, a physician and a philosopher, who seems to have investigated the whole subject to his own satisfaction, and finds that the world is cursed with truth, or, rather, with a lack of lies. Human beings, particularly those of the feminine gender, suffer physical torments, it appears, because they are not hooyed up by sufficient flattery. What women need is not so much quinine and ipecac as a lot of white lies. When you go home to the wife at your bosom you are not to tell her that she looks bad and ought to have a doctor at once. By no means. You must tell her that she looks younger than she has for years, and that she never was as dear to you, and that you are hardly able to pull through your daily tasks because you are so distracted by thoughts of her.

The remedy at least is cheap. It costs nothing but effort, but, alas! more effort than some men are willing to put forth. It is not because a man is too truthful to tell lies to his wife about her appearance, but because he hasn't the willing mind. It is too common for men to presume that simply because they are married they need not bestow courtesy or sentiment upon their wives. Some men reserve their stories of flattery for other men's wives, which makes particularly interesting reading in the divorce courts.

Now, this learned man is right in his fundamentals. We do not know whether or not a case of appendicitis or of cerebro-spinal meningitis may be cured by flattery, but if more men went home to their wives with cheerful faces, with loving words, with the most tender courtesy and a box of candy or a bunch of violets, a lot of heart trouble would be cured instanter. The principal fact about a woman is that she is a woman. She lives on love. She is made for it and normally cannot exist in good spirits and health without it. The greatest injury that can come to a woman is the feeling that she awakens no romantic inspiration in her husband. If every husband would tell his wife once a day that he loved her, as well as show it, the world would be much happier. It is not alone necessary to love your wife; you must show it by a thousand things that seem meaningless trifles to the men, but are the larger part of life to a woman.

Origin of the Piano.

The pianoforte was directly evolved from the clavichord and the harpsichord. In 1711 Scipione Maffei gave a detailed account of the first four instruments, which were constructed by Bartholommeo Chrustofori. It was named by him the pianoforte and was first exhibited in 1709. Marius, in France, exhibited harpsichords, with hammer action, in 1716, and Schroter, in Germany, claimed to have invented the pianoforte between 1717 and 1720.

Marius was at first generally credited with the invention. Plance of that period were shaped much like the modern grand variety. The first square piano was constructed by Frederici, an organ manufacturer of Saxony, in 1758. The first genuine upright piano was invented in England and the United States by John Isaac Hawkins, an Englishman, in 1880.

HAPPENINGS IN THE CITIES

Open Court to Mend Broken Hearts

CHICAGO.—When the municipal courts of Chicago convened for the first time in their chambers in the new city hall, a new breach of thet department of city government came into being—the court of domestic relations. Judge Charles N. Goodnow is to preside over the court, and his official capacity is to be that of "mender of fractured hearts," while Frank N. Hillis, who is known as "prosecutor," is in reality to be "chief assistant heart mender."

The opening day was essentially children's day, although all the offenders brought to the bar were adults. One onlooker described it, in lugubrious paradox, as the "adult juvenile court."

Both Judge Goodnow and Prosecutor Hillis are married men and their wives are taking a deep interest in the new court, which is the second of its kind in the United States. Both have volunteered to aid their husbands in carrying out their new duties. Judge Goodnow declared that he expected to ask his wife for a great deal of aid.

"Of course, the court must form his own opinions, but the viewpoint of an unbiased woman on subjects which a women alone can understand thoroughly ought to be of valuable assistence," he said.

Mr. Hillis explained that his duties would not be those which usually fall on the shoulders of a city prosecutor.

"The object of the court is, as I understand it, to restore harmony in homes threatened with disruption, and the fewer cases that are prosecuted the more successful is the work of the prosecutor."

Here are some of the problems which are expected to confront the new court:

Nagging wives.
Brutal husbands.
Mothers-in-law.
The servant question.
Women's clubs
Corner saloons.
Suffragists.

Both Judge and prosecutor agreed that they had some busy times ahead of them.

Settlement workers were present in large numbers at the opening. "It is really for the children, you know," was the very thing all expressed their belief in the future of the new court, and it was for the children that Miss Jane Addams spoke in the formal exercises that preceded the calling of the first case.

Millionaire's Son Weds in Secret

BOSTON.—William Stuart Leeds, of Harvard '10, twenty-one years old, of Lakewood, N. J., whose father was known as the tin plate king, married Mrs. May Joyce, a Boston divorcee, in Nashua, N. H.

City Clerk Arthur L. Cyr of Nashua confirmed the news.

"I married the couple myself, in my office," said he. "The bride said she was a divorcee and gave her address as merely Boston."

Mrs. Leeds met Billy Leeds when he came to Harvard from his Lakewood home in the fall of 1906. Billy paid her much attention. While his college friends are not surprised to learn that he has married the girl of his college affections, they did not know that he was planning to be wedded just now.

Billy Leeds is the son of a wealthy family. At Harvard it was evident from the luxurious life he led that he had plenty of money. He did not finish his college course, but left Harvard in the spring of 1908, to be with more year. He took a venture in the automobile business. Then he quit that for brokerage. He is now listed as being in a broker's office at 116 Broadway, New York.

In college Billy Leeds was popular, not for his money, but for his goodfellowship. He joined the Harvard union. He became known among the boys as an expert bridge whister and a pool and billiard player, who was lightning fast on the tables. While not athletic he supported the athletic interests of the college and was properly enthusiastic for the Crimson.

In his freshman year Billy roomed in Brentford hall, one of the exclusive dormitories of Massachusetts avenue. In his sophomore year he moved into Dana chambers.

When the last Boston automobile show was in progress Billy came over from New York to renew acquaintanceships, as it was supposed. A hint of a romance cropped out then, but came to no definite form. It was at that time, however, on March 14, according to the testimony of City Clerk Cyr of Nashua, that Billy Leeds and Mrs. Joyce went to Nashua and were married.

The Palaces of Rome.

The Roman palaces remain intact, says Dr. Muhlbig, but the demands of progress end of business have wrought changes in them.

The Borghese palace is now an art repository; a bank and the Austrian embassy to the Quirinal share the Chigi palace; a dry goods establishment occupies the ground floor of the Rospigliosi palace and a moving picture show of the cheap kind is conducted at the Barnini palace. A savings bank rents the Sciarra Colonna, a restaurant the Ruspoli, and what was once the Altieri palace is now a row of small shops. Dealers in pictures has his sign on the Salviati palace, and the Torlonia palace has on one side of its portal a tourists' ticket office and on the other the "Croltc Italiano." "Palatial" business concerns all.

Just Ahead of Wealth.

Kind Lady—Remember, my poor man, that fortune never chases anyone.

Sandy Pike—Dunno about that, mum. I had $2,000 chase me one time.

Kind Lady—You really mean it?

Sandy Pike—Yes, mum; it was in the shape of a prize bulldog, and I just made the fence by two feet!—Story Stories.

St. Louis Van Winkle Sleeps Long

ST. LOUIS.—Dawn was just breaking in Maplewood when his telephone bell aroused William B. McBride, town marshal.

"There is a man lying dead at Manchester road and Bellevue avenue," called a voice.

There was a man there, but he was not dead. He was a big man, 200 pounds or so, and McBride observed that he was breathing regularly and very deeply. McBride rapped the soles of his feet with a stick, but the man only grunted.

If there had been a patrol wagon in Maplewood McBride would have summoned it. The marshal went to a livery stable and borrowed a wheelbarrow. He then wheeled the man five blocks to the jail.

Five hours after the man was found Justice Willecken tried to awaken him so that he could try him. The man absolutely refused to surrender his subconscious self.

In the evening Willecken tried again. This time the man rubbed his eyes and a smile gathered slowly on his face as he said:

"Gorra, it was a great Patrick's day."

Then he asked Willecken: "Where did I mest you? I was hy myself, I think, when I got on the street car at Benton station this afternoon and told the conductor to let me off at Twenty-first street."

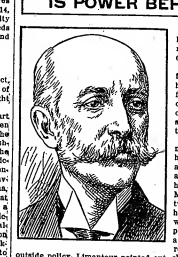
The man said he was Eugene Kelley, fifty-two years old, of 2127 Adams street, St. Louis. His surprise on learning that he was in jail in the county and that St. Patrick's day was ancient history was as great as that of Rip Van Winkle on a certain memorable occasion.

PROMINENT PEOPLE

POINTS TO AWFUL SLAUGHTER

The shocking and needless sacrifice of human life in this country was forcibly pointed out in a recent address by Prof. Charles W. Stiles of the department of zoology of the United States public health and marine hospital service. Referring to the "race suicide" views of Col. Roosevelt he inquired if the real trouble was that not enough children are born, or that so many are permitted to die needlessly." In other words, is it "race suicide" by the women or "race slaughter" by the men?

"What real encouragement is there to the American mother," he asked, "when the American father permits our country to lead the world in advance in science that we sacrifice more than half a million American lives each year from preventable causes? We are shocked as we read accounts of the Aztec human sacrifices. There is, in fact, slight difference between their sacrifices and ours. They conducted their on a religious ceremony; we permit ours to continue because of our carelessness and our failur to insist upon the enforcement of health laws.



"I submit the cold blooded, brutal fact that of the 1,500,000 deaths each year in this country about 42 per cent, about 630,000, are due to preventable causes.

"Recall that about 35,000 of these 630,000 sacrifices are due to that easily preventable filth disease—typhoid fever. Recall that our typhoid death rate is about 46.6 in each 1,000 inhabitants, that of Germany 6.3 and that of Switzerland 4.8. This means that we Americans permit our country to be about seven times as dirty as Germany and ten times as dirty as Switzerland. And besides these 35,000 deaths there are each year 300,000 persons who contract typhoid.

"Recall that each year we bury about 150,000 of our fellow citizens who die from tuberculosis, yet if proper measures were enforced we could save these lives and this great sorrow to so many American mothers. Besides these 150,000 there are about 500,000 of our citizens suffering from the same disease.

"Recall that about one-sixth of all American children die before they become a year old, and one-fourth to one-third of all American children die under five years of age—children the great majority of whom could be saved to make their mothers happy in aged years. Each year we have more than 1,500,000 cases of malaria and more than 12,000 deaths from this disease. We bury 15,000 to 20,000 persons from diphtheria, 6,000 from scarlet fever and 10,000 from whooping cough.".

IS POWER BEHIND THRONE

As the Mexican crisis is now viewed in Washington, the modern power of money is combating the ancient power of militarism.

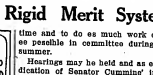
The best authorities on Mexican affairs here declare that Limantour, backed by Germans and American financiers heavily interested in Mexican properties, forced the resignation of the Diaz cabinet, and is now himself seeking to become the real dictator of Mexico.

Fresh from his conference with the moneyed masters of the world, both here and abroad, Limantour is said to an ultimatum to Diaz and his associates. It was, simply, that there must be peace in Mexico. The billions of Mexican investments, totaling toward two billion dollars, powerful in their home government, would not stand by while Diaz, with conscripted armies, plunged the country indefinitely into a state of anarchy, while battling the revolutionists. That such was the outside policy Limantour pointed out, clearly is proven by the concentration of the United States regulers in Texas. There must be an abandonment of the reign of the mailed fist, this traveled minister argued, and efforts made at solution through the velvet hand of conciliation be used.

It has been well understood here for some time that the American financial interests, deeply concerned in Mexican oil, mineral and railroad properties, caused the sudden concentration of the American troops in Texas.

It seems likely that Limantour has seized the real scepter. Not that Diaz for the present will relinquish the chief office, but that the old "king" has been made to realize his weakness and has submitted" to a new sort of domination.

Mexicans here say that Limantour has been working to this end for several years. He financed the nationalization of the Mexican Railways, brought outside capital into his country, and regards himself as the trustee of the investments. Now, when a revolt threatens the investments, he is attempting to serve as the executor of the state.



ECUADOR'S NEW PRESIDENT

Senor Emilio Estrada was elected president of the Republic of Ecuador. He will be inaugurated on August 10, 1911, succeeding the present incumbent, Senor Eloy Alfaro. The president of Ecuador is elected directly for a period of four years. The vice-president is elected in the same manner, but two years after the election of president, serving accordingly across two terms. The congress consists of two houses. The members of the senate (two for each province) are elected directly for four years. The house of representatives consists of members elected directly for two years at the rate of one deputy for every 30,000 inhabitants, with a deputy for every 15,000 inhabitants or more. The Indians, being practically in a condition of slavery, are unrepresented. Congress meets biennially, but can be summoned for an extra session by the president. The voting franchise is restricted to every male citizen of twenty-one years of age who is able to read and write. The local administration, from the governors of the provinces down to the lieutenants of the parishes, are all appointed by the president and removed at his discretion

NATIONAL CAPITAL AFFAIRS

Cummins Seeks Rigid Merit System

WASHINGTON.—Senator Cummins of Iowa, as chairman of the committee on civil service and retrenchment, proposes to push the consideration of a comprehensive civil service measure—one that will provide for the designation by law of all places under civil service classification, instead of leaving them to executive order, and which will regulate promotions and retirements.

As a member of the committee on interstate commerce he already has done some work on a bill to reorganize the interstate commission, increasing its membership and dividing it into five parts, these parts to have jurisdiction respectively over sections of the country corresponding to the traffic divisions as designated by the railroads.

It is not certain that the schema for reorganization of the interstate commerce commission will be advanced beyond the preliminary stage at this extra session.

With respect to the subject first mentioned, however, it is the intention to introduce a bill within a short time and to do as much work on it as possible in committee during the summer.

Hearings may be held and as an indication of Senator Cummins' intention to keep his committee busy, the first thing he did after reaching Washington the other day was to move his quarters in the senate office building from the northwest corner to the southeast corner, immediately adjoining the room allotted to the committee on civil service and retrenchment.

For years, until Mr. Cummins became chairman, the committee had been one of the "do-nothing" committees of the senate. In the last congress it held hearings on the proposition to provide for the retirement and pensioning of superannuated employees of the various government departments.

It now is proposed to embrace the civil service classification and the promotion and retirement features in one comprehensive measure.

There is no intention, it is understood, of assailing the executive branch of the government through the proposition to designate by law the positions that shall be filled under the civil service rules. It is designed, however, to make the rules more rigid and to prevent in the future the excepting of certain places from the application of the rules by executive order.

Sherman Hard to Keep in Line

VICE-PRESIDENT SHERMAN'S fondness for mixing with the crowd, talking politics with his old cronies in the house and a general dislike for formality, especially when the formality is a prolonged affair, almost disarranged the White House plans for the New Year reception.

Mr. Sherman was the first man received by the president. The vice-president then became a member of the president's receiving party. The presiding officer of the senate continued to bow sweetly as long as possible, and then quietly stepped into the line of guests which had already passed the president and walked out to the east room, where there were hundreds of politicians of various brands. The vice-president was having a fine time when he was interrupted by Capt. Archibald Butt, the presidential military aid.

"Mr. Vice-President," said Captain Butt, "you have been missed from the receiving line. Permit me to escort you back in time to receive the diplomats."

"Time's long, here," said the vice-president, waving his hand to his old cronies in the house. "See you later."

Diplomat after diplomat passed the president, and behind them the vice-president saw an endless line of gold laced admirals, threasts of countless officers of the army and navy stationed in Washington.

"Those fellows don't want to see me for anything," said the vice-president as he slipped back into the east room.

Half an hour later, while the vice-president was exchanging the compliments of the season and telling and hearing stories, he was again accosted by Captain Butt.

"I have been looking all over the White House for you," said the military aid.

"Well, here I am," remarked "Sunny Jim," slapping Butt on the back. "What do you want this time?"

"President Taft's party is ready to go to luncheon," said the captain, "and we are waiting for you to escort Mrs. Taft."

Measuring Meteor's Speed.

An interesting use has been found by astronomy for the human wheel. By fitting such a wheel with a series of opaque screens placed at regular intervals and then rotating it with the aid of a small motor at the rate of from 30 to 60 turns in a minute before the cameras used to photograph meteors, one investigator has succeeded in measuring the velocity of the meteor's flight. The principle depends upon tha futerruptione produced by the screens in the trails of light made upon the photographic plates by the flying meteor. The velocity of the wheel is known at every instant by means of a chronographic record, and the length of tha interruptions indicates the speed of the meteor.

The Growth of Russia.

Since its defeat by Japan, Russia has not affected tha imagination of the world with quite the sense of hidden power that it cohveyed before, but those who study its recent statistics find that it is the same giant still. In tha leet thirteen years the population of the empire has increased by 33,000,000, which is 2,500,000 more than the United States bee gained in twenty years. Tha census of 1909 gives the empire, including Siberia, 160,105,000 inhabitants, of whom 116,000,000 dwall in European Ruesia. Its agricultural progress is not less remarkable.

Naturalists Busy on Canal Zone

ENCOURAGING reports are being received by the Smithsonian Institution from the naturalists who are taking part in the biological survey of the Panama canal zone, which was organized by the institution last winter. The principal branches of netural history are represented in the party, which includes seven experienced field naturalists, nearly all of them from the scientific bureaus of the government.

Naturalists throughont the world are greatly interested in this biological survey, because when the canal is opened sweeping changes probably will take plece in the distribution of the animale and plants. A part of the fresh water streame of the isthmus now empty into the Atlantic ocean and othere into tha Pacific.

It is known that a certain number of animals and plants in the streams on the Atlantic side differ from those of the Pacific side, but as no biological survey has ever been undertaken the extent and magnitude of these differences have yet to be learned.

It also is of great importance to science to determine the geographical distribution of the various organisms inhabiting these waters, as the isthmus is one of the routes by which the animals and plants of South America have entered North America and reverse.

When the canal is completed the natural distinctions now existing will be obliterated, while by the construction of the Gatun dam a vast fresh water lake will be formed, which will delve away or drown the majority of the animals and plants now inhabiting the localitys, and might extermineate some of the species before the scientific experts had a chance to study them.

COLLEGE MEN WHO FAIL.

In every college there is a class of never-do-wells, generally composed of the sons of the rich. They go to college for the life there, to take part in social festivities, etc., and they care very little about study. College is to them merely an excuse for persuading their parents to permit them to spend four years in riotous laziness. At some colleges there are special courses, "easy courses," for such pupils. The college is not to be blamed for the inherent weakness of these men, although blame does attach to them for permitting students to waste their opportunities and their time. The smaller colleges are much more careful of the morals of those in attendance than are the great universities, where students are supposed to have reached the age of discretion, says the Charlton News and Courier. Discipline in the universities is largely a question of surroundings. Professors are there to teach, not to spend their time in enforcing discipline. The result is bad, not because the older men are unable to govern themselves, but because so many parents insist on sending mere boys to universities Where they ought to be sent, is to the small college, finishing their work, if need be, at the university, when they have had enough experience to appreciate freedom from rigid control and to know how to manage themselves. To send a boy of 18 to a university where the vast majority of those in attendance are grown men is to invite his ruin.

It has long been a favorite that girls are smarter than boys, especially in school and college. Dr. Taylor, president of Vassar, explains the reason. "Women," she says, "go to college to learn; men do not. While a good many men do succeed, there are many more who are interested in sport, and even those who do study do not take any pride in letting the others know they are working. Girls are conscientious; they are far more humiliated by failure than men." Dr. Taylor admits there are physiological reasons why the girl is smarter than the man at the college age, says the New York American. But it is also probable that the restrictions imposed on girls in the past have tended to make them concentrate attention on their studies. College men have as many interests as their lasting time permits. It is usually not until after they graduate that they settle down to making a living. Meanwhile they can afford to yield the palm to their sisters for superiority in youthful scholarship.

A Cleveland man who has divorced his wife explained to the court that he had to buy gowns costing $125 each for the lady, that she paid from $25 to $75 each for her hats, that he must set him back $120 and that she insisted on having a $250 diamond ring. Owing to the fact that he needed a few hundred dollars he asked her to pay $40 a month for a flat and keep a maid, not to mention the necessity of patronizing the grocer and butcher. he was unable to continue the arrangement on a salary of $1,800 a year. Some men seem to ha such poor managers.

Platinum is taking pains to emphasize that it is more valuable than gold, its price having gone up to $40 per ounce. A quarter of a century ago its price was practically the same as that of gold, but its industrial and scientific use has increased so as to enhance its value. The rise in the past six months has been $10 per ounce. In 1906 it was up to $40, and a year later had dropped to $20, which indicates speculative operations rather more strongly than the depreciation of gold.

Every day or two we hear of some rich American who has rented a London palace for coronation week. We have personal assurances, however, that a number of Londoners will be there for the exercises.

We are told that a youth in Washington is about to wed a widow of 57 years and $5,000,000. Love may laugh at locksmiths, but it smiles most benignantly on bank rolls.

They have just ended the funeral ceremonies over the body of the late King of Siam, who died October 23, which probably will be a great relief to his many widows.

The first sign of hard times will be an editorial in some newspaper on "The Passing of the Automobile."

The worst about the man who says "it goes without saying" is that he often says it without going.

Tight trousers are coming into style again; but the tailors' bills will refuse to be cut smaller.

TELLS OF "JACKPOT"

NEW WITNESS IN HELM INQUIRY GIVES STRANGER'S BRIBE STORY.

BOASTS OF LORIMER FUND

Former Senator Hopkins Informs Committee He Had Numerous Suggestions He Could Purchase Votes for His Re-election.

Springfield, Ill.—A statement attributed to C. E. Welhe, brother-in-law of Edward Illnes, was presented to the Helm investigating committee by William Burgess of Duluth. Mr. Burgess testified that on the 7th of last month Mr. Welhe, who was a total stranger to Mr. Burgess, made the boast to Burgess that $100,000 had been raised to elect William Lorimer senator and that he, Welhe, had put up $10,000 himself.

Burgess, on taking the witness stand, told of a railroad journey on the Winnipeg Flyer between Duluth and Virginia in March, 1911. He said a man named Johnson of a trade publication, one Randolph, John and Carl Weyerhauser, Welhe and another man were in the party, the smoking compartment, aboard a sleeping car.

Burgess said the subject of William Lorimer's election came up in the course of conversation. Burgess, during this chat on the subject of Lorimer, said he expressed the opinion that the senator had used money to effect his election.

"You don't know what you are talking about,' Welhe said to me," testified Burgess.

Burgess then said Welhe declared Lorimer never spent a cent, but that a package was handed by Lorimer's friends to effect the election.

"I know what I am talking about," Welhe was quoted by Burgess as saying, "because I put up $10,000 for that jack-pot.

Ex-Senator Albert J. Hopkins testified that he was approached frequently with suggestions that for certain amounts he could purchase votes toward re-election, but invariably replied that he was a candidate for the senate and not for the penitentiary.

Attorney Healy asked Mr. Hopkins regarding reports that money had been used to elect Lorimer.

"Senator McCormick of Madison county," said Mr. Hopkins, "told my private secretary, John M. Peffers, that he had been offered $5,000 to vote for Lorimer."

Mr. Hopkins said that he could not state the time or place of this offer.

Mr. Hopkins told of a conference with Mr. Lorimer at the Willard hotel in Washington, at which he tried in vain to ascertain the cause of Lorimer's opposition to his re-election. He said that he did not know Edward Illnes or Edward Tilden, and did not recall ever seeing them.

"I believed throughout the deadlock that I would be elected by Republican votes," said Mr. Hopkins. "I did not believe they would go home without choosing me after I had been indorsed by the voters."

Mr. Tilden in brief said he did not intend to return to Springfield or bring his private books and papers before the committee. He did offer to select one member of the committee to examine such records and report to the other four members.

REPORT SHOWS THAT FREE LIST WOULD REDUCE TARIFF.

Reciprocity Not Enough to Lift Burden From the Farmers—Cannot Attacks Canadian Pact.

Washington.—Chairman Underwood of the ways and means committee submitted to the house the majority report of that body on the so-called farmer's free list bill. The report is an analysis of the proposed duty exemptions and a Democratic political argument.

The report shows that the bill would reduce the tariff revenue $10,016,496, based on importations for the last fiscal year, an amount described as "inconsiderable in comparison with the great saving and advantages to all of our people from the additions to the free list provided."

The reciprocity agreement, the committee asserts, cannot afford the American people all the needed relief from high prices. "Action on the agreement involves the necessity of further and immediate action in removing a number of duties on imports from other countries in order that justice may be done to the great army of agricultural producers who, in the Canadian agreement, as to have all the alleged protection removed from certain products without a corresponding or reciprocal removal of the protective duties on the commodities they must purchase to sustain their lives and industries."

Former Speaker Cannon vigorously in a speech attacked Canadian reciprocity.

Aided by a large map of the United States and Canada, he played the role of schoolmaster to a crowded floor and filled galleries. Mr. Cannon assailed the proposed agreement as dangerous to American trade, inimical to the best interests of American farmers and certain to result in depreciation of American farm lands.

"We shall never be war with Spain and all that followed it has there been considered by the house of representatives so important a bill as the one now pending," he declared. "On the action of the house rests the well being and the prosperity of all the people of the United States. Is it proper on slight consideration to vitalize into law an agreement that affects the prosperity of every home in the land?"

SOUTH IS TOLD TO BREAK

Secretary MacVeagh Urges Southerners to Become Bipartisan in Politics—Two Parties Essential.

Summerville, S. C. — Secretary MacVeagh, speaking before the South Carolina Bankers' association, made a plea to the southern states to break from one-party rule and become bipartisan in their politics.

He declared it to be of fundamental importance that any party governed a nation should have two available parties that the political life of all the people shall be at its best.

"Two parties with at least fairly equal chances of governing are required in the work of governing the country both locally and nationally," he said.

Secretary MacVeagh discussed partisan conditions in the north and south in a friendly spirit and said that while he fully understood the obstacles to the development of bipartisan party politics in the south, he firmly believed the change would be accomplished.

PEACE IS IN SIGHT

MEXICANS WILL END WAR TO AVERT UNITED STATES INTERVENTION.

DIAZ TO ACCEPT ARMISTICE

Government's Reply to Taft is an Apology for Battle on Border—Rebels Dismiss Agua Prieta and Federals March Into Town.

Mexico City.—Peace is in sight. A proposition for an armistice, pending negotiations for a settlement of Mexico's internal troubles, was received by the department of foreign relations from Washington, presumably from Dr. Vasquez Gomez.

The armistice is asked for, to avoid "international complications" and is evidently caused by apprehension that the United States would take a hand in the mixup.

The government has sent a reply to the request that it will be glad to receive and consider a formal proposal for a cessation of hostilities.

It can be stated on the highest authority that the Mexican government will meet the Maderistas fully half way, that no difficulties will be encountered as to amnesty or as to the honest carrying out of the reform program, and that if the Maderistas are in the slightest degree reasonable peace is assured in a few days' time.

The minister for foreign affairs, Francisco L. de la Barra, stated that the Mexican government in its reply to the note of the American government with reference to the fatalities which had occurred during the first battle of Agua Prieta had expressed its regret for the same and had offered to repeat the orders already given to its soldiers to avoid shooting in the direction of the American frontier, although it pointed out that the shots which had caused the fatalities in question were fired, according to official information corroborated by the press, by the American volunteers who form the majority of the so-called Lopez company of rebels.

In its reply the Mexican government declared its surprise at the statements of certain subordinate officials, a procedure opposed to the practices of international law and contrary to the friendship which exists between the two nations.

Further, Mr. De la Barra expressed his conviction that these incidents will not affect the friendly relations between the two nations in the slightest, as their respective governments are animated by the most sincere sense of justice.

Agua Prieta, Mexico.—The rebel army, following almost 18 hours of incessant fighting in defense of Agua Prieta, hastily evacuated the town during the night. It turned out that they and when day broke was nowhere to be seen. The Mexican national troops entered this city at dawn, encountering no resistance.

The reason for the evacuation of the city after their all day defense of it was not at first apparent. The rebels' hasty withdrawal seems to be that they had exhausted their ammunition.

Later developments showed the rebel army to ha disrupted. Its leaders gave up the fight and the men, left to themselves, to have fled in directions of their own individual choosing.

The victorious federal force, which occupied the town, numbered about 1,200 men. Lieut. Col. Reynaldo Diaz Bluefields, commander of the forces, were Major Luis Medina Barron of the rurales and Commandant Francisco Ruiz, formerly prefect of the town of Moctezume.

The government losses may never be known. The federal forces found the assistances of the Red Cross, stating that the army would care for its own wounded. During the fighting the federals removed their dead and wounded to the rear. It is understood that they buried a hundred on the field. None was brought into the hill rear of Agua Prieta.

Washington.—That President Taft is more determined than ever that the United States shall not intervene in Mexico became known after a conference of himself and Secretary Knox and a communication from the house of representatives.

The president said difficulties must necessarily arise out of conditions in Mexico because of the proximity of fighting to the American line.

"But I will not intervene later on saying, 'it takes two to make a war.'"

Doctor Gomez, revolutionary agent here, sent an urgent message to General Medero by way of El Paso, cautioning him against attacking Juerez at present.

CHOIR OF ST. JOHN THE DIVINE IN NEW YORK IS CONSECRATED.

Many Distinguished Clergymen and Laymen Are Present—Two Beautiful Chapels Dedicated.

New York. — The Cathedral of St. John the Divine, the largest church edifice in the western hemisphere, was formally opened here in the presence of distinguished clergymen from both the United States and Europe together with prominent personages from the various walks of life.

Though the great structure on Morningside Heights may not be fully completed for 75 years to come, the completion of the "crossing" has given between the colossal granite arches of the tower a space where 5,000 people may congregate. It is this part, the choir and the two finished chapels, that was consecrated.

The largest and most distinguished procession ever assembled in an Episcopal church in this country was seen at the opening service. Among those who participated in the ceremonies were 26 bishops, 400 other clergymen and the delegates to the diocese convention. Among prominent laymen who attended the exercises were Mrs. William H. Taft, and Governor and Mrs. Dix. President Taft could not arrange to be present.

Among the bishops who took part in the ceremonies were: Warrell of Nova Scotia, Olmsted of central New York, Millspaugh of Kansas, Vincent of southern Ohio, Lyons of Newark, Burgess of Long Island, Herding of Washington, Mackay-Smith of Philadelphia, Grafton and Condjutor Bishop Weller of Fond du Lac, Wis.; Tehbi of Bethlehem, Pa.; Whitehead of Pittsburg, Brewster of Connecticut, Kinsman of Delaware, Lawrence of Massechusetts, Knight of Cuba, Sweeney of Toronto and Morris W. Ewart, head of the Moravian church in this country.

Much of the structure thrown open for use today is temporary, Parts consecrated are the permenent ones only. These are the choir, although that is not yet wholly complete, for much of the interior marble lining is not in; and two of the chapels, both permanent, the one erected by August Belmont, which is the middle one, and is known as St. Saviour's chapel, and the one given by Mrs. Edward King, immediately adjoining and known as the Chapel of St. Columba. The other side of the choir is not yet finished.

The cost of the cathedral to date has been between $3,000,000 and $4,000,000. Some money has been set aside for endowment, and there is no debt. It is expected that the completed structure will cost a total of $15,000,000. So elaborate and colossal are the plans for the edifice that more than one notable feat of engineering had to be performed and others are yet to be solved. One such precedented achievement was the placing of the keystone in the centre arch, the largest all-granite span in the world, without the use of scaffolding or false work.

EDUCATORS IN CONFERENCE

Big Gathering in Jacksonville, Fla., Discusses Adaptation of Education to Rural Life.

Jacksonville, Fla. — Probebly never before in the history of the city has there been such a gathering of prominent persons in Jacksonville as at present. A thousand delegates sided at the opening of the fourteenth annual session of tha Conference of Education in the South. Leading educators, statesmen, lawyers, editors, physicians, preachers, farmers, agriculturists, governors—men and women in all walks of life—comprise the small army that fills all the hotels of the city.

The visitors were welcomed at the first general session in the Ashley Street auditorium by Albert W. Gilchrist of Florida, William M. Hollowey, state superintendent of public instruction of Florida; Mayor W. S. Jordan and Francis P. Conroy, president of the board of trade.

EDWARD A. MOSELEY EXPIRES

Secretary of Interstate Commerce Commission Dies of Heart Disease, Aged 65 Years.

Washington.—Edward A. Moseley, secretary of the interstate commerce commission and originator of much labor legislation, died here, after a long illness. He was sixty-five years old.

The immediate cause of death was heart trouble, superinduced by acute kidney disease.

As an intimate friend and personal adviser of presidents, cabinet officers, representatives, senators and other public officials during the last quarter of a century Mr. Moseley became established notabin results, especially along humanitarian and philanthropic lines.

Day New Equitable Chief.

New York.—William A. Day, vice-president of the Equitable Life Assurance society, was elected president of the society to fill the vacancy caused by the death of Paul Morton. Mr. Day was elected by practically a unanimous vote.

Says Army is Insufficient.

Washington.—Compulsory military training was advocated by Gen. Leonard Wood, chief of staff of the United States army, in a speech at a banquet of the Sons of the Revolution.

WILL LOOK TO CANADA FOR WHEAT

ONE REASON WHY AMERICANS GO TO CANADA.

In the Chicago Inter-Ocean of a few days since reference was made to the fact that in 1909 the United States raised 737,189,000 bushels of wheat, and last year grew only 695,442,000, a decrease of 41,746,000 bushels. The article went on to say: "True we raised last year more than enough wheat for our own needs, but it is apparent that if production continues to decrease in that ratio we will soon be obliged to look to other countries for wheat to supply our rapidly increasing population."

The purpose of the article was to show that reciprocity was to be desired. This is a question that I do not propose to deal with, preferring to leave it to others who have made a greater study of that economic question then I have. The point to be considered is, with the high price of lands in the United States, and with the much lower priced lands of Canada, and their ability to produce probably more abundantly, is it not well for the United States farmer to take advantage of the opportunity Canada affords with its lower-priced lands and take a part in supplying the needs of the United States, which it is quite apparent must come sooner or later? It is probable there are now about 300,000 American farmers in Western Canada, cultivating large farms, and becoming rich, in the growing of 25- and 30-bushel-to-the acre-wheat, in producing large yields of oats and barley, and in raising horses and cattle cheaply on the wild prairie grasses that are there, both succulent and abundant. All these find a ready market at good prices. Amongst the Americans who have made their homes in Canada are to be found colonies of Scandinavians, and all are doing well. I have before me a letter from an American Scandinavian, now a Canadian, an extract from which is interesting. Writing from Turtle Lake, Saskatchewan, he says:

"I came up here from Fergus Falls, Minn., October 24th, 1910, and thought I would let you know how I have been getting along. We had a very mild winter up to New Year's, but since then it has been quite cold and lots of snow, but not worse than that we could be out every day working, even though we had 65 below zero a few days ago. We do not feel the cold here the same as we did in Minnesota, as it is very still and the air is high and dry. This is a splendid place for cattle raising and mixed farming. There is some willow brush and small poplars on part of the land, which is rolling and covered with splendid grass in the summer. Not far from here there is plenty of poplar timber material. There are only 8 Norwegians here, 6 Scotchmen, 2 Germans. The lake is 20 miles long and full of very fine fish.

"There is a lot of land yet that has not been taken and room for many settlers, and we wish you would send some settlers up here, as there are fine prospects for them, especially for those who have a little money to start with. Send them here to Turtle Lake, and we will show them the land, if they have secured plats, showing the vacant lands, at the Government office in Battleford. Send us up some good Scandinavians this spring."

The Canadian government agents will try to meet his wishes.

Willing to Make an Effort.

A good example in the Scottish highlands was the custom for a piper to play in front of the house every weekday morning to awaken the household. After an overzealous Saturday night, however, the piper forgot the day and began his reveille (and he played the pipes!) on Sunday morning. The angry master shouted to him from the bedroom window: "Here, you are not know the fourth commandment?" And the piper stutterly replied: "Naa, sir, but if ye'll show me what it is—for I'll—for I'll try it, sir."

Minnesota Legislature

Proceedings at the Minnesota State Capitol for the Past Week.

St. Paul, April 18.—Riotous scenes marked the adjournment of the lower house of the Minnesota legislature at three minutes after midnight this morning after the forced adjournment attacked an alleged representative of the brewing interests and ordered him from the floor.

Belligerent Attitude Assumed.

"You dog— scoundrel," he raged. "You lie—you lie. It is you and the breweries who have tied up legislation and disgraced the state of Minnesota." The man hurried from the assembly room while Mr. Spooner was held back by a number of house members.

As a result of the adjournment, nearly 400 proposed laws, many of them important ones, passed into oblivion. It killed the extension of the local option law to cities of the fourth class, the state-wide primary law and other reform measures which had been sent over from the senate.

During the morning session affairs in the house resulted such a condition that Speaker Dunn threatened to call out the militia.

Pandemonium reigned, and semblance of order had been lost and a fist fight on the floor had been averted only by a score of members separating the combatants. The house was in an uproar. Few if any of the members were in their seats. The sound of the speaker's gavel echoed through the hall.

It was all part of the debate on the bill to limit senatorial representation to not more than seven from one county.

Representatives Dan O'Neill of Thief River Falls and Thomas Frankson of Spring Valley were the actors in an altercation and a personal encounter such as has not occurred in the Minnesota legislature for years.

Bad blood between the two men developed during the debate on the "one senator" bill, in which O'Neill came to the rescue of the cities, and was interrupted by Frankson. They had words at several times. Frankson kept telling O'Neill that he was making a mistake and would suffer at home because he refused to stand for limiting city representation.

During the pendency of W. I. Nolan's motion to recall the bill from the senate, Frankson walked over into the aisle to where O'Neill was sitting.

"I'll send you to political oblivion, old fellow" he said.

O'Neill, who is excitable and remarkably strong for his years, jumped up and made for Frankson. Seizing him by the coat collar, he began rushing him down the aisle and back toward his own side of the house.

"I've stood enough of that from you," he raged. "You can't give me any more of your talk."

Twenty members were on the spot in an instant, and several of them had hard work in releasing O'Neill's grasp from Frankson's coat. The man from Spring Valley was white and O'Neill was shaking as though pained when he was finally induced to take his seat.

All this time the speaker was hammering with his gavel, and it was several minutes after the men were separated before he got order and could speak. Then he began reading the house a lecture on preserving order. As he talked he began to get excited himself, until he came to the climax and threatened to call out the militia. There was applause from a part of the house, but not from the northern end city members, with whom the speaker is decidedly unpopular.

Thomas Frankson, who according to the blue book is 42 years old and a sturdy fellow of 180 pounds or more, strutted around after the incident and said, "I wish he had come out in the corridor a few minutes and I'd fix him." Mr. O'Neill is 58 years old.

In the senate the disorder was almost as great, although there was no personal encounter.

The deadlock which was kept up all night Friday in the Senate was finally broken. The body adjourned at 3 a. m., to meet again at nine and the "all-senator" bill went through with little opposition.

The senate passed the McKinnis bill, abolishing capital punishment, by a vote of 35 to 19. The life of Patrick O'Malley, the La Sueur wife murderer, is thus saved. But he will go to the penitentiary for life.

The bill, turning over from the state to the city of St. Paul new land created by the change of the bed of the Mississippi river was passed. St. Paul, according to its senators, hopes to sell a part of this land for about $100,000 to railroads for terminal facilities and a union depot and built a Mississippi harbor with the money gained. An amendment by Senator Moonan that the railroads should pay an annual tax of 5 per cent a year on property thus acquired was voted down.

State Tax Levy Is Increased.

The state tax levy for general revenue purposes is fixed at 1.9 mills in the tax bill introduced in the house by L. C. Spooner and passed under a suspension of the rules. This is an increase of .7 mills over two years ago. The levy will net the state about $2,200,000 a year. The entire tax levy for all state purposes for the next two years is 3½ mills, as compared with 2.53 mills fixed two years ago. The total levy will bring the state $4,200,000 annually.

The Oregon plan for direct election of United States senators was among the many bills passed by the senate, by a vote of 56 to 5.

The bill provides for the non-partisan direct election of United States senators. The legislators must sign a pledge either that they will refuse to vote for the candidate receiving the highest number of votes or that they will vote for such candidates. This is a choice in name only, according to both supporters and opponents of the bill, as the legislator who refused to promise to support the popular senatorial candidate would stand no chance of being elected, they say.

At each party primary, under the bill, a candidate of the party shall be selected. At the general election, the two candidates shall be voted on and the legislature will be compelled to elect the popular candidate. This might result here as it has in Oregon and Nevada, in a Republican legislature being compelled to elect a Democrat to the United States senate, or the other way around.

Session Cost is $358,792.

Legislative expenses for the present session are more than $10,000 in excess of the expenses of the 1909 session. The 1911 legislature has used a total of $200,248.91, while the 1909 session succeeded in spending but $190,752.76. The standing appropriation of the legislature at the beginning of the present session was $82,000, but this original amount was increased until it totaled $207,000, and with a few incidentals, an aggregate sum of $308,792.43 must be the credit of the 1911 legislature.

Two antiliquor bills were acted upon by the senate. The S. C. Dunn bill to abolish road houses lost by a vote of 29 to 34. The bill to allow cities of the fourth class to vote on the license question was passed.

Senators H. H. Sullivan and Rockna had passed a resolution that five members of the senate be appointed a committee to meet without pay to draw up a workingmen's compensation bill.

By a vote of 36 to 18, the senate passed the "hotel zone" bill, conferring upon the Radisson and Dyckman hotels of Minneapolis the privilege to serve liquor to their guests. The bill passed the house several weeks ago. Governor Eberhart said, after the passage of the bill, that he would sign it.

Doings in the House.

Speaker Dunn interrupted business to instruct the sergeant-at-arms to eject all lobbyists from the floor of the house.

George A. Ralph, state drainage engineer, is practically exonerated on every charge made against him in the majority report of the house investigating committee. It is signed by C. T. Knapp, C. R. Fowler, J. J. Morlority and Ralph E. Cox. The minority report signed by Donald Robertson of Argyle and recommending the dismissal of Mr. Ralph.

Senator Schaller was voted $1,000 for his services in the prosecution of Patrick Gibbons, who killed his wife and a priest in South St. Paul.

Senator Landon introduced a resolution abolishing capital punishment in the state training school. John Lennon gave notice of defiance, and this resolution went over until today.

The house passed a resolution introduced by Speaker Dunn under suspension of the rules. It asks congress to pass a law prohibiting injunction proceedings to be brought in the federal court on a state law until the case has been finally adjudicated in the state's supreme court.

CITY HALL BURNS.

Brussels, Belgium.—The city hall at Schaerbek, a suburb of the capital, together with its priceless works of art including notable paintings and Gobelins was destroyed by fire. Two firemen were killed during a desperate effort to save some of the contents of the building. It is believed the fire was of incendiary origin.

COLLEGE OF BISHOPS

GATHERING OF METHODIST CHIEFS AT WINONA MAY FORMULATE MANY NEW IDEAS.

TO DISCUSS PLANS OF UNION

"South" and "Protestant" Consolidation With Methodist Episcopal to Be Big Factors at Session.

Winona.—The meeting of the Methodist College of Bishops which will convene in Winona late this month may develop into one of the historic ones in Methodism, interesting as many as 5,000,000 persons, not only in the United States, but in various parts of the world. The question of the unity of churches is to be the vital point for consideration at the meeting. The consideration of the union with the Methodist church South, a matter which has been before the methodists for two years, will be threshed out and the proposition formulated for the vote of the different conferences and final ratification at the Minneapolis meeting in 1912.

The Methodist Episcopal church South, was separated from the parent denomination in 1844, before the Civil war, because of differences which arose regarding slavery and slaveholding by members of the church.

It is possible, according to Rev. Frank Doran of Winona, who is in charge of arrangements for the meeting, that the Southern church will send a delegation here in connection with the bishops and to fully discuss the question of organic union. The union of the Protestant Methodist church, which has its strength in the New England states, with the Methodist Episcopal church is another proposition which will receive attention and be brought to a focus. The federation of all evangelical churches in the United States, likewise will come up for discussion.

Interests Entire Country.

The meeting will be the most important gathering to be held this year in the United States by the Methodist Episcopal church and is of international interest, since the decisions of this body will have to do with the special and routine deliberations of the annual conferences which are to be convened this fall in every section where the Methodists are represented.

At this meeting the rulings of the church disciplines during the ecclesiastical year will be reviewed and permanent laws will be recommended to the general conference, which meets next year. Appeals which have been taken from the decisions of the presiding officials of the annual conference will be discussed and matters of doctrine, comity and federation will receive due attention.

Will Name Bishops.

This convention will also appoint the various bishops to the annual conference over which they are to preside during the next year. The church interests in the mission fields of the world, its spiritual outlook and the educational institutions for which it is sponsor will each pass in review.

The senior member of the board, Bishop Henry W. Warren of Denver, Colo., is the dean of the college of bishops and will preside. The twenty-eight Protestant churches of Wisconsin and Illinois ministers have the extensive preparations for entertainment. While here the bishops will occupy the various pulpits of the city.

An invitation has come from the Calvert church of Chicago for Bishop Quayle to preach the dedicatory sermon of that church's new building and fixtures the remaining $13,000 of indebtedness.

Six of the bishops will not be present because they are on a tour of visitation of the foreign mission stations of the denomination. They are: Bishop F. McDowell of Chicago, who is in India; Bishop James W. Bashford, who lives in Pekin, China; Bishop William Burt, who lives in Zurich and who is now holding a conference in Bulgaria; Bishop Joseph C. Hartzell, who is in Africa, and Luther B. Wilson of Philadelphia, who is at present in Africa.

Rev. Mr. Doran is at present working out the program, which will be completed late this week.

AGED PAIR TO WEST.

Minnesota Sisters Have First Train Ride in Fifty Years.

Stanwood.—On their first train ride in 56 years and the second of their lives, Miss Anna Nelson, 76 years old, and her sister, Mrs. Sarah Larson, 85, arrived here at the Josephine Old People's home, maintained by Northwestern Norwegians. The trip was made from Christiania, Minn., in four days, and the octogenarians were gleeful over the many sights they had seen.

FIRST INTER-LAKE CLEARS.

Steamer Harry Berwind Leaves Duluth for Fort William.

Duluth. — The first inter-lake boat to clear from Duluth this year was the steamer Harry Berwind, which left for Fort William in ballast. It is expected that by the time she gets loaded and has reached Sault Ste. Marie, on her way to Buffalo, the St. Mary river will be open to navigation. Several vessels are loading grain and package freight.

WRONG MILK MEASURE

Winona Attorney Declares People of City Are Defrauded Out of $100,000.

Winona.—William A. Codmen, local attorney, speaking before the Social Science club here on the subject of "Weights and Measures," declared that the citizens of Winona were being defrauded out of thousands of dollars a year because of the prevalent use of the liquid quart instead of the milk quart measure as provided in the state laws of Minnesota. He defined the law to the members present.

"There is not a single legal standard measure used in the city of Winona by any person in the sale of milk," said the. "The county treasurer has the only quart measure furnished by the state, and he does not know and there is nothing on the measure indicating whether it is a dry, liquid or milk quart.

"Furthermore, the county treasurer, the county sealer of weights and measures, has never been called upon, asked or required to test and seal any scales, weights or measures for any one, as the law provides.

"Assuming that about $300 is spent daily by the people of Winona for milk and cream or $110,000 annually, citizens are being defrauded out of $25,000 a year because of the use of the liquid quart instead of the milk quart measure. Probably $100,000 is lost in this city by the consuming public by reason of false scales, weights and measures each year."

VINCENT IN DULUTH.

University President Puts In Strenuous Day in Zenith City.

Duluth.—President George E. Vincent of the University of Minnesota was the guest of Duluth. He arrived early and under the escort of a committee of Duluth men he set out immediately to meet Duluth people to talk over the needs and wishes of the University about its needs and its future.

A program that took almost every minute of the day and evening had been prepared, and he entered upon it with energy to see everything to be seen and improved every minute.

Mr. Vincent addressed the Central high school students, the normal students, and was the guest of President W. E. Bohannon of the normal at lunch. He went for a drive around the boulevard with Dean A. F. Woods of the state's agricultural school. He was guest at a reception after the lndies this afternoon at the Commercial club and a banquet was given at the Commercial club in his honor this evening, at which a large number of prominent local people were present.

Mr. Vincent spent some time with H. B. Hovland, Duluth regant of the University. Vincent made an excellent impression on Duluth people.

SCHOOLS WILL COMBINE.

Glenwood Academy to be Merged with Park Region Luther College.

Glenwood.—At a meeting of the Glenwood Academy association it was decided to consolidate with the Park Region Luther college at Fergus Falls. A tentative agreement has been made by the board of trustees of the two corporations, which was ratified at a special meeting of the stockholders. The Glenwood academy for a certain consideration agreed to close the school here at the end of the spring term.

Both schools belong to the Norwegian Lutheran Synod and it is believed it will be to the interest of the church to consolidate and make the Fergus Falls school a college. The Park Region Luther college was two years ago made junior college by the Minnesota district and this year at the general synod to be held in St. Paul is now will likely be made a synod college.

CAN BAR VETERANS.

Law Giving Preference to Army Men Held Unconstitutional.

Duluth.—Judge Dibell declared unconstitutional the state law which provides that old soldiers shall be given the preference in state appointments where they can qualify for the situation.

The decision was in the suit of Albert Woolson against Gov. Eberhart. Mr. Woolson sought the office of deputy boiler inspector.

BLAST IS FATAL TO MINER.

Delayed Explosion Results in Death of Chisholm, Minn., Man.

Chisholm.—Nicholee Sonich, a miner at the Shenango iron mine at Chisholm was killed by a delayed blast. He fired several simultaneously, as was his custom, and went to examine the work he had done. Suddenly a blast was slow and Sonich arrived at the scene of the blasting just at the time that it exploded. He was 25 years old and unmarried.

Injured in Fight With a Bear.

Duluth.—Word has reached Duluth from Knife River, near Two Harbors, that George Blechman, an employe of Alger-Smith & Co., at Knife No. 6, on the Duluth & Northern Minnesota road, is expected to die from injuries that he received in a fight with a bear. Blechman and a campmate named Jack Scanlon were walking to a spring near camp when they suddenly came upon a bear. They thought to frighten the animal, but it would not scare, but attacked them instead.

FERGUS FALLS WINS DAM SUIT.

Jury Decides City Was Not Responsible for Flood.

Fergus Falls.—The damage suit brought by E. W. Barnard against this city for losses incurred in the washout of the municipal electric dam in, 1909, was won by the city. The case was a test suit and was stubbornly contested. The city admitted that it had no theory to account for the washout, but took the ground that an employee of recognized standing was employed to draw the plans and specifications; that the two inspectors were employed to watch the work and see that everything was done properly; that the contract was let as provided by law, and that every reasonable precaution was taken to insure the safety of the dam. It held that the washout was simply an unavoidable accident for which it should not be held responsible.

The plaintiff claimed first that the washout was probably due to the closing of a spring underneath the dam, but this theory has since been abandoned as cutlet when it had gained a headway, and then claimed that the dam was forced an outlet and gradually undermined the structure, and held that the city had closed this spring.

Mr. Barnard's basement was flooded and he lost about $800 worth of goods. The jury was held to the city's theory that no one knew what caused the washout, although some of them were of the opinion that some one had thrown in quicklilver above it, a theory advanced soms time ago by former Congressman and former Alderman Harold E. Boen. In any event, they did not feel that the city should be held responsible.

JEALOUS LOVER SHOOTS GIRL.

Father Searching With Lantern Finds Body of Daughter.

Brainerd.—On the way to a dance at St. Matthias, Bertha Jorden, the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Carl Jorden, was shot and killed by her jealous lover, Charles Kunde, 21. In the buggy with Bertha Jorden, her brother, Otto Jorden, 18, and the Kunde boy. Near the farm of David Wickham they quarreled with her and Kunde threatened to shoot. The brother attempted to wrest away the revolver and was thrown out of the buggy by the infuriated man. The horse ran away.

The first shot at the girl missed her. He fired two more and struck her in the temple. The murderer then leaped into the buggy and drove to Motley. Otto, who had been injured in the encounter, heard a shot in the bushes and Kunde had killed himself. The bodies of the girl and her lover lay 30 feet apart.

The mother of the girl was in Brainerd, and the old father took a lantern and went out midnight found his girl in death, her little heart dead amongst with her blood.

Bertha and Kunde had been keeping company for two years, and it is said she did not care to receive his attentions any more, as Kunde appeared to be very jealous. The parents of both are well known farmers.

SIMPSON WINS TWO SUITS.

Minnesta Attorney General Gets Quick Action in Supreme Court.

Washington.—Attorney General Geo. T. Simpson got quick action in the supreme court in the lumber cases he argued last week and as both there is a victory for the taste.

Both involved timber trespass on state lands, the one by the Rat Portage lumber company and the other by the Le Sueur Lumber company. The court has awarded damages at $5,200 to the state in the Rat Portage case and $8,200 in the Le Sueur case.

Chief Justice Start announced that both were dismissed for want of jurisdiction, which confirms the decision of the lower court. The announcement was verbal and was not accompanied by a written opinion.

WOULD EXTEND PATROL LIMITS.

East Grand Forks Saloon Men Circulate Petition to Allow Building.

East Grand Forks.—A petition is being circulated in the city asking the city council to extend the patrol limits, and make the territory in which saloons may be sold, so that saloonkeepers who are unable to lease from the properties may build saloons and obtain their own licenses. At present no saloon is let on either side of Demers avenue from Fourth street to the river is included in the patrol territory and this is all occupied. If the petition is granted several new buildings may be erected for saloon purposes.

Big Saw Mill Begins Work.

East Grand Forks.—The big sawmill of the Grand Forks Lumber Company started operations, giving employment to 300 men who have been anxiously waiting for the opening. This is two weeks earlier than last year, and the logs have been shipped in instead of floated, on account of the low stage of the river. Over 3,000,000 feet of logs are ready to work upon, and another big drive will be here in a few days.

Diamond Salesman Robbed.

Duluth.—G. W. Armstrong, a traveling salesman for a jewelry house was robbed of $2,000 worth of diamonds which he carried in his coat pocket while being shaved in the Lenox hotel barber shop and the porter of the shop, Frank Smith, colored, is under arrest, charged with grand larceny. The case with the jewels in fact was found in the adjoining room, when the police with Armstrong searched the place. The porter denies having stolen the property, although he had taken the coat.

RATE ADVANCE SUSPENDED.

On Malt Shipments on the Milwaukee Road.

Washington, D. C. — Freight rate advances on shipments of malt from Duluth to Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul railway were suspended by the interstate commerce commission until August 15, 1911. Meantime an inquiry into the reasonableness of the proposed advances will be made.

GOING AFTER "LAME DUCKS."

Representative Clark of Florida Would Investigate Sinecures.

Washington, D. C. — An overhauling of the nests of numerous "lame ducks" was prescribed in a resolution introduced in the house of representatives by Representative Clark (Dem., Fla.. It provided for a committee to investigate the "labors" of all commissions, boards and special bodies in the government service.

AFTER 7 YEARS SUFFERING

I Was Cured by Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound

Waurika, Okla.—"I had female trouble for seven years, would run down and no nerves. I could not do anything. The doctors treated me for different things but did me no good. I got so bad that I could not sleep day or night. While in this condition I read of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, and began its use and wrote to Mrs. Pinkham for advice. In short time I had gained my average weight and am now strong and well."—Mrs. Sallie Stevens, R. F. D., No. 1, Box 81, Waurika, Okla.

Another Grateful Woman.

Huntington, Mass.—"I was in a nervous, run down condition and for three years could find no help.

"I saw my present good health in Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and Blood Purifier which I believe saved my life.

"My doctor knows what helped me and does not say one word against it."—Mrs. Mary Janeten Bates, Box 106, Huntington, Mass.

Because your case is a difficult one, doctors having failed you no good, do not continue to suffer without giving Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound a trial. It surely has among many cases of female ills, such as inflammation, ulceration, displacements, fibroid tumors, irregularities, periodic pains, backache, that bearing-down feeling, and nervous prostration.

A woman's mind enables her to reach a conclusion without starting.

Clearing Kansas of Grasshoppers.

A live grasshopper will eat a dead grasshopper. A farmer mixed paris green and bran together and let a grasshopper eat it. It died and 20 grasshoppers ate it up, and they died. Four hundred ate these 20 and they died. Eight thousand ate those 400 and they died. Sixteen and sixty-four thousand ate those 8,000 and died, and then the farmer troubled no more.—Anthony Bulletin.

DAME NATURE HINTS When the Food Is Not Suited.

When Nature gives her signal that something is wrong it is generally with the food; the old Dame is always faithful and one should act at once.

To put off the change is to risk that which may be irreparable. An Arizona man says:

"For years I could not safely eat any breakfast. I tried all kinds of breakfast foods, but found them all soft, starchy messes, which gave me distressing headaches. I drank strong coffee, too, which added to my misery at the time, but added to the headaches afterwards. Toast and coffee were no better, for I found the toast very constipating.

"A friend persuaded me to quit coffee and the starchy breakfast foods and use Postum and Grape-Nuts instead. I shall never regret taking his advice.

"The change they have worked in me is wonderful. I now have no more of the distressing sensations in my stomach after eating, and I never have any headaches. I have gained 12 pounds in weight and feel better in every way. Grape-Nuts meka a delicious as well as a nutritious dish, and I find that Postum is easily digested and never produces dyspeptic symptoms."

How "Then" Would Work.

"How" is the word which has been augmented for use as an English pronoun of common gender, a luxury which the English language has thus far had the fortitude to forego. It was considered suitable for English because it came from the Greek. Its use may be illustrated as follows:

If a parent desires to spank thou's child or her, as the case may be) child (the or she) should take thou (him, her or it) across thou's knee. Then thou should remove thou's slipper, and after explaining to the child the reprehensibility of thou's conduct thou should apply the slipper to that portion of thou's anatomy which from time immemorial has been dedicated to that purpose.

It may easily be seen from the above how "thou" affects great clarification.—Lippincott's.

In Praise of the Eskimos.

Commander Peary in the narrative describing his discovery of the north pole devotes a very long chapter to the Eskimos, with whom he has had intimate dealings for eighteen years. He tells us that though they are savages they are not savage; that though they are without government they are not lawless; that though they are uneducated they exhibit a remarkable degree of intelligence. He assures us that they have no religion, yet he describes them as destitute of vice and ready to share their last meal with the hungry. He thinks it would be impossible to Christianize them, but they already possess the cardinal graces of faith, hope and charity, for "without them they could never survive the six months' night and the other rigors of their home."

Legend of Holyrood Palace.

Holyrood palace, Edinburgh, Scotland, once a British royal residence, is the subject of a strange legend. Robert Louis Stevenson includes it in his little book on Edinburgh. "There is a silly story," he writes, "of a subterranean passage between the castle of Holyrood and a bold highland piper who volunteered to explore its windings. He made his entrance by the right end, playing a strathspey. The citizens footed it after him down the street, following his descent by the sound of the chanter from below, until all of a sudden, about the level of St. Giles', the music came abruptly to an end and the people in the street stood at fault with knees uplifted. Whether he was choked with gases or perished in some less wasrenowned bodily befell the piper remains a point of doubt, but the piper has never again been seen or heard of from that day to this."

Queer Collateral.

"Here is a fact as strange as it is true," said an Egyptologist. "Mummies in ancient Egypt were used chiefly as collateral.

"When an Egyptian wanted to borrow he gave his father's or grandfather's mummy as security. Sometimes, if he required a large sum, he gave his father and both grandfathers, and he would even throw in the mummy of his mother-in-law if she fortunately happened to be in a manipulated state.

"Joking aside," the Egyptologist continued, "what I tell you is the truth. An Egyptian was not permitted to borrow without pledging the mummy of some near relative. It was deemed in Egypt both impious and infamous not to redeem so sacred a pledge as that, and he who died with a family mummy still in pawn was himself buried in unconsecrated ground."—Claimant Esquire.

Didn't Wait the Attack.

At Boulogne during a great reception some years ago a number of English ladies in their anxiety to see everything pressed with such force against the soldiers who were keeping the line that the soldiers were forced to give way and generally were, as politeness say, "hustered in the execution of their duty." The officer in command, observing the state of affairs, called out: "One roll of the drum! If they don't stand back kiss them all!" After the first sound of the drum the ladies took to flight.

"If they had been French," said a Parisian journal, "they would have remained to a woman."

Try our farm bargains.

His Chance to Vote.

The chronicles of our vice presidents are notoriously barren of incident. This probably was the reason for the way Adlai Stevenson secured the exercise of a constitutional prerogative. It was one sleepy day toward the end of his term as vice president. The United States senate was plowing through the calendar and passing many bills. Bills are considered agreed to in the senate if no oral objection is raised after they have passed through the preliminary stages, but the usual form of asking for the yeas and nays is followed by the presiding officer. The vice president said:

"Senators in favor of the bill will say 'Aye.'" Pause. "Contrary, 'No.'" Not a single response.

"The vote is a tie," announced Mr. Stevenson.

The senator in charge of the bill paused on his way to the clerkroom and looked surprised.

"In case of a tie the vice president may cast the deciding vote. In the exercise of his constitutional privileges the vice president votes 'Aye.'"

THE "THIRD DEGREE."

Ethics of the Process as Defined by Inspector Byrnes.

"The 'third degree,'" said Inspector Byrnes, the former chief of detectives, "should be a payable rather than a physical process. It is not remorse brought about by continual thought upon the heinousness of his crime that drives a guilty man to confession. It is the nervous strain involved in a long effort to maintain his pretense of innocence, while he is in constant fear that the police are in possession of evidence that may prove his guilt. Something like a parallel case would be that of a prizefighter who should surmise that his antagonist was playing with him in the ring while capable of sending in a knockout blow at any time he felt so inclined. Apprehension that he was dealing with conditions of the nature of which he was unaware would eventually weaken the man in that case. Tell a suspected man who is guilty that you have evidence of his guilt and that he will get nothing to eat or will not be permitted to sleep until he confesses, and unless he is a particularly stupid fellow he will know that you have no proof against him and are only trying to get it. For instance, show him ostentatiously the weapon with which he may have killed a man and tell him that you know all about the crime and he would better confess it. He will say to himself, 'They haven't got sufficient evidence to convict me and are trying to make me furnish it, for if they had the evidence they wouldn't care whether I confessed or not,' and thus he will be encouraged to hold out. Also, if he does confess under duress, he makes a false confession, which he knows it will be impossible to corroborate.

"Now, a guilty man in ninety-nine cases out of a hundred is not sure that he has covered every trace of his crime, and he may readily be put into the state of mind of the man in Poe's story of 'The Telltale Heart,' wherein he don't stop believing that proof of his guilt has been discovered and that his cross examiners are mocking him by pretending not to be aware of it. Let the guilty man catch sight of an implement with which his crime is associated in the possession of the police, which he believes has been unintentionally left where he sees it, and it throws him into a panic, because he does not know how they came by the weapon nor what else they may have discovered demonstrating his guilt in getting hold of it. Perhaps he has concocted a story in his mind which the discovery of this weapon renders implausible, and he mentally puts together and rejects one sequence of lies after another, wondering whether it is safe to take chances on this bit of information or that being not in the possession of the police. Then he is overwhelmed every few moments by the thought that everything is known and all his efforts are useless. The guilty man in this condition is no longer normal, and his collapse is only a matter of time."—Frank Marshall White in Harper's Weekly.

The Origin of Oxygen.

That eminent scientist Lord Kelvin maintained that all the oxygen in the atmosphere probably originated from the action of sunlight upon plants. When our earth was a globe of hot liquid it contained no vegetable fuel and probably no free oxygen. But as it cooled off plants appeared on its surface, and these began to evolve oxygen through the medium of the sunbeams. Upon the oxygen thus derived we depend for the maintenance of life by breathing. When we burn coal or other vegetable fuel we use up oxygen, and it is to plants again that we owe the restoration of the oxygen thus lost to the air. If they failed to keep up a sufficient supply the atmosphere would ultimately part with its oxygen, and the inhabitants of the earth would disappear in consequence of asphyxiation.

"All Things Come."

The magnate looked up impatiently from his work.

"Well, my good man," he snapped at the disheveled rural person who stood twirling his rusty hat, "what can I do for you?"

"I guess ye don't remember me, Hank," faltered the caller. "But you an' me use ter go swimmin' together in th' old town. Then you got a job in th' bank, an' I got a job in th' grocery store."

"This is all very interesting, and I seem to remember your face. But come to the point—my time is valuable."

"Yes, Hank. You got a better office and left the old village. I stayed plugging along in th' grocery store."

"Well, well?"

Spider Racing.

Lord Devon's property was greatly impoverished by the twelfth earl, who squandered nearly all his fortune and terribly embarrassed the entailed property. He was addicted to a most peculiar form of gambling, namely, spider racing, which he played with the last Marquis of Hastings and the eighth Duke of Bedford. Each player selected a spider, which was placed on the table, and then the latter was gently bented from underneath. The warmth caused the insects to run, and the spider which got to the edge first won. But spiders are curious creatures, and it would frequently happen that a spider which was near the edge and looked like winning would dodge back, traverse the table in all directions and lose the backer the thousands of pounds so nearly won. Lord Tavers, Lord Hastings and the Duke of Bedford each of them squandered enormous sums on this game, which contributed in no small degree to the ruin of the two former.—New York Tribune.

A Lincoln Anecdote.

Jasper Alban Conant tells the following anecdote of Lincoln in the Metropolitan Magazine:

"One of the comliest characters in Washington during the war was jolly old Isaac Newton, the Philadelphia Quaker whom Lincoln appointed commissioner of agriculture—a new office just created by congress. Newton, who tried until at the same time amused the president, had made his reputation as a dairy farm. Beyond this he knew little of agriculture.

"Meeting which, I could not refrain from asking Lincoln why he had appointed such an ignorant man to the office.

"'Because I think he's competent enough to attend to all the agriculture we will have till the war is ended,' was the answer."

IMPORTANT THAT PUBLIC SHOULD KNOW ABOUT GREAT KIDNEY REMEDY

The testimonial I am to give you comes unsolicited. I have been suffering from lumbago for ten years and at times was unable to stand erect. A Mr. Dean of this city, saw me in my condition (best ever) and inquired the cause. I told him that I had the lumbago. He replied, "If you get what I tell you to, you need not have it." I said I would take anything for ease. He said, "You get two bottles of Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root and take it, and if it does not fix you O. K. I will pay for the medicine myself." I did so and am a well man. For five months I have been as well as could be. Before I took your Swamp-Root was in constant pain day and night. This may look like advertising, but it seems to me most important that the public should be made familiar with this treatment as it is the only one I know which is an absolute cure. I owe a great deal to Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root, and am anxious that others situated as I was should know and take advantage of it. Hoping that this testimonial may be of benefit to some one, I am

"ECZEMA ITCHED SO I COULDN'T STAND IT."

"I suffered with eczema on my neck for about six months, beginning by little pimples breaking out. I kept scratching till the blood came. It kept getting worse, I couldn't sleep nights any more. It kept breaking for about a month, then I went to a doctor and got some liquid to take. It seemed as if I was going to get better. The itching stopped for about three days, but when it started again was even worse than before. Then eczema itched so badly I couldn't stand it any more. I went to a doctor and he gave me some medicine, but it didn't do any good. We have been having Cuticura Remedies in the house, so I decided to try them. I had been using Cuticura Soap, so I got me a box of Cuticura Ointment, and washed off the affected part with Cuticura Soap three times a day, and then put the Cuticura Ointment on. The first day I put it on, it relieved me of itching so I could sleep all that night. It took about a week, then I could see the scab come off. I kept the treatment up for three weeks, and my eczema was cured.

"My brother got his face burned with gunpowder, and he used Cuticura Soap and Ointment. The people all thought he would have scars, but you can't see that he ever had his face burned. It was simply awful to look at before the Cuticura Remedies (Soap and Ointment) cured it." (Signed) Miss Elizabeth Gehrki, Forest City, Ark., Oct. 16, 1910.

One of the People

By MARY WOOD AYRES

(Copyright, 1911, by Associated Literary Press.)

Dick CARTON was tall, broad shouldered and good to look upon. Perhaps that is why the head waitress gave him one of the choice tables, at the end of the room, where he could have an uninterrupted view of the guests. If so, the favor was unappreciated. He was also quite oblivious of the fact that he had the prettiest waitress in the room, in his busy life mealtime had come to mean so many additional minutes for reading, and he never neglected the opportunity. But today, looking up from the finish of a rather dry government bulletin, his glance was caught by the carriage of a girl who came down the room lightly balancing a tray on one hand. "She could carry it just as easily on her head," he thought, admiringly. "She is from the Smokies surely."

As she was bringing his own order he soon had a nearer view. Her face seemed familiar.

"Haven't I seen you some place before?" he asked, in his abrupt way.

"Sure you have, Mr. Carton."

He started.

She smiled and explained: "I went to the Forbes-Staton school, and you made the speech when I graduated."

It was the mountain school where he himself had studied.

"I am Kitty Raleen."

His knew the Raleens. Some of them lived not ten miles from his father's farm. He was at once interested. "How did you happen to come down here?"

Kitty finished a deep red. "I thought perhaps you had heard. I ran off to Yellowtown to marry Dan Phelps. Sally Husted was with me. Dan—he never showed up. Sally—she went home, but I just couldn't stand to do it. I had enough money to come here. It's been six months now." There was a glint of tears in her eyes as she gathered up some dishes and started up the room.

Dick knew the mountain custom of eloping, even when there was no opposition to the match. Had not his own father and mother slipped off to this same Valleytown? Sometimes, too, he knew the courage of one or the other failed at the last moment. But generally the breach was patched up and they made a second and more conventional honeymoon. Re thinking, he opened another treatise and speedily forgot the incident.

Her cheerful "Good morning, Mr. Carton," at the next meal came as a fresh surprise. The six months at Asherville had smoothed off most of the vernacular from her speech, but she still had some of the mountain twang that he loved. They had worked other changes. Even careless Dick Carton detected in her hair and dress a smartness unknown to the mountain girls. As she waited up the room her cheeks rosy and her head held high several of the men gave her admiring glances. A group gathered between the eyes of the pathologist. A public dining room was no place for a mountain girl.

During the next few days they had many an interrupted fragment of conversation. Dick told her the news in his home letters, and her eyes grew wistful.

"Why don't you go home, 'Kitty?'" he asked earnestly.

"I couldn't stand it." She turned abruptly to answer the sally of a man at the next table. Evidently he said something complimentary, but the girl only tossed her head and laughed.

Carton watched them with increasing irritation. Why did not Dan Phelps come and fetch her?

The Phelps boys, as he knew them, were a bad lot. The women did the work while the men loafed and drank moonshine whisky. Never by any chance had he seen one of them in the audience when he traveled with the state agricultural demonstration car. Dan, he could not remember. Perhaps he was better than the rest of his clan. At least the girl had loved him.

Dick ate rapidly, his books untouched beside his plate. A brilliant plan was formulating in his mind. He would send Dan the money to come and get his girl. Saturday was free. He would arrange to meet Dan, bring him to Kitty, and see them married.

That night, on a train going north, he wrote the letter to Dan, and then tried to dismiss the matter from his mind.

Saturday morning he was an hand, eagerly scanning the passengers from the Murphy train. In the hall fellow who slouched out of the smoker, he knew his bridegroom. He had the dark beauty often seen among the mountain boys, although his few years of manhood had already tarnished it with signs of dissipation. It was, however, too late to stop. Briefly introducing himself he hurried Dan up the street to the Pleasant View hotel.

Kitty was setting the tables in the dining room, a hellboy infurred them. Two girls were laughing and talking at the table. The latter soon raised her head. It was Kitty. She clutched the back of a chair and her face whitened.

"I have brought Dan, Kitty," Carton explained, with a vague sense of uneasiness.

The color had come back to Kitty's cheeks. Her eyes gleamed dangerously. "You—brought—Dan," contemptuously. "Well, you might have saved yourself the trouble."

"But he wants to marry you," he persisted awkwardly.

"Marry him!" she flashed back. "I wouldn't marry him if he were the last man on earth. A nice sort of a husband he'd make for me!"

"You mind what you say, Kitty Raleen," Dan began angrily.

Kitty never gave him a glance. "And you thought I would take him, when I had talked to you and you knew how I felt. You—" She burst into tears.

The other waitress stepped up quickly and put her arms around the sobbing girl. "I think you had both better go away," she said severely.

"I never imagined she would take it this way," Carton exclaimed ruefully, when they were once more on the street.

"Might have known," Dan said sullenly. "Kitty always was a spitfire."

"Perhaps she will feel differently tomorrow," Dick suggested. "I can't understand it."

"Looks to me as if Kitty might be sweet on you. I'm done with her for good. I'll just look around for work to see the sights and then I'll make for home." Turning on his heel he walked up the street.

The abashed state pathologist remained for some moments stupidly staring after him.

Kitty was not in the dining room the next morning, nor the next, and the head waitress's uneasiness increased from day to day. To what desperate measures had the girl come, her? Or perhaps she was lit? Either alternative was disquieting. At length he resolved to commit one of the waitresses.

It was near the end of the dining hour, and the room was filled with guests. The waitresses congregated in little knots, talking. To his unrefined conscience it seemed to be watch him furtively. Plucking up his courage, he beckoned to the nearest one.

"Where is Kitty Raleen?"

"She has gone away." The girl spoke meaningly, and he recognized her as the sole witness of the unfortunate Saturday's encounter.

He gave a little sigh of relief. "O, then you know about it." His tone was so miserable that the girl relented.

"Kitty was afraid you might bring that fellow back, so she left."

"But where has she gone?" he persisted eagerly.

The waitress eyed him sharply. "If I were you I would not hunt her up unless"—she hesitated—"unless you like her pretty well."

"But why, why?" Carton stammered, the blood rushing to his face. "Because Kitty likes you. Didn't she hang over your table the blessed time you were in the room? Didn't she turn color if you as much as spoke to her? Anyone but a man would have seen it." The scorn of her tone was inexpressible.

His head whirled. Kitty loved him. And he—and he—like one in a dream he heard himself saying, "And if I do like her?"

"Then she is at the Bixby hospital, starting a course in trained nursing."

He made straight for the telephone booth, and then caught a car to the Sceptlet. All the way his heart was singing. In his chosen work of teaching the mountain folk how to farm he would have a loving helpmate, he would have one of his people.

FARM and GARDEN

LOYAL FRIEND OF FARMERS

Lowly Toad is Helpful in Fields and Gardens as He Eats All Kinds of Insects.

Farmers' Friend.

Don't kill the toad. Both lentiginous smerkanus you meet. In short, don't kill the toad. He is harmless, in general, and in the fields and gardens he is helpful, as he eats all kinds of noxious insects.

Scientists have often wondered, just as you have done, what the toad eats. Here is the result of on investigation showing what 100 toads—slaughtered in the interests of science—had eaten: angle worms, thousand legged worms, cutworms, army worms, tent caterpillars, miscellaneous caterpillars, snails, sow bugs, spiders, grasshoppers, crickets, ants, beetles, flies. The quantity is as startling as the variety. The amount taken every twenty-four hours is about four times the stomech capacity. The toads examined averaged 100 bugs a day, not a bad day's work for the mistreated friend of the pollywog. Nearly every bug the toad eats is injurious to plant life.

The toad spends its winters in the ground. It chooses a mellow spot and digs into the moist earth until it reaches a point not effected by the freezing and thawing of winter. Here it sleeps for four or five months, eating nothing and breathing little.

UNNECESSARY TO LEAVE FARM

Old People Not Compelled to Move to City If Boy Wishes to Stay and Run Things.

Much has been said about keeping the boy on the farm. But what will become of the old folks if the boy does stay on the farm? It is not necessary for them to give up the farm entirely and move to town, as many of them are doing.

Director A. M. Ten Eyck, of the Pt. Pleasant experiment station, has given to his class in farm management at the Kansas State Agricultural college recently, said: "I am strongly in favor of one-half of the retired farmers that move to town getting satisfied. Some of them know that they won't be satisfied before they move, but they feel that they must get out of the way and give the boy a chance. I think they are mistaken. The farmer can build another home for himself or for the boy on some other part of the farm. Then, while the boy is running the farm, the parents can think and rest.

"It is no longer necessary to move to town to get the modern conveniences of living.

"It is to the interest of the forming community as a whole to keep the old men on the farm. The man who moves to town loses sight of the interests of the community he lived in and the community loses by it."

Changing Variety of Seed Wheat.

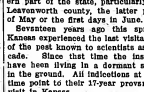
Many farmers make the mistake of sowing year after year a variety of wheat which yields several bushels less per acre under their conditions than some other variety would do under the same conditions, says the Missouri experiment station. One of the only reason why a particular variety has become popular in certain localities is because when first introduced it grew on the same field and beside a well-known or standard variety. It is the ability to determine the possibility of any variety when comparing a field on one end of the farm with another on the other end, or with a field worse, comparing one man's field with that of his neighbor.

Locating Hives.

It is said that bees cannot profitably travel more than two miles for nectar. If they have to fly a greater distance and carry back their load they do not bring to the hive enough during the working hours to make it profitable. The hives must therefore be placed with this fact in mind.

Hillside Farms.

The average hillside farm usually has enough plant food when it can be properly released. Tillage will do this in every case.



LOCUST EXPECTED IN KANSAS

Will Appear First in Eastern Part of State Latter Part of May or First of June.

The 17-year locust will visit Kansas within the next two or three months, according to a prediction of Prof. P. A. Glenn of the department of entomology at the University of Kansas. The locusts will appear first in the eastern part of the state, particularly in Leavenworth county, the latter part of May or the first days in June.

Seventeen years ago this spring Kansas experienced the last visitation of the pest known to scientists as cicada. Since that time the insects have been living in a dormant state in the ground. All indications at the time point to their 17-year proverbial visit in Kansas.

"Their greatest damage," declares Professor Glenn, "will be done to young orchards. In depositing their eggs the insects split the branches of the young trees and destroy them. The locusts will remain with us about six weeks, when they will disappear into the ground for another seventeen years.

The 1911 brood of cicada is limited, however, and I do not expect it to do as much damage as the brood that will appear in the spring of 1913. This latter brood will cover practically the entire state."

Greetest Crops.

Secreiary Wilson says: "The greatest crop of America is grese and then corn. Next after corn is probably cotton. Then come wheet and poultry, running neck and neck. The product of the hencoop is now nearly as valuable as that of the wheet fields."

TRUE PARADISE for the BIG GAME HUNTER

BY W. R. FELTON

Copyright by Field and Stream

THE dream of years was soon to be realized, as our hunting party boarded the Northern Pacific train, which was to carry us to the western part of Montana for a ten-days' trip in the Flathead country.

Our party was composed of H. R. Armstrong, Charles Hedges, Bert Hill and myself.

After an interesting ride through the pines, and past the small ranches along the Big Blackfoot river, we arrived at the town of Ovando and took quarters at the Goodfellow Hotel. After supper we found "Marsh," our guide, and began mixing medicine for the big hunt. We inquired as to the prospects of game such as none of us had ever hunted. We fleetly agreed to hunt for the following: Deer, elk, goats and possibly a bear, as our two weeks' time was not sufficient to make the trip to the sheep country.

The following morning was spent in packing up and talking with the numerous guides, as about 30 per cent of the town's inhabitants follow this occupation. Shortly after noon our train, composed of eight pack horses, six saddle horses and three colts, started on the sixty-mile journey to our proposed camp.

We had traveled but a few miles north from the village, and into the timber, when we came to the well-blazed line which marks the southern boundary of the Lewis and Clark National Forest, within which Glacier National Park has recently been erected. Along the well-defined trail we were continually reminded by the conspicuous signs posted by the forest Rangers of the warning to all campers in regard to fires.

The last day's trip was over a rough trail, crossing and recrossing Young's creek, up and down banks so steep that we would often dismount and lead the horses across.

The valley at this point widens out into an open park of several hundred acres called the "Big Prairie," which is now fenced and used as a horse pasture by the forest rangers. At the lower end of this pasture the river makes a wide detour around the vertical bluffs, the trail going over the top, joining the river again near the confluence of the White river and the South Fork. Here we made our permanent camp in a small open park.

For three days we had heard Marsh tell of his seventeen years' experience in that part of the country as guide, trapper and hunter, which made us all the more keen to try our skill on the game for which we had made the long journey.

On the morning of October 1st, as soon as it was light enough to see, Bert and Charles crossed the river to look for elk near the lick we had passed the day before. Henry, Marsh and I went up on the mountain back of our camp to look for goats, while Ben set to work fixing up the camp.

We headed along the top of the mountain for a short distance, when presently Marsh called our attention to what he thought was a goat lying out on a point of rocks on the west side, and sure enough it settled all doubt by getting up and walking out into plain view. We decided at once to try for this one. It was necessary to walk back a mile to a point where we could get down onto a ledge where we could follow, or half crawl along back to the place where we had seen the goat. This ledge was covered with slide rock, and made walking dangerous, and it was impossible to proceed noiselessly, as we would start rocks to rolling over the edge every few steps.

At length we reached the ledge of timber which hid the goat pasture. Henry took the right side of the ridge, and I the left, and we began to move toward the spot where the goat had been seen. We had gone but a short distance when I heard a shot and going in his direction I saw him and Marsh. Henry had shot the goat which ran out near the edge of the cliff and fell, lodging against the roots of an upturned spruce. It proved to be an old one with two of its kids with it. Needless to say, we took the skin, head and part of the meat on what proved to be a most hazardous trip, at the west side of the mountain in a series of narrow ledges.

Banks of cloud were rising in the west. After two hours of strenuous walking through the underbrush and windfalls, we came out into the park back of our camp just as it began to storm.

Neither Charles nor Bert were in camp, and on my part, at least, were the cause of some uneasiness, as it was raining and both had left camp with only light sweaters.

In the morning as it was growing light, I gazed out through the tent-fly to see the mountains white two-thirds of the way down. A few minutes later I heard a shot up the river, which I immediately answered with a couple more. Shortly after, Bert and Charles were wading across the stream to camp. They had shot a deer within a mile of the camp, and had found a bunch of elk which they followed until night. Each was unable to find the other, and both considered it dangerous to try to walk to camp in the darkness and gathering storm.

The following day was spent hunting through the river bottoms and lower benches, but without results, only a few deer being seen.

That evening we decided on a strenuous hunt for the morrow. Ben, Bert and Heiny were to go over to Ben's cabin on Big Salmon lake and spend two days looking for elk. Charles declared his intentions of trying again for the big bull on the west side of the river, while I had picked a likely-looking mountain across the gulch from where Heiny had shot his goat on the first day's hunt.

We were out of camp early, Marsh and I both taking saddle horses. We cut out a trail through and around windfalls, across Marshall Creek, and by ten o'clock that forenoon were well above the snow line.

While we were yet some distance below the summit, we tied our horses in a sheltered spot and proceeded on foot. Deer tracks were numerous in the fresh, wet snow, and on top of a small ridge I found the tracks of a band of elk. There were eight in the bunch, one track showing plainly to be that of a bull, and Marsh "allowed" we had better try for him. The tracks were easily followed, but as they had led all over the ridge, it took some time to find in which direction they were going. Shortly Marsh, who was walking back of me, touched me and pointed out a yearling which was feeding toward us. We sat down and watched this one which was soon joined by another end another, until six were in sight. The two yearlings came within sixty feet before they winded us and turned back. We could hear the bull scraping his horns on the brush. He was in the background, out of sight. We watched them possibly five minutes, when I saw what I took to be the bull, brushing his head up and down among the branches of a small pine. I fired at a point just back of his shoulders. Then came the one disappointment of the trip, for the animal proved to be a big cow. The remainder of the band stood motionless for a quarter of a minute, then broke into a run down the mountain side.

We dressed the elk and continued our hunt for goats. We were crossing deer tracks every few feet. On coming out into a little park I found one track that looked good enough to follow, and had hardly gone ten rods when I heard him jump out of bed. He came into an open spot on the highest point of the ridge, and stood looking at me over the top of some dwarf cedars. I drew a bead on his neck and fired, scoring a clean miss. The second shot hit the mark, and a ten-point buck sailed back over the hill as the last, and went a long way toward repairing my feelings over the elk.

The reunited party had supper together that evening. Ben put up goat, elk and venison steaks to order. After the big feed was over and pipes filled, we set around the fire in the teepee tent, and planned a further invasion of the game zone across Marshall creek. The result was Bert's bagging of the largest goat of the trip, and Charles getting a black-tail buck.

The shooting of Bert's goat was quite a remarkable feat. He and Ben had just about given up looking for goats and were standing on the edge of a cliff, looking down at a trail along the side of the ledge, when a goat appeared walking leisurely. The animal was about fifty feet horizontally and three hundred feet vertically from him when he shot, hitting the goat square between the shoulders, killing it instantly. Any struggle on the part of the animal would have resulted in his rolling over the cliff, where it would have been impossible to reach him. The two men crawled down over the slide rock out to where the goat lay, and after much careful work, secured the head and hide and climbed back to the summit.

Our game supply now consisted of three deer, three goats and one elk. Charles decided to stay in the valley with Marsh until he shot an elk, while the rest of us took a part of the pack-train, loaded on all our game and left at noon next day for the railroad.

By no means the least interesting part of this trip was the chance to view the Lewis and Clark National Forest, where for ten days we lived near to Nature, the only evidence of men's having intruded there being the cut out pack-trail and the forest rangers' cabins. The timber ranges in size from the giant Norway pine of six feet in diameter to the slender lodge pole thickets. The vivid green of these, brightened by the yellow fall tint of the aspens, against the snow capped mountains and above all a picture which no camera nor brush could do justice to, giving one the feeling that it was good to be alive.

Small game was numerous, three varieties of grouse, Franklin blue and ruffed. Pine squirrels, whisky jacks, magpies and many smaller birds added interest to the trip.

Less Lonely Club

Confident that New York is the loneliest city in all the wide world, the New York World says, several men and women have organized the Less Lonely league, with headquarters at 97 East One Hundred and Twenty-sixth street. The purpose is to provide a suitable meeting place for persons of refinement and education who are denied home life.

L. J. Wing, a well-to-do manufacturer, is the originator and president of the Less Lonely league. His own lonesomeness is responsible for the movement, which has already gained thousands of recruits in New York and throughout the United States when it gets fairly under way. It was through a letter to a newspaper that Mr. Wing got in touch with the other men and women who fell in with his plan.

"Long ago I realized that New York was a mighty lonely place," Mr. Wing said. "I mean for one accustomed to associating with cultured persons. At first I thought that through a church I might meet congenial people. I attended one in Central Park, west, but it didn't take long to convince me that no friends were to be made there. I attended another church in Lenox avenue. The result was the same. Now I don't attend any church, but on Sunday jump into my machine and take a ride into the country and let nature preach to me.

"It is tough on the young man who ceres nothing for the smoke shop or the barroom. The same with the young women who must remain in her bell bedroom because there is no place to go. Our clubrooms will furnish a place for them to meet; there will be entertainments from time to time. We have received nearly 100 applications."

Lawyers, publishers, teachers and others have written asking about the club, and Mrs. Taylor has had printed a circular setting forth that "four walls and a door don't make a home."

And the term "Bridge of Sighs" is added:

Oh, it was pitiful, near a whole city full,
Home they had none.

Every other Tuesday an entertainment will be given, although the club rooms will be open to the members any time. Mrs. Mary E. Medberry of Dessonhurst, L. I., is arranging the program. Miss Edith North, a grand opera singer, is interested in the work and sang for the members the other evening.

LONGEVOUS GEESE.

Geese will live to a great age, and some few years ago I came across a very venerable goose (male or female I cannot say) in Westmoreland in unexpected circumstances. I was walking from Milnthorpe to Arnside and at Gaisaside found an acquaintance sitting on a seashore bench feeding a pet goose with biscuits steeped in ale. He told me that this goose had been in his family for over 40 years and was partial to beer, stout and even gin. One of the most remarkable records of the longevity of geese with which I am acquainted is to be found in an old book entitled "Travels in Scotland," by the Rev. James Hall, M. A., London, two volumes, 1807. On a visit to a Mr. Charles Grant of Kichles, Stirlingshire, the author was informed of a gander that had been killed by accident after living at the same place for "above 60 years."

WELCOME WORDS TO WOMEN

Women who suffer with disorders peculiar to their sex should write to Dr. Pierce and receive free the advice of a physician of over 40 years' experience —a skilled and successful specialist in the diseases of women. Every letter of this sort has the most careful consideration and is regarded as sacredly confidential. Many sensitively modest women write fully to Dr. Pierce what they would shrink from telling to their local physician. The local physician is pretty sure to say that he cannot do anything without "an examination." Dr. Pierce holds that these distasteful examinations are generally needless, and that no women, except in rare cases, should submit to them.

Dr. Pierce's treatment will cure you right in the privacy of your own home. His "Favorite Prescription" has cured hundreds of thousands, some of them the worst of cases.

It is the only medicine of its kind that is the product of a regularly graduated physician. The only one good enough that its makers dare to print its every ingredient on its outside wrapper. There's no secrecy. It will bear examination. No alcohol and no habit-forming drugs are found in it. Some nostrum-blow medicine dealers may offer you substitutes. Don't take it. Don't trifle with your health. Write to World's Dispensary Medical Association, Dr. R. V. Pierce, President, Buffalo, N. Y.,—take the advice received and be well.

Avoid the Cheap and "Big Can" Baking Powders.

The cheap baking powders have but one recommendation: they certainly give the purchaser plenty of powder for his money but it's not all baking powder; the bulk is made up of cheap materials that have no leavening power. These powders are so carelessly made from inferior materials that they will not make light, wholesome food. Further, these cheap baking powders have a very small percentage of leavening gas; therefore it takes from two to three times as much of such powder to raise the cake or biscuit as it does of Calumet Baking Powder. Therefore, in the long run, the actual cost to the consumer of the cheap powders is more than Calumet would be.

Why not buy a perfectly wholesome baking powder like Calumet, that is at the same time moderate in price and one which can be relied upon? Calumet gives the cook the least trouble.

COMMERCIAL IMPORTANCE of CANALS

THE KIEL CANAL

THE American tourist who flits rapidly and carelessly across the continent of Europe, looks upon the canals of the countries he passes through as being in the main more picturesque features that add to the interest of the landscape, but have been rendered practically obsolete in a commercial sense by the building of railways. He sees barges upon them, to be sure, and in winter he is delighted by the sight of the people of Holland skating along the frozen water courses. But he would be astonished if he knew the important part the canals and canalized rivers, play in the economic life of European nations.

Canals, as they were originally constructed, cannot compete with rail roads, but as the latter have spread over the land, the waterways have been altered to meet the new conditions. Their chief mission in these days is to connect the centers of population and industry with the coasts—to make them exports—and this has been accomplished to an extent that is surprising to the uninformed.

The pressure of international competition is mainly responsible for the extensive improvement of waterways in the continental European countries that have the highest degree of industrial development. Every manufacturing country, district or city, if it is to prosper, must be able to meet this competition and to assemble materials as cheaply as possible from all parts of the world, and be provided with facilities for placing its goods cheaply and readily upon the chief domestic and foreign markets. The countries of the continent, recognizing this, have adopted the policy of providing with equal care for the development of both railroads and waterways. In Great Britain, on the contrary, with the exception of two canals in Scotland, the inland waterways, both rivers and canals, have been improved and are operated by corporations. The British government is considering the advisability of changing its policy toward waterways.

Of all the continental countries, France has spent the most on canal navigation. Her extensive plans for waterway development, adopted in 1879, provided for a system by which the waterways should be all connected with each other, and with the chief centers of population and industry. They are mainly owned or controlled by the state, but when in 1903 a law was passed providing for the construction of new waterways, it stipulated that the beneficiary parties or localities must advance at least half of the total cost. The interests making this contribution are permitted to recoup themselves from tolls or dues, and from a monopoly of providing towage or traction. Three canals, one from Cette to the Rhone, one from Marseilles to the Rhone, and one from the coal fields to the Oise river—the Canal du Nord—are now being constructed under these conditions.

The most important of the commercial waterways of France is the Seine river, and there is an immense traffic upon it between Havre and Rouen and Paris. At large expense it has been canalized and provided with locks and lateral canals, while other canals connect the river through its tributaries with the Loire, the Rhone, the Rhine, the Meuse and the Scheldt. Another elaborate system of main and lateral canals (bet carries a vast tonnage to Paris connects the capital with Dunkirk and Gravelines, and between Paris and the Belgian and German frontiers there is a perfect network of waterways. The western and southern parts of the country are nearly as well provided with canals. The Canal du Midi, which, running from Bordeaux to Cette, connects the Bay of Biscay with the Mediterranean, enables the former city to supply the whole of southern France with the products of foreign lands, and of the French colonies which it imports.

In connection with this Canal du Midi, the French government has long under consideration a most interesting and important project—nothing less than to convert the waterway into a ship canal by which sea-going vessels and the warships of France could pass from the Atlantic to the Mediterranean without being exposed to the violent storms of the peninsular coast and without passing through the Straits of Gibraltar. The people of France never lose sight of the possibility of war with Great Britain, and this ship canal plan appeals to them especially because it would relieve their navy from the necessity of steaming under the thousand guns that arm King George's tremendous fortress on the rock. So the project seems almost equally important from a commercial and a military view, and doubtless will be carried out.

Altogether, France has nearly 3,000 miles of canals and 5,000 miles of navigable rivers, and in the last 25 years the rate of increase as regards tonnage and ton-mileage has been more rapid on the waterways than on the railways.

In the Rhine and the Elbe, Germany possesses two commercial waterways of the first magnitude. The Rhine is navigable for small river steamboats as far as Basel, just across the Swiss frontier, and small sea-going steamers ascend it as far as Mannheim. This mighty river has been improved by the Germans at a cost of more than $12,500,000, and its waters bear an immense traffic in coal, iron ore, iron and steel manufactures and other heavy freight. The Rhine valley, dotted with picturesque ruined castles and saturated with legend and romance, is also one of the busiest districts in all Europe, for its densely populated and contains numerous important industrial cities. Canals connect the Rhine with the Meuse, Scheldt, Seine, Danube and Ems rivers. The Rhine-Rhone canal follows the course of the river from Strassburg almost to Basel, and is generally used instead of the river.

The Elbe is second only to the Rhine in commercial importance. It is navigable throughout its whole course in Germany and along it lie some of the chief silver and coal mines, salt fields, sheep pastures and beet-root areas in the empire. Moreover, it links Berlin, the capital, with Hamburg, the chief port, by the canals of the Havel and Spree river systems.

The Weser, the Oder, the Vistula and other rivers are of great importance as commercial highways, and go to make up Germany's grand total of nearly 5,000 miles of navigable rivers, of which about 1,400 miles are canalized.

Germany's canals are many, their total mileage being something like 1,500, and large sums are spent on their improvement. The most important internationally is the great North Sea and Baltic ship canal, which traverses Schleswig-Holstein, saving two days' time by steamer between Hamburg and all the Baltic ports of Germany. This canal was begun in 1887 and was opened to traffic in 1895, and is a source of much pride to Emperor William. The Ludwigs canal in Bavaria united the Danube with the Main, thus supplying a continuous waterway from the North sea to the Black sea. The Plauen canal connects the Elbe with the Havel, and there are systems connecting the Oder with the Elbe and the Memel with the Pregel.

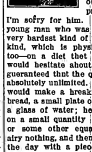
THE MANCHESTER STEAMERS AT THE CANAL

A waterway expert has said that there are too many small craft on the German canals to keep the cost of transportation down as low as it might be, but the government's charges for lockage are small so that rates are very reasonable and the total of heavy traffic is large.

Through close and effective study of economical transportation, Belgium has built up an excellent system of canals and canalized rivers, 29 in number. These are used partly for transportation and partly for irrigation. Both the Meuse and the Scheldt are navigable throughout their entire length in Belgium, and many of their tributaries have been canalized. In addition to these natural advantages, there are canal systems that unite Brussels and Louvain with the Rupel, Brussels with Charleroi and Mons with Conde. Then, too, there are two fine ship canals which by uniting Ghent and Bruges with the sea coast have restored to those cities much of their old time commercial importance.

Mention of Holland instantly creates a mind picture of canals, and indeed that little land of dykes and ditches is completely cut up into small islands by its extensive system of waterways. They cross and interlace one another like the threads of some large fishing net. The North Holland canal was considered, until recently, to be the finest of the kind in Europe. The southern part of the country is especially favored by nature, for the Rhine, entering Holland, divides up into numerous arms, the chief of which are the Waal, the Lek and the Yssel. The Meuse joins the Waal, thus mingling its waters with those of the Rhine, and all of these rivers carry an immense traffic. Four-fifths of the river trade of Holland is carried on the Rhine and the Waal. The Scheldt has its estuary mainly in Holland and carries ocean vessels to Antwerp.

Owing to the level condition of the country, the construction of canals in Holland involves but comparatively little labor and expense. Many of the canals are used constantly as substitutes for public highways, and in the winter their frozen surfaces offer convenient roads for the skaters who throng them on their way to and from market and about their various occupations. So complete is the canal system that by means of it a resident of Rotterdam could breakfast at Delft or The Hague, dine at Leyden and sup at Amsterdam, or return to his home before nightfall. Since not only the surface but the beds of many of Holland's canals are above the level of land, the drainage is of the greatest importance. This is effected by means of pumps worked by the windmills that are such a characteristic feature of the Dutch landscape. The banks of the canals are maintained by the families that live along them, each being assigned a portion to keep in repair.



Emory R. Johnson, professor of transportation and commerce in the University of Pennsylvania, who recently made a study of European waterways, as the special representative of the National River and Harbor congress, calls attention to the way in which Germany, France, Holland and Belgium have co-operated in establishing standard dimensions for their canals and barges, and connecting their systems. In this manner the through shipment of intermediate traffic has been facilitated. "Another feature of the waterway policy of these European countries," he says, "is that care is taken to provide waterways with adequate terminal and harbor facilities, and to make such physical connections between railroads and waterways at all inland harbors as to guarantee the easy and economical transfer of traffic from cars to boats and water to rails. It is realized that terminal facilities and rail connections are as essential a part of the projects for making waterways useful as are reliable channels of adequate width and depth. The Rhine river, for instance, has 62 harbors equipped as fully as commercial needs require, with storage and transfer facilities. At 42 of these terminals the direct transfer of goods from trains to boats and river to rail is possible. Many of the harbors include large basins, some of which are used for the transfer and storage of commodities, while others are connected to enable big industrial plants to locate on water frontage. Each city constructs its own harbor with but little, if any, aid from the state, the expense being borne by the city, aided in some instances by private interests."

How Vegetarianism Hurts Us

By M. A. LANE, SC. D.,

(Former Research Fellow in Physiology, University of Illinois.)

I sometimes despair for the future of the human race when I see some poor man or poor woman trying to worry along through an all-too-limited and not over-joyous life on a diet that is fit only for guinea pigs, rabbits and kine.

I have no quarrel with the vegetarian or with his "principles;" in fact, I don't know and have never been able to cut just what his principles are, for guaranteed that the quantity would be absolutely unlimited. This young man would make a breakfast of a bit of bread, a small plate of boiled rice, and a glass of water; he would luncheon on a small quantity of butter-beans, or some other equally insubstantial fare nothing, and then he would top off the day with a piece of cake and a cup of tea—always weak tea, too.

Occasionally he would go on what might be called a veritable "feeding bat," and would wildly dissipate on two bananas for breakfast, boiled rice with grean corn and an apple for luncheon, and a "lentil cutlet," with two bananas for dinner! And after this desperate plunge into the flesh pots of Egypt he would always feel as guilty as if he had just robbed a safe and could hear the police coming to take him in.

You couldn't persuade that young man that he was slowly but certainly killing himself. Had you stood him up before all the physiologists of the world, to be assured by them not only on their reputation as men of science, but on their decency and honor as men, that that sort of a diet was never "intended," by any scheme of nature or any deity imaginable, for the human machinery of digestion, he would probably have come out of the seance with a vague idea that somehow or other they were just trying to fool him for some hidden and vicious purpose of their own.

It would be a good thing if all men and all women were early in their youth put through a course of study—I mean actual study, from the thing and not from the book, which is worse than useless, not even being useless on the vast differences between the digestive apparatus of the plant-eating animal and that of the meat-eating, or omnivorous, animal, such as man.

The young vegetarian mentioned above was very brave; as brave as anybody could be in such circumstances and on such a diet, but he would often look with longing eyes on the steaks and chops his companions consumed at table, while he himself was sturdily punishing himself with rice and other wholly unsavory dishes. Also he was rather dim of eye and not specially active on his feet or at his work. And although he might not have admitted it were he charged with it, I knew he was afflicted with a disorder of the digestive apparatus that always accompanies vegetarianism. He was, in fine, the victim of a prejudice that left him unequal to the work he was compelled to do, and which he was trying at the expense of his health, happiness and success in the world in which he moved.

Upon what grounds does the practice of vegetarianism rest its claims?

The answer is, on no grounds whatsoever, unless it be those of the man who has an "idea" that if he looks over his left shoulder at the moon, or sees a black cat on the thirteenth day of the month, he is dend sure to have bad luck.

And yet it is only when it is ridden to death as a hobby that vegetarianism can be charged with insanity. When it is practiced occasionally and for a limited time, and at irregular intervals, it becomes the useful servant of scientific intelligence. There is a "soul of truth" in vegetarianism, as there also may be, so far as you or I know of the contrary, in the belief that if you see a black tabby on Friday the thirteenth, you will lose regularly at poker for some considerable time thereafter. This soul of truth takes us backward a bit in the natural history of man.

The primitive ancestors of European races, like the savage races of the present time, were naturally fitted for, and therefore "needed," a certain amount of irregularity in their feeding. Sometimes game would be plenty, and sometimes it would be scarce. When it was scarce, or not to be had at all, those primitive ancestors of ours were necessarily limited to a starvation diet. They were very hungry, and their hunger made them keen on the hunt, active, bright-eyed, alert, vigorous and pushing. Then, with a successful kill, there would naturally be a little gorging of meat, followed by a long and lazy rest.

Now, while we, their descendants, are not quite as savage or quite as improvident as were our primitive forefathers of the jungle or the prairies, and while it is true that we are not distressed with alternate scarcity and redundancies of food, we inherit the stomachs and the general digestive machinery of those active old fathers of ours, and a reasonable degree of alternate gorging and starving is good for us. Unfortunately, however, not all us have to attend to business year in and year out, and we cannot do idle around the house digesting all our gorges, whereas fasting is not to be thought of by persons who work at occupations very different from hunting.

But we can do this: We can cut down, or cut out, our meat diet at irregular and fairly frequent intervals; go without meat altogether for a week or so; be vegetarians, not regularly, but quite irregularly, for short lengths of time. And even when we give meat its inning, we will be better prepared to appreciate it, and to extract from it the health and happiness we need.

The vegetarian is therefore herewith supplied with a "scientific principle" as sound and as negotiable as a golden eagle. But if he adopts it he will have to cut himself in two.

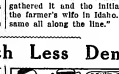
Great Sums Spent in Luxuries

WASHINGTON.—When it comes to a keen understanding of domestic economy, there is no man living who has anything on Representative J. Hampton Moore of Philadelphia. He has completed a list of luxuries which shows that the candy consumed in a single year represents the cost of a complete chain of canals from Ocean to Key West; that the jewelry sold represents twice the cost of building the Panama canal, and that the nickels annually dropped on soda water counters are sufficient to establish a complete inland waterway system.

The statistics with which Representative Moore backs his assertions are colossal. They represent his investigation into the reason for the high cost of living, and prove that the individual himself is in a large measure responsible for the decline of the dollar's value.

According to Mr. Moore, the boys and girls of the country and the older people, too, spent $25,000,000 last year on chewing gum.

The country's confectionery bill for 1910 amounted to $75,000,000.



The $80,000,000 spent on jewelry is twice the amount required to build the Panama canal.

Our soda water bill was $320,000,000.

The representative says: "Take the egg, for instance; it doesn't cost the hen any more to lay an egg today than it did 100 years ago, but we pay more than our grandfathers did because we don't let the hen lay the egg where we can get out the back door ourselves and pick it up. The farmer's wife in Idaho goes out and gathers up an egg, keeps it till a man comes along with a buggy and takes it from her. He crates, sorts and packs it along with others and then carries it to the railroad. It is laid in April, May or June; you don't get it until the following Christmas, and you have to pay for its keep all that time, pay for the cold storage, pay the railroad extra, the expense of the man who went around in a buggy and gathered it and the initial price of the farmer's wife in Idaho. It is the same all along the line."

Shoddy in Much Less Demand

A PRELIMINARY statement showing the general results of the 1909 census for establishments engaged in the manufacture of woolen and worsted goods has just been issued by the director of the census, E. Dana Durand.

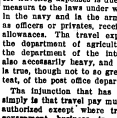
Although the number of establishments has decreased, denoting a tendency toward concentration, which has been the rule in the wool manufacturing industry since 1870, on the other hand the amount of capital reported as invested shows an increase from $256,554,000 in 1899 to $415,465,000 in 1909, or 62 per cent during the decade. The cost of materials used increased 85 per cent, and the amount paid in salaries and wages 58 per cent. The number of salaried officials and clerks increased but 47 per cent and the number of wage earners only 37 per cent.

The value of products increased from $238,745,000 in 1899 to $419,826,000 in 1909, or 76 per cent. The greater part of this increase took place during the second half of the decade; in fact, the increase of over $100,000,000 in the five years since 1904 is far greater than that of any decade prior to 1900.

The quantity of wool consumed, in condition purchased, increased from 230,170,000 pounds to 474,751,000 pounds, or 44 per cent; reckoned on a scoured wool basis, the increase was 50 per cent. The quantity of raw cotton consumed decreased from 40,245,000 pounds to 20,055,000 pounds, or 50 per cent, while the amount of cotton yarn purchased increased from 35,340,000 pounds to 39,160,000 pounds, or 11 per cent. The net result is a decided decrease in the amount of cotton used as a material by wool manufacturers.

The figures also show a marked decrease in the use of shoddy.

Can't Have the Old Portsmouth



THE navy department probably will be unable to comply with the wishes of the people of California who have asked that the old sailing ship Portsmouth now at the New York navy yard, be towed to the Pacific coast to be preserved there as a naval museum. The people of the Pacific coast are anxious to have the Portsmouth sent to San Francisco by because she was identified with the early history of California. She sailed into San Francisco bay and took possession in the name of the United States. Those who had not taken this action what is now California might have become a part of the British empire, as two hundred British cruisers arrived there only a few hours after the Portsmouth. The San Francisco people want to use the old vessel as an exhibit in connection with the coming exposition there.

The navy department, however, has received a report from a board of survey, which estimated that about $25,000 would be necessary to fit the old sailing vessel for the long cruise to the west coast. In addition the expense of such a long trip would be considerable. In view of the outlay involved in the proposal Secretary of the Navy Meyer feels that it would be inadvisable for the government to undertake the sending of the Portsmouth to the Pacific coast.

The old sailing vessel Independence, now at the Mare Island navy yard, will also be disposed of soon. A board of survey has been ordered to investigate her condition and recommend what disposition should be made of her.

Economy Board to Save Millions

THE economy and efficiency board is beginning to get results. It has reached a point in its labors where it thinks it foresees where a million dollars may be saved during the first year of its existence.

At present it is devoting its attentions largely to the item of traveling expenses of government employees and to the duplication of work in the departments. The president and the members of his cabinet were surprised to learn from this board that the traveling expenses charged against the treasury last year aggregated about $13,000,000.

Just how much this enormous sum can be reduced without crippling the public service in the least is still a question, but the members of the economy and efficiency board are confident that a great saving can be made. The heads of the executive departments have received instructions to pare traveling expenses wherever possible. This order is applicable to the war and navy departments, as well as to all other departments of government.

Of course, the largeness of the item for traveling expenses is due in great measure to the laws under which men in the navy and in the army, either as officers or privates, receive travel allowances. The travel expenses of the department of agriculture and of the department of the interior are also necessarily heavy, and the same is true, though not to so great an extent, of the post office department.

The injunction that has gone out simply is that travel per se must not be authorized except where travel on government business is absolutely necessary.

IN THE LIMELIGHT

KENNEDY TO GET RED HAT

Archbishop Ryan's work two years before Ryan's death.

Miller to the suffragan bishops' meeting the private counselors and irremovable rectors met. The pope's suggestion has been made to them that they piece Bishop Kennedy first upon their list. They did so. Monsignor Falconio, papal delegate, upset by the difference of opinion, requested the 13 Catholic archbishops in the United States to signify their individual choice for Archbishop Ryan's successor. The majority of them have written him favoring Prendergast. Falconio forwarded these letters to Rome, and now, according to precedents, there is but one thing for the pope to do—make Bishop Prendergast archbishop.

Right Rev. Thomas F. Kennedy, Bishop of Adrianopolis, president of the North American college at Rome, Italy, and a personal favorite of the pope, shortly will be appointed by the Holy See as an American cardinal, to share honors with Cardinal Gibbons, of Baltimore.

This statement is made upon the authority of a Roman Catholic, so high in church affairs that it should be taken without hesitancy, and according to the same source the appointment will be the direct result of the suffragan bishops refusing to chide by the pope's desire to see Bishop Kennedy recommended as a successor to Archbishop Ryan of Philadelphia, who died recently.

The pope's wishes were made known to the suffragan bishops by Cardinal Gibbons. Instead of selecting three names the suffragan bishops submitted one, that of Bishop Prendergast, of this diocese, who did

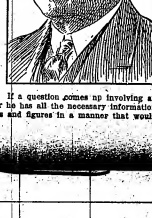
NEW HEAD FOR HILL LINES

Carl Raymond Gray, senior vice-president of the St. Louis and San Francisco line, with headquarters in St. Louis, has resigned to become president of the steam and electric railroads of the Hill system, with headquarters at Portland, Ore., succeeding John F. Stevens. The arrangements were made by James J. Hill.

W. C. Nixon, vice-president and general manager, will succeed Gray as senior vice-president of the Frisco, with Charles M. Levy and W. V. H. Rosleg as assistants to the vice-president and with W. T. Tyler as general manager.

The offer from Hill to Gray was pending while Howard Elliott, president of the Northern Pacific, was considering the proposition for the chief executive office of the Missouri Pacific railway and the St. Louis, Iron Mountain and Southern. Shortly after Elliott left St. Louis Gray met Hill in St. Paul and then inspected the Hill property in Oregon and Washington.

BOOST EDUCATION IN SOUTH



Parents and teachers in the southern states will be interested in the fact that on June 1st James Shelby Thomas, dean of Virginia Christian college of Lynchburg, will become commissioner of education for the Southern Commercial Congress. His work for the congress will carry him into all states of the south, for the purpose of bringing about a quicker exchange among all interests of education; ideas of school improvement suggestions. He will also work out a plan for the Southern Commercial Congress, whereby it can assist college and other students of the south to secure or complete their education along scientific lines.

Mr. Thomas is a young man with an unusual educational record. He was born in Saltville, Va., in 1880. He received his education in public schools, then prepared for college at Tazewell and the city high school at Christiansburg, Ky. He took his degree of master of arts at Milligan college, Johnson City, Tenn., in 1900.

The educational purpose of the congress is to work for the guidance of pupils in the common schools of the south.

IS A WIZARD AT FIGURES

Representative John J. Fitzgerald of New York, who has come to the head of the committee on appropriations in the readjustment made necessary when the Democrats took over the control of the national house of representatives, will have as his right hand man James C. Courts, who for over a decade has been officially designated as clerk of this most important body. His mastery at figures is nothing short of wonderful; he has had years of experience in which to perfect himself, and there is little doing in the way of committee business that he can't reduce to cold figures.

Congress annually votes an extra $1,000 to his regular salary in recognition of his extraordinary efficiency. Mr. Courts is generally referred to as the "mathematician of the house," and what he doesn't know about the governmental finances isn't worth knowing. He is always "on deck" at committee meetings, and his usual place is by the side of the chairman. An appropriation for some obscure matter at his tongue's end and reels off facts and figures in a manner that would daze the layman.

If a question comes up involving an item he has all the necessary information

TALES OF GOTHAM AND OTHER CITIES

Passing of Old-Time Janitor

NEW YORK.—There was a time when the best trotters that went up the fashionable driveways of New York were owned by the men who had charge of the big buildings in New York; but that was long ago. Today that man whose occupation has become subject to the surveillance of a manager who represents the interests intrusted to him in no half-hearted way and whose system will not permit of the pickings which were so long the recognized perquisites of the janitor who is content to make a fraction of what he formerly received each year.

These are daye of centralization and system, and the old-timers who found it easy to raise a big family, have fast horses and maintain a country residence have either retired in disgust or adjusted themselves to the altered conditions.

The practice for many years was to pay a janitor a salary, sometimes as much as $2,500 a year, but more frequently $100 a month. He was supposed to have the waste paper of the tenants to sell, and it will probably be matter of surprise to some readers to learn that this yielded in a big building as much as $1,000 a year, while in some of the very large ones it would bring in very much more, up to $2,000 at the highest. Then there was the matter of a commission on the ice and towels supplied to patrons, which would run anywhere from 25 per cent upward.

Nowadays under the new system the janitor gets $50 to $100 a month. He is under the control of the assistant manager of the building, and he in turn is subject to the manager where there are several properties under one head.

There is a purchasing agent directly under the eye of the manager, who buys all supplies.

Bride's Feet Cause Sensation

ST. LOUIS.—Miss Young Oy became the bride of Yeong Wing Jow at the city hall.

Attaches of the marriage license office say that, though she is Chinese, Miss Oy was one of the most attractive young women who ever went there. Dainty and graceful of carriage, she was a vision of coy loveliness as she stood at the desk, blushing and screening her face from the view of the curious by drawing about the soft folds of the Chinese silk automobile veil which she wore in lieu of a picture hat.

Her long gray traveling coat was tailor-made and up to the minute in style and finish, and her gown, also in American style, was of blue silk. From beneath the hem of her skirt peeped the tiniest of feet, not bound and deformed like those of many Chinese women, but perfect in outline and shod in American shoes.

Clerks at the marriage license office say her feet are the smallest they ever saw—her shoe, according to their expert estimate, being not larger than No. 13, children's size.

Yeong Wing Jow, also clad in American style, wore a tailor-made dark frock suit, patent leather shoes and a fedora hat.

Miss Oy and Yeong Wing Jow were born and reared in San Francisco. In St. Louis they have both been members of the First Christian church Sunday school.

Both signed the license application and the clerk wrote their names as touched the pen while the clerk wrote the names in English.

They were married in the anteroom of the license office by Justice Krueger.

Short-Weight Thieves on Run

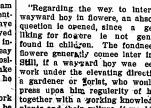
CHICAGO.—Wahbly swings the stentorian of the "short weight crook" in Chicago.

No more do grocers, butchers, candlemakers, coal dealers and cordwood men drive short weight to the purchasing public.

In the early days short weighting was popular in the ranks of the short weight people, but Pro Bono Publico, the prize kicker, has had an awakening and today he is looking for sixteen ounces to the pound and 2,000 pounds to the ton, as most of the work of the retiring inspector of weights and measures—John Kjellandar, exploited as the terrible Swede of the north.

"There are tricks in all trades but ours."

That's an old story.



It was King Solomon who said: "A false scale is an abomination unto the Lord, but a just weight is his delight."

For many years dishonest dealers went unpilloried in Chicago. Fees were collected by the official and another, but until Kjellender went into office and with the assistance of William F. Cluett, his chief deputy, the offenders were not brought to book and forced to pay heavy fines. As a result the short-weight fellow is a rarity today.

In the last four years the city of Chicago has prosecuted 1,162 suits against short-weight offenders, and they have paid in fines and costs $38,570.

Thousands of crooked scales have been condemned. There are sixteen deputy inspectors engaged in field work. Their work has attracted municipal officials in all parts of the United States and foreign countries. Since their work began several inventors have invented many contrivances to further their ends and cheat the consumer—the ultimate buyer.

Flowers as Antidote for Crime

BOSTON—The wayward boy—the boy with criminal or mischievous tendencies—may be served with greater advantage to himself and his future development by being apprenticed to a gardener or florist than by going into any other line of work, is the opinion held by Prof. Charles Sargent of Harvard.

"There is no doubt that the line of work in which a man engages acts upon his personality and that gardening has an elevating effect upon the men employed in it," he says. "I am told that a surprisingly large percentage of murderers are men who have at one time or another been employed in a hothouse. That is an extreme instance of occupation, but I might say that at the other end of the proposition is gardening. No man can make a success as a gardener unless he loves his plants.

"A wayward boy thrown into work among growing plants would be brought under a better influence than under almost any other occupation he might find. Any association with plants and flowers cannot fail to have an elevating effect on the human mind.

"Regarding the way to interest a wayward boy in flowers, an absorbing question by onward, since a general liking for flowers is not generally found in children. The fondness for flowers generally comes later in life. Still, if a wayward boy was set to work under the elevating direction of a gardener or florist, who would impress upon him regularity of habits, together with a working knowledge of plants and their culture, it would go a great way toward putting a boy on the right track."

PLANT TREES.

If in 75 years the present supply of timber in this country will be exhausted, at the present rate of consumption, the admonition to plant trees becomes eloquent with meaning. There is great value in trees, says the Kansas City Times. The big lumber fortunes have been made in the main, not in buying and selling lumber, nor even in manufacturing lumber for sale, but in buying vast tracts of timber land and holding them for the inevitable advances in timber prices incident to the rapidly decreasing supply. Now, it would not profit any man or corporation to buy large areas of land until they could be profitably used for agriculture, fruit growing or grazing, and set them in trees; but it would be profitable for all who own timber lands that could not be profitably used for other purposes to materials them as permanent forests, using only the matured trees and cutting them and clearing the stash in such a way as to give the best possible protection to the immature timber. Also, it would be profitable to every owner of land to plant trees on any part of it that cannot be utilized for other purposes. If this great nation could inspire its landholders with this one purpose for a given time, to the end that all land that should be planted with trees would be so planted, the problem of the future lumber supply would be solved.

The treasure chamber beneath the palace of Necessidades, Lisbon, Portugal, has been opened and examined by the minister of public works at the request of King Manuel, who feared for the safety of the crown jewels and certain personal property of the royal family. The jewels and valuables were found in the underground chamber intact. An inventory showed them to be worth upward of $3,000,000. Among the jewels was the diadem of ex-Queen Amelie and a necklace given her by her father, the Comte de Paris, valued at $200,000. There was found also a table service of solid German silver, weighing over a ton, also a crown and scepter of gold studded with precious stones; also several bricks of gold, the largest weighing 45 pounds. The minister of finance announces that all valuables which are the private property of Manuel and his mother will be returned to them. Those belonging to the state, such as the crown and scepter, will be placed in the national museum.

Some peculiar rights are being settled in New York. A man recovered nearly $1,000 damages from a policeman for clubbing him because the mas in question kicked in his own door. As the man's wife had requested the policeman's interference, she having locked the kicked-in door, this decision for damages looks like a desperate stand on the part of mere mas to avoid being kicked out of domestic supremacy.

A man in New Jersey was lately arrested for assaulting a neighbor. But it developed later that the assailant had been run over by his own automobile, driven by the neighbor. The truth would have been clearly superhuman self-control which would have checked an attack under the circumstances, and the result was condoned by a law recognizing the limitations of human nature.

A Bloomington, Pa., man celebrated his eighty-third birthday by sawing wood continuously from 7 a. m. to 7 p. m. The moral is to saw wood early in life, and when you are 83 perhaps you won't have to do so.

HOW SOON WE FORGET

TAFT THANKS HOUSE

PRESIDENT URGES SPEEDY RECIPROCITY ACTION IN NEW YORK SPEECH.

SAYS ANNEXATION TALK BOSH

Compact With Canada Must Be Taken Up Now or Never Says Chief Executive in Address Before Newspaper Men.

New York.—President Taft openly thanked the Democratic house of representatives for the stand it has taken on the question of Canadian reciprocity when he spoke at the annual banquet of the Associated Press and the American Newspaper Publishers' association at the Waldorf-Astoria.

His address was the first of a series in which he plans to evoke public sentiment in support of his policies, and he appealed to the company of editors and newspaper owners, gathered from the length and the breadth of the land, to impress on the public mind that reciprocity should stand alone and "ought not to be affected in any regard by other amendments to the tariff law."

All talk of annexation he characterized as "bosh," and said that the United States has all it can attend to with the territory it is now governing.

He praised the house of representatives for its passage of the agreement; declared that it would not injure the farmer nor any special class, answered in detail the objections that have been raised to reciprocity and begged for at least "a kind of test" to dispel the ghosts "exhibited to frighten the agricultural classes."

President Taft devoted the greater part of his address to the Canadian reciprocity agreement.

He said that the proposed agreement was not liked by some because they say the farmers are not well cared for in that means and flour are taken by the free list. The truth about this is, he said, that this country offered to put oil commodities of both countries on the free trade list, but the Canadian commissioners would not accept among other things meats and flour for the simple reason that they felt the American raisers of meats and flour would be able to undersell the Canadian producers in Canada. This, he argued, shows clearly that since Americans could undersell Canadians in Canada, Canadians would not be able to affect the American market in such a way as to reduce the prices of these articles for American consumers. Consequently, he pointed out, there was no reason why Americans should want such items on the free trade list.

President Taft objected vigorously to the proposition that in being made to gratuitously put these items on the list and said that if we were not careful, we might, under the favored nation's clause in many of our international agreements, find ourselves making free trade with the entire world if we put them in the Canadian treaty.

"If any objection," he said, "can be made to the treaty on the ground that any particular class derived less profit from it than other classes, then it is the manufacturer of the country who ought to object, because the treaty in its nature will not enlarge his market as much as it will that of the farmer."

BANDITS IN AUTO ROB STORE IN DAYLIGHT.

Thieves Tie Eight Men and One Woman With Ropes Then Escape With Jewels.

Chicago.—Robbery in Chicago reached a thrilling climax when four robbers in a touring car dashed up to the jewelry store of Edward Alberti, 1246 Milwaukee avenue, in broad daylight, forced nine persons at revolver points to lie face downward on the floor, bound them hand and foot, ransacked the display cases and hastily escaped with jewelry and money amounting almost to $20,000.

Messages containing a description of the robbers were sent to every station in Chicago and a city-wide search was started for them. The police declare that the hold up was one of the boldest in the city's history.

Edward Alberti, son of the owner of the store, and Samuel Schmidt, the manager, were standing behind a showcase in the front of the store when four men in an automobile stopped in front of the place. One of the men remained in the machine and the other three entered the store, drew revolvers and compelled Alberti and Schmidt to walk into a rear room, which is used as a biliard storeroom.

When nine persons in all had been tied two of the robbers took two trays containing 28 diamonds each from the window and $500 cash from the safe and bundling their loot into the automobile made their escape.

FORCE PRISON HEAD TO QUIT

Cornelius Collins, Superintendent for Thirteen Years, Requested to Resign by Governor Dix.

Albany, N. Y. — Cornelius V. Collins of Troy, state superintendent of prisons for thirteen years, has resigned. His resignation, which reached Governor Dix, takes effect immediately. Superintendent Collins had supervision of the four state prisons—Sing Sing, Auburn, Clinton and Great Meadow—and of the Matteawan and Dannemora hospitals for the criminal insane.

Soon after Governor Dix assumed office in January he requested Superintendent Collins to resign, but the latter refused. The governor ordered an investigation of the state prisons in hopes, many think, of forcing Collins' resignation. The investigation was begun by Commissioner of Correction Riley, but the latter resigned before he had completed his task. Governor Dix then appointed Commissioner of Charities Hebberd to complete the investigation. Hebberd's report was made public a few days ago.

SAYS HINES BOASTED

NEW, LORIMER FUND WITNESS TELLS OF LUMBERMAN'S 'PHONE TALK.

GOVERNORS ARE DRAWN IN

Names of Deneen and Yates Are Mentioned in Testimony—Tilden and Two Bankers Ordered Arrested by Committee for Contempt.

Springfield, Ill.—How Edward Hines, in a conversation in the Grand Pacific hotel at Chicago on May 1, 1909, boasted that he had elected Senators Stephenson and Lorimer, was told before the Helm investigating committee by W. H. Cook of Duluth, a stockholder in the Hines Lumber company.

He said Henry Turrish, a lumberman now in Oregon, was present at this conversation. The witness said Hines approached him and Turrish and said he was "having a — — of a time in Washington." He said: "There in Washington, we elected him, and now he is working for free lumber." He said Turrish inquired about the senatorial deadlock, and Hines answered:

"It is all fixed. Lorimer will be elected. We had picked Boutell for senator, but when the lumber schedule came up he voted for free lumber. I took the matter up with Aldrich, and we agreed we must have another man. We agreed to take it up with Lorimer, and it is all fixed."

"Whom did Hines mean by Stephenson?"

"I don't know," said Mr. Cook, "but I thought he referred to Senator Stephenson of Wisconsin."

The witness said he met Hines again by arrangement of C. F. Wiehe, brother-in-law of Hines, or Isaac Baker, o hoyer for the Hines Lumber company. He met Hines in the lobby of the Grand Pacific hotel and went to his room to hold a long-distance telephone conversation. While them o message came for Springfield for Hines. Hines took the receiver, he said, and said: "Is this you, governor? Well, I just left Tatt and Aldrich in Washington, and they tell me under no circumstances shall Hopkins be returned to the senate. Now, I will be down on the next train. Don't leave anything undone. I will have all the money necessary."

Witness said he saw Wiehe shout e sad had a conversation with him and William O'Brien, another lumbermen, in the Grand Pacific hotel at midnight.

"Wiehe seamed axcious that we get out of town," said Cook. "He said if we did not we might be called before a grand jury which might investigate the Lorimer case. He said Hines had told him Lorimer had called him and he and told him we were in town and for God's sake to get us out.

"O'Brien said they were making it hot for Hines. Wiehe said: 'Yes, they will get him, too. He talks too much. Every time a reporter approaches him he talks enough to fill two columns.'"

Cook said he was not present at all meetings, but the witness, "Hines and I went down. As soon as we got out of town," said Cook, "Hines had a telephone conversation, and next day I got it all mixed up. He said they bet him $10,000 that Governor Deneen, whereas he said he was talking with Governor Deneen. He said he didn't care a hetney for a conference with Deneen and Aldrich, for if he did he would go back to Washington. 'My impression was that Hines was talking with Deneen when he used the telephone in the room in the Grand Pacific, but Mr. O'Brien, who was present, insisted Hines was talking with Aldrich."

Springfield, Ill.—After battling for six hours as to the reasonableness of the suggestion that Edward Tilden had acted as the banker for the $100,000 fund which elected Senator Lorimer, the Illinois senate voted 40 to 7 to arrest the millionaire for contempt in refusing to produce before the Helm committee his bank accounts and papers bearing on the Lorimer case.

George M. Benedict, cashier of the Drovers' National bank, and William C. Cummiss, president of the Drovers' Trust and Savings bank—two of Tilden's bank which refused to produce his accounts—were cited and will also be arrested.

It was agreed among the counsel that the defendants shall be permitted to test habeas corpus proceedings to determine the legal controversy in the courts.

FOUR ROADS INDICTED

CHARGED WITH REBATING AND VIOLATING ELKINS LAW.

Secret Indictments Are Also Returned by Cleveland Jury Against Three Individuals, Alleging Conspiracy.

Cleveland, O.—Conspiracy on the part of the largest railroads in the country with ore shippers and dock companies in granting rebates is charged in seventeen indictments handed down by the federal grand jury.

The roads indicted are the Lake Shore, the Pennsylvania, the Bessamer and Lake Erie and the Nickel Plate. As a result of the investigation which resulted in the indictments, suits will be brought against a number of subsidiaries of the United States Steel corporation.

Three secret indictments were returned against individuals on charges of rebating and conspiracy. They are Dan R. Hanna and Robert L. Ireland of the M. A. Hanna company and D. T. McCabe, fourth vice-president of the Pennsylvania railroad.

They are charged in the indictments with conspiracy to violate the Elkins law. A maximum penalty of two years in the penitentiary, and a $10,000 fine is provided by the law.

TAFT ASKS HELP FOR BLIND

President is Leading Speaker at Industrial Exposition Opening in New York City.

New York. — President Taft was the principal speaker at the opening of the industrial exposition of the blind at the Metropolitan opera house. The president's address was a warm tribute to the New York Association for the Blind and a hearty appreciation of the work it is doing for those whose "loss of that sense which enables us to see, to read, to write, to relieve in the rising sun and marvel in the beauty of the setting sun is a deprivation the very thought of which makes our hearts and brings tears to our eyes for those that are afflicted."

He reviewed the history of the movement to "introduce light into the life of the blind," and commended the campaign for proper treatment at birth to prevent ophthalmic neonatorum.

The president delared also that the kindergarten for the blind should be encouraged.

QUITS AS HEAD OF SENATE

Because of Ill Health Senator Frye Tenders Resignation as President Pro Tem.

Washington.—On account of ill health Senator Frye of Maine tendered to the vice-president his resignation as president pro tempore of the senate. The senator is confined to his apartment and his friends, believing he has of advanced age, are apprehensive.

It is probable that Senator Gallinger will succeed him as president pro tem.

Senator Frye has had a long career in Washington and distinction, having served as senathr since 1881, when he succeeded James G. Blaine, and having been for ten years previous a representative from Maine.

This senator is eighty-two years old and has been in public life continuously since his first election to the house of representatives in 1861. His home is in Lewistos, Me.

DUTCH SEIZE U. S. ISLAND

Palmas, Valueless Land Near Mindanao, Taken Over by Holland-ers—No Protest Likely.

Manilo. — Delayed advices received here via Jolo report that the Dutch have taken possession of Palmas Island, sixty miles southeast of Mindanao.

The advices say the Dutch lowered the United States colors and substituted for them the flag of Holland.

It is understood here that Washington does not intend to protest against the action of the Dutch, the United States government regarding the island as valueless.

THROWS LYE, BLINDS BABY

Woman Attempts to Displace Child's Mother, But Misses Mark—She Is Jailed.

Donville, Ill. — Miss Ella Brodley attempted to throw concentrated lye into the eyes of the wife of Richard Gray of this city. Some of the lye struck the intended victim, but a great part fell into the eyes of Gray's infant daughter, blinding it. Miss Brodley was arrested and held to the grand jury in $2,000, which she failed to give, and was locked up. She said the lye was intended for the eyes of Gray's wife, whom she accused of supplanting her in his affections.

Fire Blast Injures 20.

SCRATCHED TILL BLOOD RAN

"When my boy was about three months old his head broke out with a rash which was very itchy and ran a watery fluid. Wa tried everything we could but he got worse all the time, till it spread to his arms, legs and then to his entire body. He got so bad that he could hardly sleep. The rash would itch so that he would scratch till the blood ran, and a thin yellowish scab would be left over it. A pillow in the morning. I had to put mittens on his hands to prevent him tearing his skin. He was so weak and run down that he took fainting spells as if he were dying. He was almost a skeleton and his little hands were thin like claws.

"He was bad about eight months when we tried Cuticura Remedies. I had not told him down in his cradle in the daytime for a long while. I washed him with Cuticura Soap and put on one application of Cuticura Ointment and he was so much easier that he could sleep. You don't know how glad I was he felt better. It took one box of Cuticura Ointment and pretty near one cake of Cuticura Soap to cure him. I think our boy would have died but for the Cuticura Remedies and I shall always remain a firm friend of them. There has been no return of the trouble. I shall be glad to have you publish this true statement of his cure." (Signed) Mrs. M. C. Maitland, Jasper, Ontario, May 27, 1910.

Subject to Restrictions.

"I was cleanin' fo' a new lady isa' week an' he dirt in her kitchen was a sight, po' thing," said Rosa, Mrs. Prazer's dark-skinned charwomea.

"But why did she let it get like that?" asked the lady.

"I dunno', ma'am. Guess she never seen it. Some cooks, you know, is mighty portl'ar 'bout ' lovin' de moddam in de kitchen. Dey jes' take dere orders from her upstairs an' she don't have no call to go into de kitchen at all."

CURE THAT CATARRH

Our climate with its sudden changes is conducive to catarrh—which is a chronic inflammation of the mucous membrane surface of the head—nose or throat.

One month's local treatment with Paxtine Toilet Antiseptic will convince the most skeptical that Paxtina is not a patent nos but a specific for all catarrhal conditions.

Paxtine is a perfectly harmless antiseptic and germicide in powder form which contains all of the astringent qualities of liquid antiseptics, but with other valuable cleansing, germicidal, and healing ingredients added. Just a little in a glass of water as needed—used as a spray and gargle, will not only remove the accumulated secretions, but heals the inflammation, destroys the germs of disease, and dispels the disagreeable odor caused by chronic catarrh.

INTERURBAN LINES

LOCAL BUSINESS MEN TOLD OF WONDERFUL ADVANTAGES THAT ACCRUE FROM THEM

BY GOOD RESULTS IN INDIANA

Former Mayor of Indianapolis, at Dinner to Promote Lake City Project, Shows Facts.

St. Paul—Instead of an occasional convention being brought to the city, C. A. Bookwalter, twice mayor of Indianapolis, suggests a plan whereby St. Paul may enjoy all the commercial benefits that would result from a continuous convention the year around.

The prosperity of smaller towns and of farming communities a hundred miles from St. Paul is embraced in the same scheme, which Mr. Bookwalter explained before seventy-five live business men of the city gathered at The Saint Paul to discuss the bill filed by the St. Paul & Southern Railway company of an electric railway line extending down the river to Lake City.

What a system of electric railways, branching out in dozens of directions like the spokes of a wheel, may accomplish for a city was indicated by Mr. Bookwalter with reference to Indianapolis. The Hoosier State capital was declared by the speaker to be the center of one of the largest systems of electric railways in the country.

Merchants Reap Big Benefits.

"Our merchants know the value of the interurban trolley line," said Mr. Bookwalter. "For the year of 1910 alone we have found that 20,000 persons were brought into the city each day by the fourteen different electric lines that center in that city. It means these interurban lines bring into our midst as many as 7,000,000 persons a year.

"Speaking of raising funds for conventions, it impresses me the best way to get people to visit your places of business is to get them into your city, and I know of no better way to get them into your city than to build interurban electric lines for them to ride in on. So much have we become possessed with the idea down in Indianapolis that we have arranged to take care of the companies in a contractual way, which includes a stock of prints & franchises which we keep on hand

All Interests Are Aided.

"Yet would any one represent that because we are benefited some other community of the state probably is being robbed. After eight years of operations down in Indiana the interurban lines have been found of such great worth to all interests that a person who would propose to go down in the state and have them discontinued would be in danger of getting mobbed.

"At first the railways suffered a slight loss for a time, however, matters of traffic and of transportation so arranged themselves that now the railways are doing as much business they ever did.

"Perhaps those of you who may be jobbers or manufacturers do not appreciate the value of the electric lines in getting into the trade territory that immediately surrounds your city. Down Indiana, Chicago, St. Louis, Cleveland and other important jobbing centers had wrested much of our trade from us. With the construction of the interurban lines, however, conditions have changed, we have since come into possession of our own.

Greater Opportunities Here.

"Your city lies at the gateway of a great tributary domain that extends westward. But with us conditions are different. We are hemmed in, and therefore have to enter into competition with our neighboring cities. There are great opportunities before you citizens of St. Paul which if you avail yourselves of there can be no regret, since the evidence can be told on each cash drawer.

"You should have no trouble in showing the importance of the interurban lines to the farmers. No one is more benefited by the electric railway than they are. In Indiana these lines have increased the value of lands through which they run at least 50 per cent, while near the city the values have risen from $80 and $100 an acre to $300 and $500, all due to the interurban line."

Speakers Favor Proposed Line.

Every expression made at the meeting was favorable to proposed construction of the electric line. Mr. Ware pointed out that the right of way for the entire distance of thirty-five miles, and the franchises from the various towns that would be passed through had been procured, also the plans had been drawn and the permit for a bridge to be built across the Mississippi had been given by the government.

Fire in Paper Mill.

Brainerd.—A fire of unknown origin destroyed most of the seventy-five foot tower and elevator of the Northwest Paper company pulp mill at the dam north of this city and completely burned up 200 feet of the trainway leading from the tower to the Minnesota and International railway tracks. Two freight cars on a side track loaded with pulp sheets were also destroyed. The plant is run by water power with the exception of the boiler house which is used to heat the plant in winter.

HIBBING FOR REFORM.

Garbage Collection, Curfew Ordinance and Sana Fourth of July.

Hibbing.—By special direction of the town council Hibbing will present all the evidences of a model town during the coming summer if the rules and ordinances being put into effect are enforced.

First and most important is the rigid enforcement of the garbage ordinance. At the recommendation of the health officer, Dr. Adams, a new and more comprehensive ordinance was passed. The city will purchase special fly-tight garbage cans and will sell these at cost to the citizens. The residents will not be forced necessarily to purchase cans from the city, but they will be forced to use flyproof receptacles, and to keep them closed.

At the request of certain women of Hibbing who appeared at the council last night the curfew ordinance will be enforced during the ensuing summer. One long blast will be blown on the fire whistle, to sound the curfew, as the old fire bell is not loud enough to serve the purpose.

Another ordinance to receive attention was the one restraining the use of firecrackers and fireworks in the village limits; a new ordinance was drawn up by Village Attorney Robert Stratton at the request of three of the councilors, but the old one was found to answer the purpose and the recorder was requested to notify the police department to see to the rigid enforcement of the law. The ordinance provides for a safe and sane Fourth of July and there seems to be every indication that it will be carried out.

DUNN IS BANQUETED.

Albert Lea Business Men Tender Dinner to Speaker.

Albert Lea.—There was an immense crowd at the dinner tendered Speaker F. H. Dunn by the Business Men's League of this city. D. C. Armstrong, president of the league, acted as toastmaster, and he was very happy in his allusions to the various speakers.

Short addresses were delivered by County Attorney Peterson, Prof. E. M. Phillips, superintendent of the city schools; Assistant Dairy and Food Commissioner McIntosh, Mayor C. L. Swenson, Representative Wescott of Dakota county and Representative Mackenzie of Sibley county.

Dunn was left to close the addresses. He explained his connection with the "clock" incident, gave a history of the Kiemer incident, told of insuring the banking of the cities by pushing the distance tariff proposition through the House, threw some light on the "seven senator" bill and paid his respects to the journalistic muckrakers who selfishly advocate the cause of "the interests."

Dunn closed by declaring he had no other political ambition than to return to the new house of the Iowa legislature and be a plain clothes man and make another strenuous effort to push through some of the legislation that is so badly needed in the state.

WHITTIER ASKED TO RESIGN.

Red Wing Training School Head Must Quit Post.

St. Paul.—Governor Eberhart will insist on the resignation of Superintendent F. W. Whittier of the state training school at Red Wing, according to information given at the office today. The board of control, it is understood, Wednesday was instructed to receive the resignation. Mr. Whittier has been informed, through F. I. Freeman, member of the board of control, that his resignation is expected. The other two members of the board, Messrs. Ringdahl and Vassaly, are said to favor his retention, but probably will yield to the governor. The question at issue appears to be the extent of time to be given Mr. Whittier.

The board of control believes he should have six months, while Governor Eberhart, not wishing to be hersh or severe, thinks one or two months is sufficient. The board went to Rochester and upon its return will hold a conference with the governor on the subject. It is understood the executive is insistent something must be done at once.

A recent investigation of the school by the legislature found methods of punishment in vogue that were not approved.

RAINY RIVER LOWEST KNOWN.

Duluth.—The stage of water in the Rainy river and its tributaries is very low, the lowest within the memory of men now living. The Rainy is from two inches lower than the previous low water mark. There are millions of feet of logs on the tributaries to be floated to the saw mills, but very few are moving. The big saw mill of the Shevlin-Mathias Lumber Company at Spooner, Minn., was to have started up a week ago, but is delayed because the company does not wish to start up and then perhaps have to shut down on account of a scarcity of logs.

Driving crews have been assembled and have since been dismissed because of the low water. Navigation on the Rainy is interfered with to some extent also for the same reason.

Wood Found Deep in Earth.

Parshnutt.—When the drill at the new city well was reached a depth of 450 feet something remarkable was discovered. While cleaning out the drillings small particles of wood were discovered by the drillers. These pieces of wood indicated that the drill had encountered a piece of wood at this depth. At the time the drill had been working in a fine and apparently dead sandstone. A flow of water was encountered a few feet deeper, which forced itself up within a few inches of the top of the well.

INDICTMENT FOR LAND GRAFT

SOUTHERN MINNESOTA MEN IN FEDERAL NET.

Defendants Charged With Misuse of Mails—Will Fight Case.

Mankato. — The Federal Court completed its business after two days' session and adjourned.

No cases were tried, but the grand jury was busy for two days investigating a scheme alleged to have been practiced on farmers in southern Minnesota and elsewhere by certain parties by which numerous farmers are thought to have been defrauded.

Five indictments were returned charging Samuel D. O'Neill and William A. Bochart, of Sherburn, and Felix L. Perrizo, of Delevan, jointly with conspiracy to commit offense against the postal laws by using the mails in connection with the scheme to defraud Berndt H. Lasson, Foreman, N. D.; Mike C. Eske, De Graff, Minn.; Charles Lonerman, New Richland, Minn. The fifth indictment charges Bochart and Monty G. Thayer, the latter of Chaska.

The Alleged Scheme.

Bochart has not been arrested, but the others both entered pleas of not guilty when arraigned and were allowed to go on bonds of $5,000 and $3,000. The trials will be held at the November term of court. The postoffice department has worked up evidence in the case.

It is claimed by the government these parties put out advertisements in papers claiming to have purchasers for farm land, and for only owners to answer, if wanting to sell. Upon the reply was received two of the parties would go to the farmer, one representing himself to be a real estate agent and other the buyer, and a bargain would be made for the purchase of land at a good price and the buyer would pay down a check to bind the bargain.

The real estate dealer would then ask for his commission, and the farmer would endorse the check at the bank and the alleged real estate dealer would try to get all or as much as possible of the money as commission for making the sale. Later the check would come back worthless and the farmer would have to pay it and he would find that his supposed sale was bogus. O'Neill is said to be a lawyer. The defendants will fight the case strongly.

NEW ROAD INCORPORATED.

Pierre, S. D.—Articles of incorporation have been filed for the Sioux Falls and Southern Minnesota Traction company, with a capital of $200,000, and headquarters at Pierre, with the privilege of opening offices for the transaction of my business of the company at Chicago, Philadelphia, or Albert Lea, Minn.

The company is incorporated by L. B. Wyckoff of Syracuse, N. Y.; J. J. Davenport, H. W. Hamel, Charles H. Sollars of Chicago; G. P. Peterson, Pierre. The company proposes the construction of an electric railway line for the carrying of freight and passengers between Sioux Falls, S. D., and Albert Lea, Minn.

It is to traverse the counties of Minnehaha, in South Dakota; Rock, Nobles, Jackson, Martin, Faribault and Freeborn, in Minnesota, and is to touch beside the terminal points, the towns of Worthington, Sherburn, Spring Valley, Dresden, Loon Lake, Petersburg, Delmell, Ceylon, Silver Lake, East Chain, and Pilot Grove all in Minnesota.

The promotors of this project have been working through that section for some time asking for privileges, and have finally reached the incorporation stage of their development.

MAN ACCUSED OF FORGERY.

Fergus Falls. — Richard M. Hayes, of Minneapolis, was brought to trial in the district court in this city on a charge of forgery of the will of the late Peter Prinsl. Mr. Prinsl died in 1908 and his only heirs were brothers and sisters living in Austria.

A month after his death, Mr. Hayes brought in the will for probate, bequeathing his property, amounting to about $25,000, to his wife's relatives, who reside in Wisconsin. This will was drawn six months before Prinsl's death and Hayes claimed it was brought to him by one of Mrs. Prinsl's brothers about three weeks after Prinsl's death. The main evidence against Hayes is that he is said with no letter accompanying it, the previous November.

The will was admitted and the property divided, but it is now charged that is a forgery and the state proposes to prove that it was drawn on Mr. Hayes' own typewriter. This typewriter will be brought in as evidence and the case hinges largely on peculiarities of letters and papers drawn by Hayes in Minneapolis courts which are to be brought in to show that they were written on the same typewriter as the will. A large number of witnesses are prepared to testify that the signature is a forgery. Hayes is practicing law in Minneapolis.

Notorious Den is Burned.

Winona. — The Childe roadhouse on Stiling, Wis., one of the most notorious places in this section of the country and where last winter John Diegleder was murdered by Al Childe, the proprietor, who has since died of wounds sustained in that affray, was totally destroyed by fire. The origin is a mystery, although it is believed opposition to the continuance of the place by neighboring citizens had occasion for the disastrous blaze.

Two Costumes

CLOTH COSTUME—Magenta face cloth looks extremely smart made up in this style. The skirt, which is quite devoid of trimming, has an inverted pleat at the foot of each of the front seams. The coat is semifitting and has a large square collar faced with white cloth braided in black; the cuffs are to match. A double row of buttons connected by braid loops forms fastening of front in a slanting direction. Hat of magenta tagal, lined with black satin and trimmed with ribbon bows in most attractive style.

Materials required: Five yards cloth forty-six inches wide, one and one-half dozen buttons, about two yards braid, five yards silk or satin for lining coat.

Visiting Dress.—This is a dainty dress that may be made in any fine woolen material. The skirt is slightly high-waisted at back, and has as its only trimming a band of handsome passementerie.

DIVIDE THE HOURS OF REST

Better to Take Sleep in Installments Rather Than in One Long Session.

If you wish to be perfectly fit and healthy don't take your sleep in "one long dose."

Instead of, say, always going to bed at 11 p. m. and rising at 7 a. m., divide your sleeping hours into two portions, as, for instance, from 6 p. m. to 8:30 p. m. (first sleep) and from 2 a. m. to 6:30 a. m. (the second sleep.

This method of sleeping in "watches" gives the brain—for all those who do mental work—just stimulus needed, and promotes fresh energy and vigor to both mind and body.

A doctor who is a serious advocate of sleeping in watches gave the above interesting theory.

"Every man and woman whose work requires a large expenditure of mental energy should divide his or her sleeping hours into two," he said.

"I am acquainted with many people who now always take their sleep in two 'doses,' and they will tell you what a vast improvement it is to the usual rule of ons long sleep in the 24 hours.

"The ideal times of sleep for the brain worker are the afternoon and the early hours of the morning. Of course this program could only be carried out by the womnn whose time is her own."

Novel Vase.

An odd and pretty vase may be made by taking a pickle jar or any other odd-shaped bottle, and covering it all over with putty, then you may use all your discarded buttons out of your button box. Buttons of the gentlemen or other candidates, broken jewelry, even broken china pieces, all these may be used, and stuck down in the putty as close as you can. When dry set it on your mantel. You will be pleased with it. By taking a piece of new sewer pipe and covering it the same way and setting it on a pie plate makes a good umbrella stand.

The New Sleeves.

Although most of the new frocks and coats show the kimono shoulder, the imported lingerie blouses have the regulation sleeve in most instances. Where the straight shoulder effect is preferred it is simulated by a broad band of embroidery which joins the bodice and sleevas.

A notable feature of some of the new gowns is the difference in the two sleeves. For instance, one of the distinct models shows one sleeve of chiffon, close and plain, while the other arm is bare, save for a garland or two of black roses set midway between shoulder and elbow.

Not Afraid of Eva's Fats.

Women are taking to sunkoe. The fashions prove that. The newest silk petticoats that have been imported from Paris and are shown in the Fifth avenue shops have snakes worked on them. Birds, too. Then there is the sunke hat, which has been coming into vogue slowly. It is said woman are adopting snake hosiery. But there also are butterfly styles for stockings, petticoats and hats, and butterflies are worked on handkerchiefs.

NURSERY DRESS.

A delightfully comfortable slip-on dress or overall is this; it may be made up in linen, casement cloth, holland or sqphyr. It is a one-piece pattern that may be fastened either at front or back; the front of our model is laid over in one tuck in the center, and buttons are sown on to give the effect of a front fastening, though the real fastening is at the back.

The "V" shape neck, sleeves, and lower edge are trimmed with fancy braid, which might be replaced by lace or crochet insertion if liked.

Materials required: Four yards three-quarter yards forty inches wide.

To Save Linen.

In some of the best schools the pupils are now taught to roll tablecloths instead of folding them, since the folds in linen are usually the first places that show wear, says a contributor to the Delineator. These tablecloths are ironed flat and rolled while being ironed. It is best to use a table for the ironing board, as this gives more space. Start to roll the tablecloth as soon as a quarter of a yard is ironed and keep the roll directly in front, turning it as fast as the ironing is done. Sometimes three brown paper is used to roll the cloth on, but it must be the width of the linen. A clever woman has procured several rolling tubes, placed them end to end and covered them with fancy wall paper, pasting it on securely. This makes a firm foundation for the roll. Naphine should be folded once with the iron and all other folding done by hand so they will not wear in the creases.

Moths in Furniture.

All the baking and steaming are useless as, although the moths may be killed, their eggs are sure to hatch and the upholstering will be well riddled. The naphtha-bath process is effectual. A sofa, chair or lounge may be immersed in the large vats used for the purpose, and all insect life will be absolutely destroyed. No eggs ever hatch after passing through the naphtha bath. All oil, dust or grease disappears and not the slightest damage is done to the most costly article. Sponging with naphtha will not answer.

Facts About Motherhood

The experience of Motherhood is a trying one to most women and marks distinctly an epoch in their lives. Not one woman in a hundred is prepared or understands how to properly care for herself. Of course nearly every woman now-a-days has a medical treatment at the time of child-birth, but many approach the experience with an organism unfitted for the trial of strength, and when the strain is over her system has received a shock from which it is hard to recover. Following right upon this comes the nervous strain of caring for the child, and a distinct change in the mother results.

Mrs. A. Pinkham

There is nothing more charming than a happy and healthy mother of children, and indeed child-birth under right conditions need be no hazard to health or beauty. The remarkable thing is that, with all the evidences of shattered nerves and broken health resulting from an unprepared condition, women will persist in going blindly to the trial.

It isn't as though the experience came upon them unawares. They have ample time in which to prepare, but they, for the most part, trust to chance and pay the penalty.

In many instances childless there are now children because of the fact that Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound makes women normal, healthy, and strong.

Any woman who would like special advice in regard to this matter is cordially invited to write to Mrs. Pinkham at Lynn, Mass. Her letter will be held in strict confidence.

Our Senator Hanson succeeded in getting a law passed to prohibit the sale of malt outside of a licensed saloon. This had ought to make the senator famous and assure his re-election, and as his friends had a lot of trouble with the letter A the last time he ran, we would suggest that they name him "Matt Hanson", as we never heard of any Hanson by that name.

Knute Nelson has offered an amendment to the Canada treaty putting a tariff of 12½ cents a bushell on wheat, 25 on barly, 8 on oats, 15 on flaxseed, 3 on potatoes, 4 cents a pound on butter and cheese, and a dollar each from $1 to $20 per head. This would help some, but it is doubtful if Knute can get it through, but his effort shows that Senator Nelson is still the friend of the farmers.

Just to show that our heart is in the right place, we sent an order up to the Highlanding shoe maker, this week, to put on a put a new pair of half soles on John Lattimore's shoes and we would pay him for it. As some may not understand this we will explain why we did so. Him and "Taft" Swanson formed a trust walked around our neighborhood soliciting applications to mane final proof and using the argument that they should not publish in this paper for the reason that it opposed county division last fall. Some of our friends put us "next" and we promptly got into the game, and if you do not believe it count up our final proof notices. Now we thought it would be no more than fair to pay for tapping Johns shoes. But the "Taft" who helped him! A man that we never laid a straw in his way. How shall we pay him? We did think that the best way to pay him would be to roast 20 pounds of beef, boil a Lamb, and half bushel of potatoes, fry a dish pan of doughnuts, bake an even dozen loafs of bred and a doz en pies, a barrel of ice cream, half a dozen pails of milk, and then entite him to dinner.

A Competent Critic.

A famous actor at an elaborate entertainment at a Fifth avenue millionaire's palace in New York rose to recite Mrs. Browning's "Dead Pan." As he announced his subject and prepared to begin he heard a lady near him say distinctly:

"What is the next piece? Something funny, I hope. Oh, yes—The Dead Pan? Dear me, how odd! Of course it must be funny—something about bad cooking, I suppose."

Playing Her Cards.

Tommy—May I stay up a little longer? Ethel—What do you want to stay up for? Tommy—I want to see you and Mr. Green playing cards. Mr. Green—But we are not going to play cards. Tommy—Oh, yes, you are, for I heard mamma saying to Ethel that everything depended on the way in which she played her cards tonight.

Cautious.

The young housekeeper was looking at some soft shell crabs squirming and wriggling in their bed of seaweed.

"They're very nice," said the dealer.

"Shall I send you a dozen?"

"Yes," answered the innocent, "if you are sure they are fresh."—New York Journal.

National Shortsightedness.

"In this country," said the sociologist, "everything possible is done to discourage people from marrying."

"How so?" inquired one of the listeners.

"You have to buy the marriage license, fee the preacher, the boys give you what they call a 'shiveree,' your friends throw old shoes at you, the newspapers print caricatures of you, life insurance agents hound you, you bump right up against the cost of living, and if you find you've made a mistake you have to go to he end of trouble to get a divorce."—Chicago Tribune

"I Suffered Intense Pains in My Left Side."

Do you realize it is better to be safe than sorry, that it is the best policy to take the stable door before the horse is stolen?

Dr. Miles' Heart Remedy cured Mrs. C. C. Gokey, of a stubborn case of heart disease, such as thousands are now suffering with. Read what she says:

"Before I began taking Dr. Miles' Heart Remedy I had been suffering from heart trouble for over five years. I had grown so weak that it was impossible for me to do thirty minutes work in a whole day. I suffered intense painsin my left side and under the left shoulder blade, I could not sleep on the left side, and was so short of breath that I thought I should never be able to take a full breath again. The least excitement would bring on the most distressing palpitation. I had scarcely taken a half-bottle of the Heart Remedy before I could see a marked change in my condition. I began to sleep well, had a good appetite, and improved so rapidly that when I had taken six bottles I was completely cured.

MRS. C. C. GOKEY, Northfield, Vt.

If you have any of the symptoms Mrs. Gokey mentions, it is your duty to protect yourself.

Dr. Miles' Heart Remedy is what you need. If the first bottle fails to benefit, your money is returned. Ask your druggist.

Some of the promoters of the new church at Highlanding had better strike their friends "Pat" and John for a donation. This is the first public enterprise that we have not "dug up" to help along since we have been in the country, but you people can now get you help from the friends that you were so anxious to favor, to try to injure us. Your spite has about as much affect on us, or our business as a gnat fly would have on a big ox. Yes we opposed county division, and fought to compell you seven year homesteaders to prove up and pay your share of the taxes to support schools and build roads.

This Is What the Mantion or Pie Did to Willie Brown.

An Effective Prayer.

"Years ago," says a well known actor, "I appeared in an amateur performance of a play that had a distinct religious flavor. The leading player had studied for the ministry and had a deep and sonorous voice in one of the scenes the lights were supposed to be turned down and a raging storm simulated. The accompanying lines were:

"'O Lord, deliver us from the powers of darkness.'

"The leading man spoke the lines, but darkness didn't follow. He spoke them again, and still the stage was disreasingly light. Finally he roared:

"'O Lord, deliver us from the power of darkness and also give that fool gas man sense enough to turn down the lights.'

"The gas lights went down, and the audience roared."—Pittsburg Chronicle Telegraph.

The Bible as a Detective.

The Bible was used until quite recent years for the detection of thieves. Dr. Jessopp told in 1882 how there were still persons living who had witnessed the ordeal to which an East Anglican parson subjected his servants when his cash box was missing. He ordered them all into his bedroom and ranged them around the walls. From the center of the ceiling hung the rope used to lower coffins into the churchyard graves, wound round a Bible, from the leaves of which projected the church door key. This was soon spinning round, and the one at whom the key pointed when it stopped was proclaimed on the thief. Happily the man thus marked out was able to prove an alibi. But this did not continue the search that the test was a bad one. They only convinced that the thief was not there.—London Chronicle.

"This here paper says as how they've just discovered the remains of a thirty-foot saurian in Nevada."

"What ju thunder's a saurian?"

"Blomed if I know. I s'pose mebbe it's something like a sardine."

"Huh! You ign'rant chump, they ain't no thirty-five foot sardines."

"Well, there must be the remains of one, contin't they?"

"How-how! Who'd ever buy a box of them things?"

"Darn you, you're just like all the rest of these here smart guys that are ignorin' religion. I think they is remains of thirty-five foot sardines in Nevada. I got faith to suppose that they is also remains of men ign'rant enough to buy 'em by the box an' eat 'em on crackers. You know what you are? You are one of these here skeptics!"—New York Journal.

"I asked him if he wished to rein me and said that if my banker heard of my tossing authors for their copyright he would certainly close my account. He ultimately came to an agreement on my terms, which were sufficiently liberal. But I felt uncomfortable; I felt mean; I had refused a challenge. To relieve my mind I said: 'Now, that is settled. How Coal Owners Sacrifice Coal Workers

BY BEN MELLON

ONLY seven Americans killed."

Only seven! Not enough to matter. At least this was the naive explanation given in the news dispatches on the eighth of last October for telling so little about the explosion in the Starkville coal mine, when fifty-five men were killed. As for the other eight, they were ignorant foreigners, and apparently did not count.

And yet, out of that coal mine was carried a charred, shrunken body, one of the forty-eight, which lay, twisted from the death-pain, to the bright sunshine. "John Cyzs, a Pole, some one said, and a woman, who had watched three despairing days and nights, raised her bony fists against the serene, far-away sky, and went mad.

Turning from the horror before her, she ran shrieking down the mountain side, and another woman, who caught the fixed stare of her eyes, abandoned her children in pursuit.

The clumsy race turned down the dry ravine and ended in one of those forlorn little settlements that mark a coal mine the world over. The Polish woman in the lead burst into her cabin, and, seizing a revolver, rushed at her terrified children, but, before she could shoot, her arms were seized from behind. The struggle was short and decisive. One plunge backward across the pounded dirt floor and the second woman staggered to one side, panting, with the revolver safe in her hand.

Just at that dramatic moment the body of her own husband was being carried to the surface.

This was a mere incident, almost lost in the stupefaction following a local calamity. But it serves as a meaningful introduction to a splendid example of the kind of occurrence which has doubled the number of men killed in our coal mines in the last ten years.

The Starkville mine is an average American coal mine. The last annual report before the explosion showed that the mine had cleared $500,000 in the previous year, it pointed out that the property was yielding handsome returns on the investment, but it did not mention the fact that the mine was so dusty a new air-shaft was sorely needed. The air-shaft would have cost $10,000, and the management decided against it. Unfortunately, there was no one in the state of Colorado to make the company stick to it.

One-fiftieth of the year's earnings was too much to make the mine reasonably safe! Result, fifty-five dead, thirty-two widows thrown upon the world, and almost a hundred children fatherless. They formed an important addition to the year's total from the coal mines of more than seven thousand killed and injured, fifteen hundred widowed, and four thousand children dependent on ignorant and helpless strangers.

Officially these men were killed by an explosion of the coal dust, but they were really killed by greed. It is the same with all mine disasters. You can find volume after volume on the causes, but, sift them to the bottom, and is more than three-fourths of the cases you will find that spirit of, "Get out the coal, never mind how many men you kill, but get out the coal." As ex-Governor Dawson of West Virginia once exclaimed in exasperation, "There are coal companies which have no regard whatever for human life."

This explains why there are killed in certain sections of the naturally not unsafe bituminous coal fields of Pennsylvania and West Virginia twelve times as many men in comparison to the number employed as in the highly dangerous coal mines of Belgium. For in this one section alone, from killing six out of every thousand in 1906, by 1908 when the last reliable figures were obtained, the annual death roll had increased to more than twelve.

The truth is that men are ruthlessly killed in our coal fields because the coal operators find it less expensive to repair damage than take precautions. The human cost they do not take the trouble to figure because, to them, there is none. To kill miners entails no financial loss. In the Pittsburg district, even in the big notorious explosions of recent years, the average cost to the operating companies has been less than $50 for every man dead.

"You mustn't blame the mine operators," an important government official apologized, when the blame was laid at their doors. "It isn't their fault. They are doing all they can."

You need only listen to the government's own reports to see the fallacy of such a statement. The increase in mine disasters became so marked about five years ago that it even attracted the attention of the geological survey, more a scientific than a humanitarian organization, and two men, Clarence Hall and Walter Snelling, were detailed to study the situation here and abroad. They found the contrast to be almost unbelievable. It is summarized in these few sentences:

"In spite of all the natural conditions tending to reduce the percentage of mine disasters in the United States to a low figure, the accidents during the last fifteen years have shown directly contrary results. Considered in regard to the number of deaths per thousand men employed, the United States occupies a less favorable position than any other of the coal-producing countries, more than three times as many men out of every thousand being killed as in some of the European countries which are much less favored by natural conditions. In regard to deaths per thousand tons of coal the United States not only occupies a position worse than most of the European countries, but it is also showing an increase in the death rate, whereas every other country is showing a decrease."

They pointed out that the European mines are deep and beset with many dangers we are not troubled with, while our mines are easy and should be safe to work, because the veins are large and thick and run horizontally. And yet they showed where we kill four times as many men as France.

This is the condition of our comparatively safe mines of today, but, as they showed, we are now beginning for the first time in the history of coal mining in this country to open veins that are really dangerous. We are on the very threshold of a new and far more hazardous period in coal mining, and, unless we take active measures, we are going to have a series of mine explosions which will appal us—even if there are no Americans killed.

Out of the region they made has grown the Pittsburg testing station of the department of mines, which is now taking up the most serious cause of mine explosions—electricity. There would be no objection to electricity under proper conditions, but the difficulty with it at the present time is that the electrical machinery sparks. In a gaseous or dusty mine, given the right conditions, and it needs only a spark to kill every man in it. It should be used only in mines where there is no chance of the accumulation of gas; but, is point of fact, it has been adopted most generally by the mine operators of the "gas belt" of Western Pennsylvania and West Virginia. In all that country, there is never any telling where gas will be struck next; and the cutting machines, which work ahead and are most likely to open gas pockets, are operated by electric dynamos which are constantly "at the face" of the coal. Formerly it was the rule and in some states the law to bore ahead and test for gas pockets, but with the modern electric cutting machines all such precautions are out of the question.

The case against electricity, when used for power, is the most serious consideration in the whole of the coal mining situation, because it is the cheapest production cheaper, and, on that account, no matter how many deaths it causes, it would be extremely difficult to drive it out of the American coal fields. The saving averages about three cents a ton, but here is an instance of the lengths to which operators have gone to make this miserable profit: When the dangers from electricity began to be understood, its use was permitted only in mines where open lights were safe. So the operators, to dodge the law, torn out their covered lights and sent men into gaseous mines with flaming torches in their hats. Then, until some terrific accident happened, the mine inspectors were silenced.

Perhaps we are not to blame the coal operators for reducing the cost of production to the lowest possible point; but when they do so at the present tremendous cost of human life, it is high time they had the stern hand of regulation. So far, however, they have always been able to prevent the real cause of some of the worst disasters being laid to electricity. A definite cause, in any event, is an abhorrence to them. For, if the blame can be placed on the operating machinery of a mine, it opens the way to damage suits, a contingency the coal operators are adepts at escaping.

This whole situation was never better shown than in the terrific disaster at Monongah No. 8, in West Virginia, which had the longest death list in the history of American coal mining. The accident occurred on December 6, 1907, immediately after a trip of fifteen loaded mine cars, liberated by the breaking of an iron coupling pin, had run back twelve hundred feet on an eight per cent. grade, raising a thick cloud of dust and ending by causing a short circuit in the electric current. But, when it came to fixing the cause, electricity was hardly considered, a fact that is particularly noteworthy, as the decision was severely criticized afterwards in engineering journals.

Testimony that tended to prove that electricity was to blame came out at the hearing, but was ignored. Fire Boss Trade at No. 6, in which the cars ended the rue, said that twice before there had been runaways, and on each occasion fires had been started in the coal dust, but had been extinguished before they spread. And Blacksmith Jenkine, figuring the time between the passage of the cars and the moment of explosion, showed that between a short circuit and the explosion there had been at least a remarkable coincidence.

There were 362 men killed in that disaster, and, if the cause had been fixed on electricity, the owners might have been forced to pay $1,800 a man, like the owners of the Cherry Hill mine, who faced a public opinion outraged at the thought of men being sealed alive in a burning mine. As it was, they got off by contributing $20,000 to be added to the public relief fund of $149,000. So, instead of $1,800, each men cost only $55.25.

Electricity was also not blamed in the case of the Marianna disaster of November 28, 1908, when 154 men lost their lives; but, after the public interest had blown over, the use of electricity was abandoned at the suggestion of the department of mines and compressed air replaced in its stead. This might appear to indicate a guilty knowledge of the real cause.

As a matter of fact the owners of the mine, the Pittsburg-Buffalo Company, had already had warning that all was not right in the Marianna. On August 12, more than two months before the big explosion, there was a smaller explosion which resulted in the death of one man and serious injury to two others; and Aldermun A. R. Day, of Monongahela, before whom the preliminary hearing took place, found that the accident had been due to electricity. William Underwood, foreman in charge of the mine, was arrested on information filed by State Mine Inspector John F. Bell, on a charge of permitting "the use of spark-throwing machinery in that part of the mine where only safety lamps are allowed."

The Pittsburg-Buffalo Company repeatedly denied the fact of this accident, but the report of the state department of mines for 1908 contains an account of the accident.

Now that the United States government has recognized the danger of electricity, it has taken a position that it would be blocking progress to prevent its use. It has set itself the task of the problem is a way that will bring final relief, but the position that it would be impossible to fix an exact number, but probably no less than five hundred men lose their lives through unsafe electric apparatus in the course of the year. Since the time the government has been at work on the problem.

In March, 1910, the federal department of mines began a record of all manufacturers of electric mining apparatus that H. H. Clark, an engineer, had employed in charge of the work at the Pittsburg testing station, and was ready to stamp the seal of government approval on all electric mining machinery that did not spark; but nine months later he had not a single piece of electric apparatus on the market that met the requirements. Just consider that for a moment. Even with all the improvements which have been made in electric apparatus, safety is as far off as ever.

But what is to be done? It is objected that you can't stop the wheels of industry from operating until they are made safe. And yet, if they are permitted to go ahead as at present, they are absolutely certain to kill from 2,000 to 5,000 men before safe apparatus is devised and installed.

Are those 5,000 lives to be sacrificed? Is nothing to be done until safety is perfected?

If those 5,000 men were in one mine and absolutely certain to meet death there unless the electric apparatus were torn out, the situation would be dramatic, public opinion would be aroused, and some thing quite material would be done. The real need is no less hideous. If, then, it would not be absurd to demand immediate action in the one case, it is not in the other.

But, it is objected again, it would interfere with business, it would be too expensive, impossible. Money, then, is more to be considered than men. It must be saved at any cost to men. And these 5,000 must die because it would be too expensive to save them.

In Colorado they are beginning to see the light. A whole series of horrible disasters has forced it on them. The coroner's jury that investigated the Starkville explosion found it had been due to electricity, and a commission appointed by the governor strongly urged on the legislature this spring absolutely to forbid the use of electricity in mines, regardless of the cost.

Having no power to enforce the use of safety apparatus, the department of mines is basing its undertaking on moral suasion. With the help of mining inspectors and new state laws it hopes to get results. Eventually, it has reason to believe, it will be successful. It is doing a similar work in respect to explosives.

A WIDOW'S LUCK

Quit the Thing That Was Slowly Injuring Her.

A woman tells how coffee kept her from enjoying her life:

"I suffered for many years chiefly from trouble with my heart, with severe nervous headaches and neuralgia; but although incapacitated at times for my housework, I did not realize the gravity of my condition till I was rejected for life insurance, because, the examining physician said, my heart was so bad he could not pass me.

"This distressed me very much, as I was a widow and had a child dependent upon me. It was to protect her future that I wanted to insure my life.

"Fortunately for me, I happened to read an advertisement containing a testimonial from a man who had been affected in the same way that I was with heart trouble, and who was benefited by leaving off coffee and using Postum. I grasped at the hope this held out, and made the change at once.

"My health began to improve immediately. The headaches and neuralgia disappeared, I gained in flesh, and my appetite came back to me. Greatest of all, my heart was strengthened from the beginning, and soon all the distressing symptoms passed away. No more waking up in the night with my heart trying to fly out of my mouth! Then I again made application for life insurance, and had no trouble in passing the medical examination.

"It was seven years ago that I began to use Postum and I am using it still, and shall continue to do so, as I find it a guarantee of good health." Name given by Postum Company, Battle Creek, Mich.

His Brown Overcoat

By LOUISE JACKSON STRONG

Roger paused as a zephyr swept around the hood, then turned his horse upstream with a heave that heapettured him, halloing in response. His pulse leaped with astonishment and alarm. It was Kate's voice! What had he fallen her? He pushed rapidly through the scrub with frequent calls, getting no response, and whoa, breaking through on the brink of the stream he saw her; he demanded, with a flash of resentment:

"Why didn't you answer? I would have found you the sooner."

"I wouldn't have called at all if I had known it was you splashing along down there. I couldn't know, of course, until I heard your voice," she replied with an effort at dignity.

But dignity is not easily attained when the aspirant is on her knees, clinging to a log that quivers above a whirl of rushing water. She felt that her position was ludicrous and went on abarpiy:

"I am sorry I brought you out of your way, excuse me, and go on. I can manage."

"Nonsense!" he retorted. "Of course I can't, and won't, leave you there." He urged his horse into the stream.

"It isn't necessary," she cried. "I—I was nervous. I—I can get across myself." She crawled a few trembling inches.

"Keep still," he commended. "Don't you see it's going down! Steady old boy—there! Slip on as carefully and quickly as possible—hold tight! Now, Dee, out of this!" The horse plunged ahead and as he struggled upon the bank the great log went down. A moment later they might have been carried with it.

Kate shrieked, and Roger's face was white.

"I reached you in time, thank heaven!" he breathed.

"I never noticed how the flood had loosened it until I was out on it," you've been doing for eggs, it seems! —but I've got to know what's the matter between us. There has been no formal declaration, but you know that I loved you—I never tried to hide it. You accepted my attentions, letting me hope everything!—then suddenly you cut me absolutely! I can't think you a coquette, there must be a reason. Tell me plainly what it is."

"Oh, please!" she shrilled. "You couldn't complain if I were."

He studied a bit. "Honestly, Kate, I don't know what you mean."

"How exceedingly innocent!" she jeered.

"Kate," he begged, "Tell me frankly what you mean, what slander you have heard about me."

"None! I swear— But it doesn't matter, it's nothing to me."

"I had hoped that anything concerning me was considerable to you Kate," he pleaded. "And though I suppose your manner should be sufficient, I am going to have a straight answer. I love you, Kate. Will you marry me?"

Proposing to a girl on horseback has its disadvantages. At that instant ons of Doc's forelegs went into a hole, pitching the pair forward to the verge of unseating them. When they were again under way Roger immediately repeated his declaration and request.

"That question should go with your kiss, sir!" Kate retorted. "You never kissed me, thank fortune!"

"Meaning, I take it, that I did kiss some other girl—and from what you said a moment ago, I infer that you know of her. When, whom and where, please?"

"Your pretense is contemptible!" she burst out. "I could respect you if you had simply discovered that you were mistaken in your feeling for me, but to be trifling with both of us!— Well, then, though I hate myself for mentioning it—and I haven't before now, even to mother, and she was with me—we were coming from town. It was almost dark—you were at the gate with Ella Mason, and you—you kissed her! That's my last word!" she said.

"I suppose you never dreamed you might be mistaken?"

"I couldn't be! I know your brown overcoat as well as I know you! If you're half a man you'll try to make Ella happy."

He said nothing, but urged Doc around a corner.

"Let me off, or take me straight home!" she ordered.

"We're going up to see about Ella's happiness first," he returned, paying no heed to her angry commands and demenda

Ella ran down to the gate, laughing. "Well if you folks aren't in style!"

"Don't laugh at us," Roger begged, shyly. "You know you wouldn't mind riding so with Frank, Ella."

"It's none of your business if I wouldn't," Ella tossed her head. There was ee explosive breath behind Roger. "Come in," Ella urged.

"Can't," Roger replied. Kate seemed dumb. "I stopped to ask you if you remember when it was that Frank was here with my overcoat on. I want the date particularly, haven't seen him since."

"Why—why it was three weeks last Thursday, the seventh." Evidently Ella had reason for remembering the date, her face flamed scarlet.

"Thank you, I guess you're right," Roger said, turning Doc.

Kete mumbled a few words to Ella over her shoulder as Doc trudged away.

Roger whistled softly until they neared her home, then remarked to the atmosphere: "It wasn't very cold and Frank had come out without an overcoat. He was just up from the city, and mother made him take mine," he added, plaintively. "He has it yet, too."

Kate's attempted speech quavered into a sob.

As they rode up to the side porch her mother came out, exclaiming:

"I told you it would be dreadfully muddy in the bottoms, Kate. I'm glad Roger picked you up. Did you got to Mary's?"

"No, she didn't," Roger interposed. "But we went up and saw Ella Mae son a minute, at the gate."

"I saw Ella at the gate too, and Frank White with her. They didn't seem to mind the public a little bit," Mrs. Williams responded severely.

"Come in and stay to supper, Roger."

"Thank you, I will."

Roger lifted Kate down and kissed her boldly, saying, 'Evidence all in, Miss Williams. Here's the kiss with the question I asked you awhile ago. You're going to marry me, you know."

Kete did not deny the impudent assertion, but ran away as her mother cried:

"Did you ever! You two don't seem to mind the public a little bit either!"

The Difficulty.

"The governor in the police case is putting up a fight, isn't he?"

"I rather think from the looks of things that his difficulty is in putting the fight down."

long, 6 in. square at the base, and tapering to 6 by 3 in. at the top, are set in position in holes 3 ft. deep. They are reinforced with ¾-in. pipe round iron, and weigh 200 lbs. each. the bolts are fastened by means of ¾-in. bolts, inserted at the proper distances along the posts immediately after the latter are finished, says the Popular Mechanics.

The arch pieces, made in a wooden mould measuring 4 by 4 in. inside, are also reinforced by ¾-in. iron rods bent to the shape of the mold. The arches are fastened to the posts by bolts in the same manner as the lath.

and attach the frame to the tree with a wire. This should be attached at just the right point to correct the crookedness in the tree. The tree should be protected from the wire by a cloth. The constant heering down of the weight will in a very short time bring the tree to its proper position without injury.

TO SET YOUNG FRUIT TREES

Just as Well to Dig New Holes in Space Between Old Ones After Latter Have Been Cut.

It would do no harm to set young fruit trees in the holes where the old trees are taken out, but other things being equal, it would be just as well to dig new holes in the spaces between the old ones after they have been cut down or pulled up. Answering a question along this line, the Rural New Yorker advises digging a wide hole two feet or more a diameter and eight to twelve inches deep, as may be needed, placing the rich or top soil in one pile and the subsoil in another.

Cut out all broken or injured roots from the tree to be set, and freshen the ends of the sound roots with a slanting cut from below upward, so that the fresh surface will rest on the soil. When the roots are in their natural position, set the trees in the center of the hole and carefully fill in around the roots with the best of the top soil taken out, sifting it from the edge of the shovel and working it between the roots with the fingers, shaking the tree meanwhile to get the earth in every crevice between the roots.

FUNGUS DISEASES OF PEACH

Brown Rot Among Most Destructive of Fungi on Trees—Prevails During Warm Weather.

(By R. G. WEATHERSTONE.)

The brown rot fungus is among the most destructive of the fungi on the peach, yielding pleoe only at times to leaf-curl. Unlike leaf-curl the brown rot prevails during warm, showery weather, and with such a weather period is likely to occur at any time during the year. The spring crop of peaches are permitted to remain on the trees from the preceding year, the fungus may affect the twigs through the blossome and thus cause serious twig blight. It is a matter of common remark that the branches upon which rotted peaches are found often perish from effect of the rot fungus. The survival of the fungus in these "mummy" fruits and the protection of saccoporas from them are well proven. No one variety seems more susceptible to rot than others, although some sorts are more liable to ripen during rainy weather and then rot worse. The control of rot demands: First, careful removal and destruction of all mummy rotted peaches in which the fungus survives; second, thorough spraying of the trees before blossoming as for leaf-curl; third, subsequent spray treatment with modified limesulfur may be profitable under certain conditions.

The leaf-curl fungus is at times one of the serious pests of the peach grower. However destructive leaf-curl does not occur every year. The curl fungus survives in the buds from year to year. It is therefore present each season, though possibly in varying amount. Leaf-curl usually comes when cool weather, with frequent rains, prevails during March, April, May and June. It is to the April weather that the most serious trouble seems attributable. With low temperatures and frequent rains during the early half of this month we may safely predict an outbreak of leaf-curl. During such weather the fungus develops rapidly and the new leaves are affected as they are protruded from the bud. In a modified sense the same takes place during May and in a still more limited sense during June. Successful prevention of leaf-curl is secured by thorough early treatment with bordeaux mixture. Indeed, it appears that a spraying or two given shortly before the blossoms open is several times more effective than any application afterward. It appears that more effective results are secured by spraying two weeks before blossoming than immediately before the blossoms open. In any event an application made just before the blossoms open is more effective than at any later date. Lime sulphur applications for scale insects are effective to prevent leaf-curl.

German Grafting Wax.

I here read of a great many recipes for making grafting wax, but none like the following: Take resin, 4 pounds; beeswax, 1 pound; tallow, ½ ounce; venetian turpentine, 1 ounce (the last to prevent cracking in hot weather). Place all in a vessel and boil, says a writer in an exchange. Stir well and pour into roughly melted pour the whole mass into cold water. When cooled off somewhat, work well and form into sticks. Here is an old German recipe and one of the best.

HORTICULTURAL NOTES

Stable manure is hard to beat as an orchard fertilizer.

Thorough and constant spraying is the price of good fruit.

Ground hone and wood ashes make a good combination for fruit trees and plants.

Partially-girdled trees may often be saved by binding on the wound a paste of cow manure and clay.

Don't set your trees less than 33 feet apart in the eastern states and 40 feet in the eastern states.

There is one thing which grapes require which must not be overlooked, namely, a well-drained subsoil.

Spray now and you will care for four acres of strawberries, but it will take much extra help to pick them.

In setting trees see that the holes are dug first, then level the bottom of the hole where the tree is to stand.

Whether the orchard is infested with scale or not the winter or dormant spray should never be omitted.

The man who counts on a certain number of bushels from his peach orchard practices what his orchard ought to produce.

Some fruit growers say that it is not a good plan to plow an orchard when the trees are in blossom,—better do it before or after.

Hope you did that grafting job last month as we then advised. If you forgot it, perhaps it's not too late even now, if you hurry.

The UNITED STATES ARMY in ACTION

HE rapidity and perfection of working arrangements with which there was recently carried out the mobilization of one-fourth of the American standing army on the Mexican frontier proved a revelation to all but the very limited number of people who have been in a position to keep in touch with the military progress of the nation during the past few years. Incidentally, this object lesson under virtual war conditions has answered not a few of the criticisms recently made against Uncle Sam's military establishment in speeches in congress. Indeed, this hasty rendezvous in Texas discounted to a great extent, as nothing could, the chief bugaboo of the recent alarmist utterances,—namely the alleged handicap sustained to having our fighting forces scattered all over the country at widely separated military posts.

Extreme mobility, which in the case of the American army has been so strikingly put to the test by the double quick advance on the Rio Grande, is the one attribute above all others for which our military experts have been working ever since the Spanish-American war. The United States needs a mobile armed force as does no other nation on the globe. Indeed, it is absolutely imperative. The explanation is found, of course, in the immense extent of the republic and our far flung coast line. To protect so extensive a territory needs an armed force that can move with extreme rapidity from place to place. The fact that broad oceans separate us from the nations that, in the event of trouble, would press our most formidable foes, presumably insures us reasonable warning of attempted invasion but even with this leeway it needs quick-moving soldiery to rush at short notice to any threatened point of attack.

The circumstances that the rushing of troops to our southern boundary left the Atlantic coast virtually unprotected is being made an argument for a larger regular army by the advocates of such an organization. However, our military experts have not availed upon a larger army to perfect a state of military preparedness.

But whatever the merits of this question of a large standing army the military experts have not waited upon its solution. They have gone right ahead, heeding every energy to make a force of considerably less than 100,000 men equal in emergency to a body of soldiery several times as numerous. To that end Uncle Sam's soldiery, with due acknowledgement of the modern tendency of specialization, have been rendered as versatile as possible in the arts of warfare. And, best of all, there has been cultivated the "fire storm" propensity to cut and run for a scene of trouble at the shortest warning. In their part of the preparations, too, the administrative officials in every branch of the army have kept constantly in mind this aim and purpose.

Of all the preparations for war which have gone forward under a clear sky perhaps the most wonderful have had to do with the transportation arrangements. Our military experts have awakened to the fact that the United States is the greatest railroad country in the world and that even in the event of the most serious conflict it is unlikely that many of those communicative lines would be seriously interfered with. Why not then, make these antiblisters of time and space a military asset. Indeed it is imperative to do so if the army is to be rendered a mobile force, for an other utility can serve as the twentieth century substitute for the forced marches of older days. Consequently, whereas European nations, with their circumscribed areas and perfect highways have been experimenting with military automobiles and other innovations our war department officials have been wrestling with the problems of the make-up and handling of troop trains, and designing special kitchen cars and hospital cars and the like. The first try-out of the plans that have been in the making these past dozen years has come in the case of the recent hurried advance to Texas.

It a chance visitor could have been in Washington in the early days of the Spanish war and then again when the recent hurry call in the Gulf coast was given he could not fail to be impressed with the contrast,—the turmoil and confusion of 1898 with the well-oiled precision of the present execution of prearranged plans. That 20,000 men could be moved a distance of thousands of miles along a score of different arteries of traffic without apparently d organiog in the slightest degree the ordinary routine of the war department in Washington is a tribute, first of all, of course, to the organized army with its general staff or board of directors, but in even greater degree is it evidence of the value of that comparatively new institution, the U. S. Army War College. The newspaper-reading public has been told repeatedly these past few years that it is the special province of the officers detailed to duty in the great red brick building, overlooking the Potomac in Washington, to have on hand and to keep constantly up to date detailed plans of campaigns for use in the event of war with any other nation. However, the present instance affords the country at large its first real examplification of the practical value of the information that is kept under such close guard in the plan vault and the map rooms of the War College.

It was shown by the rapidity with which orders were formulated and issued for this sudden movement of the largest body of troops that has been handled at any one time since the Spanish war that the War College has dependable information as to just what can be expected of the railroads in an emergency. This showed, too, the wisdom of Uncle Sam's policy of keeping his war plans up to the minute by revising them every time there is a change of railroad schedules for, in this instance, most of the troops traveled by regular trains instead of by special trains and the latter would presumbably be resorted to only in the case of extreme emergency.

Another feature of the plans for the army in action for which the big trek to Texas has proven a most beneficial dress rehearsal is that which contemplates reliance upon the telegraph system of the country in the movement of troops. The use of the network of wires covering the continent, in the event of war, has been the subject of study on the part of the military experts that has gone hand in hand with the investigation as to how the railroad arrangements could be made to promote the mobility of the military force. This worked out just as anticipated the day orders were issued for the advance to Texas and there poured into the department a constant stream of telegrams that kept the officials advised in detail as to the movement of every body of troops headed for the rendezvous in the Lone Star State.

It may be a trifle early to talk about the lessons to be drawn from this taste of war but one is already apparent. It emphasizes that the field artillery yet has a very important place in our military paraphernalia. There has been a disposition on the part of some people, of late years, to regard any considerable amount of field artillary as not the most useful equipment for the American army. Such advocates took the view that Uncle Sam ought to put his money into heavy coast defense guns just as he is concentrating his naval expenditure upon battleships of the heaviest class. However, the unexpected call to Texas, emphasizing as it did, vistas of trouble that had been completely overlooked in contemplation of the "yellow peril," called attention to the possible sore need for ample field artillary under certain conditions. And incidentlly it has served the hint that the mountain batteries, in which guns and ammunition are "packed" on mule back might prove is invaluable in the mountains of Mexico as they have under somewhat similar conditions in the Philippines.

Similarly the conditions existing at the scene of the present campaign are such as to emphasize the fact that there is yet a very important sphere for the cavalry in the army.

It is though the crisis in this unexpected quarter were a providential answer to the arguments of these persons in and out of official life who have been urging in recent years that the foot-soldier should be practically the whole thing in our military complement. It must be apparent to everybody who is even casually conversant with geographical conditions that if Uncle Sam is to keep peace "from the Canal to Canada" he will have need of a considerable cavalry force and a force provided with the best possible class of mounts. There are mountainous localities in the region to the south of us where only cavalry could operate successfully. Neither automobiles nor yet aeroplanes would serve as a substitute. And incidentally it may be noted that conditions on the Mexican border have afforded an opportunity much earlier than was anticipated to test the practical military value of the airship. The servicability of the sky craft for scouting operations ought to be pretty well attested ere the troops return to their home stations.

No better theater of war, reel or mimic, than the southwest could be chosen for demonstrating the progress made during the past few years, both in the methods and equipment of the U. S. Signal corps. The general public, with its craving for the spectacular, has heard most regarding the introduction of the aeroplane as a utensil of warfare but as a matter of fact the Signal Corps has recently introduced innovations far more important from a military standpoint than the aerial scouts, and these communicative utilities and novelties for day and night signaling would obviously prove especially valuable in rough country where there are few existing telephone or telegraph wires and where the erection of such lines would be difficult and expensive. The Signal Corps is fully abreast of the times (and of the military establishment of any other nation) in its experimentation with wireless telegraphy and wireless telephony and it has developed some very ingenious expedients for the use of rapidly moving forces in the field,—as for instance, the auto-telegraph car or telephone and telegraph station on wheels and the apparatus which enables a mounted trooper to lay or reel in a telephone wire automatically while his horse is at full gallop, the rider meanwhile continuing telephone conversation over this elastic wire.

It is expected that when the joint operations of the army and navy in the south have passed into history the record of operations will afford argument one way or another as to what shall be done with the U. S. Marine Corps. Our readers will recall that this force, the "soldiers of the navy" has been for some time past a bone of contention in service and official circles. Many persons have contended for years past that this body of sea soldiers who are presumably no longer needed on our warships as they were in the days when most of the sailors were foreigners, should be transferred to the army. Some time ago all the marines were taken off the warships, but later by order of congress they had to be restored. Now that hundreds of the marines are scheduled to participate in extensive land operations,—either independently or in conjunction with the soldiery of the regular army—it is hoped that evidence will be forthcoming as to whether or not they would render better service if actually enrolled on the army roster.

The "team work" of the army and navy which is a consistent policy with Uncle Sam is being followed along with other up-to-date ideas in the operations on the Gulf coast. Co-operation between military and navel forces is, of course, an axiom with all the great powers of the world, but many of the European nations which have no very extensive sea coasts have not given the attention to this that has been bestowed in the United States. It will be remembered that in most recent war games on the Atlantic coast there was joint responsibility between the two arms of the service. However many persons had little expectation that such concerted action would be in evidence when planning operations not in reference to a foe from overseas, but relative to possible disturbances in a neighboring republic on our own continent. In this respect the present activity has proven something of a revelation. But it has been realized that not only can the warships render a service by a patrol of the Gulf coast but are also a factor in that they can land for shore service thousands of seamen trained by regular smell arms practice for service as infantrymen and light artillerymen.

One of the marvels of the recent strategic work in the southwest is found in the very creditable manner in which the commissary department has met the responsibilities suddenly thrust upon it. Here again there has been most gratifying contrast to the conditions of the Spanish war period, but it must be remembered that Uncle Sam has made very tangible progress since these past few years in the very vital problems of subsisting troops in the field. The army has made most advantageous use of fireless cooking by means of fireless cookers on wheels, designed to cook the food while the military force to which the equipment is attached is on the march and to have the meal, piping hot and ready to serve the minute the force halts for the noon day respite or to pitch camp at night.

There has been plenty of work too, for the engineer corps of the army in this "Texas campaign" for there have been big camps to lay out and to lay out such sites in various sizes up to a divisional camp covering 800 acres means an immense amount of work for the surveying corps and the map makers in the field. The engineers are also likely to find some opportunity for their searchlight work,—including that with their new portable eeerchlighte conveyed by automobile trucks and cre the "war game" is concluded they are likely to have more or less practice in bridge building. And finally the operations of 20,000 soldiers in the field cennot fail to afford the share of work for the hospital corps —the more so by reason of the effect upon the health of many of the officers and men of so sudden a change from a cold to a warm climate. And the best part of all this practical try-out of our military preparedness is that not only will the rank and file gat experience but the higher officers of the service from Gen. Leonard Wood, down, will personally direct or observe the important movements, thereby learning at first hand the tactical and strategic lessons involved.

For Twenty-One Centuries It Has Remained the Most Amazing Construction of Human Hands—Builder's Name Cursed.

Pekin.—Best known by repute of all the wonders of the world, the great wall of China has remained for 21 centuries the most amazing construction of human hands. Ruined and broken es it is, it is clear at first sight that the amount of human labor required to build this majestic herriar le without parallel on earth. Fifteen hundred miles long, with additional loops that odd another 1,000 miles, there were originally 25,000 watch towers upon it.

The wall was built et the end of the third century before Christ by the first, ond perhaps the greatest, of all Chinese emperors. Che Hwang-te, prince of Teln, succeeded as a boy to the throne of a comparatively small kingdom and at once began to put into a state of order and defence a territory that long had been allowed to degenerate into a mere prey to animal northern invaders. After a few yeere the young king assumed the style of emperor end organized the forces of what for the first time in history wae China. For he at once gave to the whiole of this new empire the name of his own small state. He then marched out against the Tartars, his hereditary and perennial enemies in the north. After routing theea marauding pests he was recalled for the usual oriental need of crushing out the seeds of rebellion ot home. It was probably in order that he should not again find himself thus between two cuemies that he conceived the gigantic defense of which the larger part remains to this day.

Undeterred by the magnitude of the task and tha terrible loss of life thct its construction must involve, Che-Hwang-te gave the word and the huge structura slowly forged its way from many centers ot once along the entire northern boundary of wha! was then the Chinese empire. Che-Hwang-te enlisted the workere in many ways and from many quetters. Some of his prees gang work was hardly creditable, for It lo on record that the mere possession of a book condemned the wretched owner to four yeare' herd labor on the wall.

But es the Chinese proverb has It: "Tha annihilation of one generation has proved the salvation of othere," and for many centuries the great wall served Ite purpose well.

Dispopulatnent generally swells the mortal who has heard much shout some celebrated object and does visit It; so seldom does the reality come up to expectation. But the great wall is not overrated. Be- hold it by starlight or moonlight, gaze on it in twilight or in sunlight; view it through the heze of a dust storm or the shidrils of a snowstorm, or between the flekes of o snowstorm, ever is the wall one great, gray, ghostly spectre of the desert, crossing the mountain peak or repcsing in the shndy velley. So vest is it that perhaps alone of all man's handiworks it could he discerned from the moon. So vest is it that were its materials' disposed around the earth at the equator they would provide a well eight feet high and three feet thick. When we reflect on the labor needed to erect it we slowly divine the toll exacted from countless thousands who sweet out their lives and blood that must have been shed and we are prepared to hear that after two millennia the nemn of Che is cursed oil along the wall by the descendents of those who were driven to the hateful task, who lehored in deathly fear lest when flesh ond blood foiled to respond to the taskmaster's scourge, flesh and blood should be buried into the maze of concrete to provida more material for the all-devouring monster. It is a wall of blood!

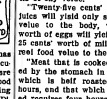
HAPPENINGS IN THE CITIES

Boston Man "Roasts" Baked Beans

BOSTON.—The baked bean that has made Boston famous, the succulent frater and beef hatrat, were branded as being injurious or of no food value by Dr. Franklin White, lecturing at the Harvard medical school on "Digestion." He claimed that people could live more successfully on half the quantity of food taken. Prof. John H. Woods of Cambridge also aimed a blow at the high cost of living by claiming that e 12 cent meal suffices for a day's work.

"It is a hard thing to say in Boston," Dr. White stlowed, "but beens are notoriously hard to digest. They may be an excellent diet for one leading en eclive outdoor life. While oysters eaten raw are digestible, they are practically of no food value, for they are mostly water.



"Meat is cooked rere is digested by the stomach in two hours, that which is beif roasted takes three hours, and that which is wholly roast ed requires four hours to digest.

"Dyspepsia is called the American disease. Surely it is not due to the fact that we have not good food, but is rather due to our bad babits."

A 12 cent breakfast is all the nourishment Prof. Woods of 23 Inman street, Cambridge, who is 66 years old, requires to do a day's work consisting of 12 hours reading and study and e 10 or 15 mlio walk.

Prof. Woods believes that eventually he will he oble to go two days on one meal.

"Harem Skirt" Split Latest Drink

CLEVELAND, O.—J. L. Saunders, who claims to be a farm about three miles south of Uhrichsville, has some new ideas in the line of frepped drinks and frozen delistics which he is anxious to give to the world. Armed with a blank contract and about six months' growth of whiskers, he came to Cloveland, anxious to exploit some of his ideas. He weodered about the city until he bumped into a drug store on the public square.

"Are you the owner of this establishment?" asked the prospective purveyor of ideas, eyeing the white-coated soda clerk.

"I'm not exactly the owner," answered the spirit presiding over the bottles and glasses, "but if you want to make an offer for the place, I might listen to you."

"Well," said Saunders, "I've an idea for you fellors. I've been reading that the college boys and the society girls are in need of fancy drinks. I ain't had much to do but my chores all winter and I have been staying up as late as nine o'clock during the winter high-sounding titles. Some of 'em would inspire the young with grand ideas.

"Now, take 'The White Man's Hope.' Wouldn't that sound fctchin' on a glass of ice cream soda? You could add the whites of a couple of eggs and give a guaranty that if the college boys drank enough of 'em they could go out and lick Jack Johnson."

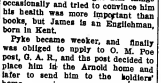
"That's a good idea," remarked the clerk.

"But," continued Saunders, "I got a better one. They's a lot of suffregists in town. Why not put a sign in the window, 'Vote for Women Frappe?' That'd bring 'em, I reckon.

"But, listen to what I been figuring out for the college boys and the society girls—'Rah-reh Fudge Served With Three Cheers and Tiger.'"

"That's enough," said the fat boy behind the counter. "If we start in with ideas we'd have to build an eddition to the store, and the squmz is too smell as it is."

First Roof Garden for Shopgirls



NEW YORK.—The first roof garden in this country to be built expressly for the use of women employees of a department store was opened recently in this city by a firm employing nearly 2,000 woman and girls. Any one curious to know how the toof garden and its rescde tinted rest room walled with glass are received by women employees should talk with one of the girls. Not that the women are any less enthusiastic, but their adjectives are not so picturesque.

After the place was opened steps had to be taken to stop the girls from bolting their luncheon. In order to spend 40 of the allotted 45 minutes lunch time on the roof. As a precaution against an epidemic of indigestion the manager of the lunchroom had to make a rule that a safe number of minutes should be spent on the consumption of sandwiches, cream cakes and other things usually included in girls' luncheons. One reason for the extra enthusiasm of the younger girls, whose duties keep them on the run most of the time, is that they have three chances at the roof garden to one chance enjoyed by older employees, each of them having 30 minutes rest time in the forenoon and egain in the afternoon. Therefore at any time from 10 to 12 a. m and from 2 to 5 p. m. a relay of girls will be found in the roof garden and during the lunch hours, extending from 11 to 2:30, a relay is certain to be sharing the piece with older women.

"It is good," said a manager, "to see the pink tings on the girls' cheeks when they come in. We elow them to play certain games and to dance all they want to on the roof."

Love of Books Starves Cobbler

DETHOIT, MICH.—"Spark" is his name. He is only a little yaller dog. His fcals pretty bad, for his master has left him forevrr. "Spark" has been the sole companion of James Pyke, cobbler, since his wife died, four years ago, but times became so in firm that he was taken to the Arnold home and "Spark" left behind.

When Mrs. Pyke was alive the couple lived in a cottage on Myrtle, near Twelfth street, and with the money Pyke earned mending old shoes and his pension, they had the home nearly paid for. Then Mrs. Pyke died.

It was Pyke's love for books that led to the loss of his home. Agents knew when his pension came, and would come up to the little shop in Twelfth street to display their goods. James could not resist, and bought—and bought. Payments lapsed, and at last the house was lost. For about three years Pyke lived in the shop and its one room, four by six feet, crowded with encyclopedias and "Sparks" his only companion. Pyke is 75 and grew too occupied in reading to do much work. All his pension money went to pay for books—a little literary revel. He ate less and less. A bit of bread and a little milk sustained him for a day. Neighbors brought him things occasionally and tried to convince him his health was more important than books, but James is an Englishman, born in Kent.

Pyke became weaker, and finally was obliged to apply to O. M. Poe post, G. A. R., and the post decided to place Pyke in the Arnold home and later to send him to the soldiers' home.

James said he wanted to remain where he was. "I can't leave 'Sparks' and my books," he said, petting the dog.

After he had been taken awey, the little dog sat mournfully on the doorstep, refusing to be coaxed away.

WHO'S WHO—AND WHY

"TRUST BUSTER" IN SENATE

W. S. Kenyon, known as e "trust buster" when he was assistant to the attorney general of the United States, was elected United Stetes senetor to fill the vacancy ceused by the death of the lete J. P. Dolliver.

Mr. Kenyon will be one of the youngest members of the senate. He was born in Elyria, O., June 10, 1869. His father was a Congregetional ministeter. He was educated at Grinnell, and leter was greduated from the law department of the University of Iowa.

His public career started almost immediately with his election, soon after greduation, as public prosecutor of Webster county, e position he held for two terms. He was elected circuit judge when he was herely 30 years old, but left the bench after one year, declering that it was too quiet and sedate. Hs became the general counsel for the Illinois Central railroad, and though his officisl duties required his presence in Chicago he kept his established residence in Fort Dodge, where he practiced law with Senator Dolliver.

Kenyon was the original "trust-buster" under the Teft administration. He has bed much the same position under this administration that wes occupied by Wade Ellis when Roosevelt was president.

HEADS MOTHERS' CONGRESS

Mrs. Frederic Schoff, now completing her ninth yeer of leadership as president of the National Congress of Mothers, is a philanthropist who gives freely, not only of her means but herself to the cause of child welfere. Having dsmpiled the lews of every state in the union concerning dependent and delinquent children, and having led the several movements to establish courts for children in Pennsylvanie, Alabume, Idaho and Connecticut, she is a recognized authority the world over. She received the unique honor of an invitation to eddress the Australian parliament on the subject, and is the only woman who has ever been thus honored. The amount and hor daily work is tremendous, and she could not have persevered through these years of sereies were it not for her superb physique and a certain sustaining spiritual force. Mrs. Scoff's versatility is as astonishing as her accumulation of facts. Neither pessimist nor optimist, she looks upon existing conditions with unbiased eyes, and her vision is ever clear as to formative, preventive and corrective policies. As an impressive public speaker Mrs. Schoff is mercciless, barbs an exhaustive knowledge of her subject and the power to clothe her thoughts in clear, forcible and felicitous phrasing. She also has a delightful voice which is easily understood in the largest assembly.

HETTY GREEN TO OWN BANK

Mrs. Hetty Green, with the assistance of her son, Colonel E. H. R. Green, has decided to have her fortune managed through a $10,000,000 private bank with branches in other states, and will retire from all active participation in her financial affairs. Her realty and financial interests are now in the hands of the son she sent into Texas as a youth and educated along the lines of sound, business common sense.

Colonel Green pictures his mother as grossly misrepresented in the past. Although she conducts her business on careful and conservetive lines, he says she has made it an invariable rule to reinvest her profits in the territory from which they were drawn for the upbuilding of that territory. "Her argument has been," he explained, "that every community is entitled to the benefits of its own property.

"Since my mother began her business career she has never asked more than 6 per cent for her money. The bulk of her loans have been made at considerably lower rates. You may set it down that the ratio of income diminishes as the size of the estate grows. Because of this etitude and widely known liberality to her customers in past times my mother has been nble to skim the cream of the borrowers."

"ASSISTANT" RULER TO RETIRE

Forty years in one position is not a bad record, but this is what has been accomplished by Lord Knollys, the king's private secretary, whose retirement is now imminent. He originally intended to give up his erduous duties at the death of the late King, and it was well understood that he merely stayed on in order to "train in" Sir Arthur Bigge, upon whose shoulders the responsibilitize of the royal secretaryship will now fall.

Such a post requires not only hard work, but a keen knowledge of the world, combined with tact, judgment, decision and memory. It has been said of Lord Knollys that no one could hope to undertake his task with a tithe of the success which now attaches to it.

The royal correspondence alone would frighten the average man. About 600 letters a day are addressed to the king, and the majority of these are attended to by the secretaries.

No correspondence is more varied than that received by the king. There are letters from his relatives, a daily letter from the prime minister when parliament is sitting, letters from cranks, faddists, inventors; begging letters and a never-ending stream from madmen.

NATIONAL CAPITAL AFFAIRS

Wise Pages of the Upper House

WASHINGTON. — Some person, delving from the hottom of the well of truth, has said that no man is a hero to his valet. The philosophy of the observation might have been greatly strengthening if the sage had thought to add that no United Stetes senetor is any great chekes to a senate page.

There is a popular impression that the senate pages are studious youth with bulging foreheads, learned in the constitution and deep in the mysteries of senate precedents.

Theee wrong impressions ebout the bich constitutional atmosphere that surrounds a senate page come naturelly enough from the superficial observetion of visitors to the gallery. Looking down from there it is easy to suppose thet when a senator cleps his hands and e page hurries noiselessly to his side and inclines e respectful ear, thet the fortunate youth is receiving informetion of the highest import. Doubtless he will write it down in his private diary before he sleeps thet night, and in later yeers will publish it in his memoirs where eager millone will read it. Also doubtless he won't, for the chences are the distinguished senator merely requested the page to tell the bothereome constituent who has been waiting out in the merble room for the lest hour, to welt enother hour by which time the distinguished senator will have slipped out another door and gone to lunch.

If the senate page should teke a notion to disclose the secrets of his prison house he could a tele untold that would make the muckraking magazines look like periodicals subsidized by Wall street.

Even the femilier designetions by which pegee know their masters would meke mighty good copy. Any senator scmewhet known for his querulouness invariably is referred to by the fraternity as "Grandma," which is hardly parliamentary even in the clerkly room.

"Store" Revelation to New Solon

THERE is e nioteken idea ever present in the mind of e brand-new legisletor when he errives at Washington that all his stationery and stationery supplies will be furnished free.

Herdly has he been shown through the capitol by some older colleague than he becomes acquainted with the fact that down in the bessement of the big grey building there is one of the most complete stationery storqs in the United Stetes. He is astonished et the cheapness of everything and yeers yet at the fact that there he can buy a thousand sheets of the finest linen paper, bearing at the top in deep old English engraved letering the inscription, "House of Representatives, United States, Washington," for $2.60. He can get a high grade, fine finished cotton paper for $1.88 per thousand, engraving included, and another grade with handsome lithograph prescription for $1.

Later the congreesmen is told the reason for the, end elong with that informetion it is explained to him thet his stationery allowance will be $125.

The reason for the cheapness of everything in capitol stationery headquetrers is that the stationery store makes not a shedow of profit.

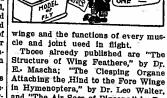
Another cause for remerk in the stationery room in the capitol is been the tremendous supply of socket-stationery and pretty little desk ornements and implements—an endless erray of pretty little knickknacks, which a mere woman would ecorn to use as an embellishment of an office desk.

The affeble clerkc of the stationery room will explein that this fancy goods department ie an outgrowth of the habit of the Americen legisletor to elect his whole family to office elong with himself.

Snobbery at the Naval Academy

CAPT. JOHN M. BOWYER, U. S. N., superintendent of the naval academy at Annapolis, at the direction of the secretary of war hes apologized to Prof. Henry A. Beers of Yele university and Miss Katherine Beers, his deughter, for the recent incident at Annepolis in which on ettempt wes mede to exclude Miss Beers from social functions because she wee earning her own living.

According to the investigation made by the navy department, Miss Beers was directed by a commandant to the wife of Lieut. Commander William T. Tarrant, who is engineer officer of the battleship Michigan of the Atlantic fleet. She was invited to one of the navel academy hops several weeks ago by a midshipmen whose name has not been disclosed by the department. She attended the dence and shortly afterword left Annapolis for her home in New Haven. At the time of her departure she knew nothing of the incident in which she figured.



One of the officers on duty at Annapolis suggested to the midshipmen, on the supposition that Miss Beers was a domestic, that she should not have been invited by the midshipmen.

The midshipman, according to the report received at the department, replied that he disagreed personally with the view of his superiors at the academy. There was, however, nothing that he could do under the circumetances. The inquiry developed that Captain Bowyer was responsible for the suggestion that Miss Beers was not e desirable guest at academy social events.

Forty Models to Assist Aviators

THE Smithsonian Institution has received and soon will publish the fifth paper in a series dealing with the investigations on the flying qualities of various insects and birds. These investigations, which were formerly made by Secretary Langley, now deceased, with the hope that they would yield information useful to engineers and others interested in the problem of aviation, have been carried out under the direction of Professor Alexander von Lendenfeld of Prague university for ten years.

Professor von Lendenfeld believes that of all forms of insects, and indeed, of all flying animals, the blowfly furnishes the most promising pattern for a flying machine, and that a working model should be built according to the pattern and experimented with.

The paper now in the hands of the printer was prepared by Dr. Wolfgang Ritter and describes the flying apparatus of the blowfly. The author, with minutehese characteristic of German scientific discusses the anatomy of the structure and articulation of the wings and the functions of every muscle and joint used in flight.

Three articles published are "The Structure of Wing Feathers," by Dr. E. Maschs; "The Clesping Organs Attaching the Hind to the Fore Wings in Hymenoptera," by Dr. Leo Walter, and "The Air Sees of Pigeons," by Dr. Bruno Ritter.

Dr. Ritter's paper is profusely illustrated with pictures showing the different experiments he made with the blowfly.

Another paper will be added soon to the Smithsonian miscellaneous collections, a "Bibliography of the Scientific Writings of R. H. C. Stearns," by Miss Mary R. Stearns. Accompanying it is a biographical sketch of Dr. William H. Dall.

SUNBEAM, ——— MINN.

A SCENTLESS NATION.

The department of agriculture has recently called attention to the backwardness of this country as a producer of the particular kind of crops that go to the making of perfumes, says the Washington Post. Swift in the development of other industries, we have been extremely neglectful of our opportunities in this particular; since, it is claimed, we can raise in one part of the United States or another all of the plants needful for an innumerable variety of sweet odors, from ylang-ylang to attar or rose. This information doubtless is intended to serve as a timely spur to our industrial and commercial lethargy. And, yet the news fails to carry with it any great sense of shame. It is difficult to assign the reason why the possibilities thus pointed out produce little or no enthusiasm, yet such is the case. It must be because the making of perfumes is not pre-eminently an indication of national vigor or greatness. Certain it is that their universal use by a people is not a sign of virility. Musk and effeminate nations have been given proverbially to the use of vaseenes and ointments, whereas soap and civilization have been inseparably conjoined. So long as we lead in soap, it matters little who manufactures the aromatics. A good bath is better than much volatile oils, while civet and musk may cover a multitude of sins, especially those of omission.

The savings bank figures of the Comptroller of the Currency are impressive in their aggregate; they are ices flattering to national thrift and prosperity when analyzed than is easily assumed from a casual glance at their totals, says the Philadelphia Review. On the other hand, the comptroller's figures relate only to the institutions that bear the name of savings banks, while there are several other classes of institutions that do the same sort of business, and the savings of the people are far greater than the deposits reported by the savings banks alone. The comptroller reports an increase in the past fiscal year of 311,000 in the number of depositors, and aggregate deposits of something over $4,000,000,000, an increase of rather more than $200,000,000 during the year. The average deposit per capita increased during the year from $420 to $445, but 3 per cent. interest on the sum due depositors a year ago would account for half of this gain; the small remainder is the excess of deposits over withdrawals. Roughly speaking, the depositors gain about 3 per cent. a year interest and 3 per cent. by deposits in excess of the sums taken out. In 10 years the number of depositors has increased about 50 per cent., and the average deposit has increased but little more than 10 per cent., or 1 per cent. a year.

The brand of "S" figures in an extraordinary act passed by our parliament in 1547. Any able-bodied man or woman found loitering and not seeking work for the space of three days could be seized and brought before two justices of the peace, who, upon confession or on the proof of two witnesses, "shall immediately cause the said laborer to be marked with a hot iron in the breast, the mark of "V" and adjudge the said person living so idly to the presentor, to be his slave for two years. The said slave shall be made to work by beating, chaining or otherwise," says the London Chronicle. If convicted of running away during this period, the justices could cause him to be branded on the forehead or the cheek with the letter "S" and then adjudged to his master as a slave forever. For running away a second time the penalty was death.

It would be futile to deny the gravity of the landslides along the Culebra cut. Utterly stupid, on the other hand, it would be to overrate their importance. The descent of five hundred and fifty thousand cubic yards of loose earth recently was an impressive disaster, but the current issue of the Canal Record states that this slide, added to those which have occurred since last July, does not exceed the total of 6,104,000 cubic yards allowed for slides in the central division in the revised estimates made at that time, nor will the added excavation increase the estimate of cost of excavation in the central division made in October, 1908.

Automobile journals are now looking for a $500 four-cylinder car of twenty or twenty-five horse-power—all this to come in 1910. A car of this character now costs about a thousand dollars. By that time, automobile dealers believe, there will be a million and a half machines in use, and people who cross the street will have their teeth set on edge.

Rebel Leader Presents Proposition at First Conference With Judge Carbajal, Mexico's Envoy, Following Demands Made by Fellow Officers.

El Paso, Tex.—A statement signed by Francisco I. Madero, Jr., appealing to President Diaz to make public the assurances given privately that he intended to resign and was formally presented to Judge Carbajal, the Mexican envoy, by the peace commissioners of the revolutionists.

After offering his own resignation as president of the provision government of the republic, Senor Madero, Jr., suggested that both President Diaz and Vice-President Corral resign and that Senor de la Barra, the minister of foreign relations, become president ad interim until e general election shall have been held.

The statement, couched in most courteous Spanish phrases, informs President Diaz that there is no other way out of the present difficulty and that e word from him will bring peace in a few days.

Senor Madero in his statement calls upon President Diaz particularly to make known to the people of Mexico his "irrevocable reason to retire from power as soon as peace is established in the country." Madero declares this statement was made by Diaz to "go-betweens" interested in restoring peace.

The Madero statement was presented by the rebel commissioners at the negotiations here after a heated discussion among the revolutionist leaders.

Some of them had declared that it was absolutely essential that President Diaz make public announcement of his intention to resign in order to bring about complete tranquility. Peace, they said, would not follow an agreement backed up only by private assurances, which hardly could be transmitted to militant leaders in the south and central parts of the republic.

Saves Tunnel Bill in Colorado Legislature From Defeat Amidst Wildest Excitement.

Denver, Colo.—Despite protests, which were ignored by Speaker McLachlan, the house by a vote of 33 to 30, concurred in the senate amendments to the Moffat tunnel bill, and then passed the measure by a vote of 35 to 27.

The bill, which provides for construction by the state of a tunnel through the main range of the Rocky mountains, which is to be leased to the Denver, Northwestern & Pacific railroad (Moffat road), was amended in the senate so that the project must be submitted to a referendum vote at the next regular election two years hence.

RETURN NEW BILLS

M'NAMARAS INDICTED TWENTY-ONE TIMES.

McManigal Main Witness Against Brothers—Crowd Follows Lawyer Moyns of Jurymen.

Los Angeles, Cal.—The grand jury has found 21 new indictments against James B. and John J. McNamara and Ortie E. McManigal, the alleged dynamite conspirators.

Nineteen of the indictments, it is understood, are against the McNamaras alone, and charge them with murder in connection with the blowing up of the Los Angeles Times plant on October 1, and the consequent deaths of 21 men.

The other two are said to be against McManigal as principal and the McNamara brothers as accessories in the Llewellyn iron works explosion, Christmas day, in which no one was killed.

McManigal was the principal witness heard by the grand jurors, about whose movements and meeting place a veil of secrecy was thrown.

When the jurryman assembled they were told to go quietly, one by one, so as not to attract attention, to the jury room of Judge Willis' court, in the hall of justice, next to the court hall, in the regular grand jury room dummy jurymen were quartered, while bailiffs mounted guard at the door. Then witnesses were directed to Judge Willis' courtroom.

When McManigal was summoned he was taken from his cell and thence escorted over the bridge leading from the prison into the hall of justice and the jury room. He was examined for more than two hours. Immediately afterward the grand jury adjourned.

The grand jury heard several witnesses besides McManigal. Among them were employes and officials of the Llewellyn iron works and Paul Stupenich, proprietor of a hotel at Sausalito, Cal., which the alleged dynamiter known as J. B. Bryce visited before the wrecking of the newspaper plant.

Another witness was Douglas Burrows, partner of Howard Baxter in the ownership of the Seaside Pastime, which, according to the detectives, was used to transport the dynamite purchased by the alleged conspirators.

FLAYS DYNAMITERS

ROOSEVELT DENOUNCES BOMB PLOTTERS IN LOS ANGELES—STANDED AS CRIMINALS.

DEFENDS DETECTIVE BURNS

Says Fact of Man Being Union Laborer is No Excuse for Attack on the Prosecution—Mayor and Officials Receive Threats.

New York.—In the course of a signed article in the forthcoming Outlook dealing with the Los Angeles Times dynamiting, under the title, "Murder Is Murder," Col. Theodore Roosevelt says:

"There is one feature of the developments as regards the arrest of certain alleged labor men in connection with the dynamite outrage perpetrated against the Los Angeles Times to which especial attention should be called.

"If the explosion was not an accident, but the deliberate act of any man or men, it was an outrage of absolutely iniquity, for it was one of these crimes in which the murderer, in order to gratify his spite against an individual, not merely wrecked that individual's property, but with callous indifference takes the lives of scores of innocent people as an incident to the achievement of his sinister and criminal purpose.

"The men responsible for dynamiting the Los Angeles Times building are responsible not only for the wreck of the newspaper offices, but for the loss of many lives.

"The arrest was made in consequence of testimony secured by Mr. Burns, who has been Mr. Hearst's right-hand man in bringing to justice grafters who violated the law of the United States from Oregon and grafters who violated the laws of California in San Francisco. He has proceeded with impartial severity against the most influential politicians and the richest business men.

"It happens that the men whom he has now arrested are members of a labor organization, just as men whom he formerly arrested were members of the Republican or Democratic parties or of great and wealthy corporations.

"It would have been a wicked thing in the former cases with which Mr. Burns had to do, for leading Republicans or Democrats to combine to shield him and support him or to excused merely because the accused belonged to their political parties; it would have been a wicked thing for big capitalists and big business men to make common cause with the capitalists against whom he proceeded, merely because they were capitalists.

"In exactly the same spirit it state the conviction of The Outlook is no pressing its hearty reprobation of the conduct of those labor leaders, who, without waiting to know anything of the facts of the case, have at once tried basely to make capital out of the alleged dynamiters whom Mr. Burns has now arrested, and who talk about the arrest as a part of a conspiracy against labor unions.

"No worse service can be rendered by labor union leaders to the cause of unionism than that which they render when they seek to identify the cause of unionism with the cause of any man guilty of a murderous attack of this nature.

"There is no idea whether the men arrested on Mr. Burns' statements are or are not guilty; the labor leaders in question have no idea whether or not they are.

"They are entitled to an absolutely fair trial. If they fail to secure and provide counsel for themselves, then it would be entirely proper for any body of men to provide them the requisite funds, simply as an incident to securing them a fair trial. But it is grossly improper to try to create a public opinion in favor of the arrested men simply because the crime of which they are accused is committed against a capitalist or a corporation, and because the men are charged with committing it are members of a labor union."

BROWNE INDICTMENT STANDS

Motion to Quash in Bribery Case Overruled by Judge Creighton in Circuit Court at Springfield.

Springfield.—The motion to quash the indictments in the cases of Representative Lee O'Neil Browne of Ottawa, Representative Robert E. Wilson of Chicago; Louis D. Hirshheimer of Pittsfield, member of the state board of equalization, and Frank J. Traut of Beardstown, in the legislative bribery probe, was overruled by Judge Creighton in the Sangamon circuit court. The four men are indicted on the charge of conspiracy to bribe in connection with a fund raised among the fishermen along the Illinois river to defeat legislation for the regulation of fishing.

Wisconsin Marit Law Valid.

Madison.—The state supreme court upheld the constitutionality of the state civil service law, which has been attacked by the secretary of state and attorney general as a violation of both the state and national constitutions.

O. K.'S LORIMER PROBE

SENATE COMMITTEE VOTES MONEY FOR AN INQUIRY.

La Follette's Resolution Calling For New Investigation Will Come Up For Action Before Senate.

Washington.—The committee of audit and control of the contingent expenses of the senate decided to report back to the senate the La Follette resolution for the reopening of the Lorimer case with a statement that the contingent fund of the senate is sufficient to defray the expenses of any investigation the senate may order.

But the committee specifically announced that it had not passed upon the merits of the case, and did not feel that it had a right to do so.

In the report which will be submitted to the senate the five members of the committee declare that their action in reporting the La Follette measure to the senate has nothing to do with its merits. The committee takes the position that its only duty lies in providing the funds for an investigation, should the senate decide that there ought to be a new inquiry. Whether there should be such an inquiry, and if so, whether it should be made by the standing committee on privileges and elections or by a special committee, are problems which the committee on contingent expenses declares it has no authority to answer.

Springfield, Ill.—What Chairman Haim described as the last public hearing of the bribery committee, unless Attorney Healy should produce more witnesses, was held here. The committee spent twenty minutes interrogating C. A. Taylor and W. T. Cable, both of Harrisburg, Ill., but obtained no evidence of value from either. Both denied any knowledge of the use of money in connection with Lorimer's election, but Taylor testified he had heard that Representative Hay might get a federal appointment by voting for Lorimer.

DEFENDS DOLLAR DIPLOMACY

Assistant Secretary of State Wilson Declares Amplo Armament is Best Safeguard for Peace.

Baltimore, Md.—A defense of "dollar diplomacy," as a policy which by creating prosperity, meant ultimately the "substitution of dollars for bullets" was made before the third national peace congress by Huntington Wilson, assistant secretary of state.

He declared that ample armement was the best safeguard of pence, and said that such a state of prosperity as peso could bs accomplished without burdening the taxpayers.

"The nation which can do the most to secure international peece," he asserted, "must be the nation whh the highest ideals, plus the greatest military efficiency. War springs from the human heart, not from the arsenal, and the best method rather than that of arches of diplomatic engagements is still the only ultimate sure shode of peace.

"Another precticnl mode of pursuing the ideal of world peece is the open meeting of minds which is called 'dollar diplomecy.' Today international commerce is everywbere on impressive illustration of diplomecy. 'Dollar diplomecy' reelly meens the use of the capital of the country in the foreign field in a manner calculated to enbnnce fixed netionnl policies. It meens the substitution of dollars for bullets. It meens the creation of a prosperity which will be preferred to predetory strife. It meens that prosperity meens contentment and contentment means re pose."

Wilson declared his belief that President Taft's arbitration treaty with Great Britain would ultimately be ratified by both nations.

High compliment to President Taft for proposing his Anglo-American arbitration treaty was paid by Representative Bartholdi (Rep. Mo.), a member of the inter-parliamentary peace union. He expressed the hope that the senate would act immediately in ratifying the Anglo-American treaty.

"If arbitration is to be made possible," he said, "it must in each case be resorted to without much delay, that is, before the popular passion is aroused."

Fish Fund Cases Will Go Over.

Springfield.—The cases of Lee O'Neil Browne, Robert E. Wilson, Louis D. Hirshheimer and Frank J. Traut, charged with conspiracy to bribe in the fish fund legislative probe will go over until the next term of the Sangamon circuit court. Judge Creighton asked for the number of the cases, and this is held to indicate that he will not decide the motion to quash the indictment for some time.

WHY YES, SHE GOT THE NOTE

Beautiful Rosea Appreciated, but There Was a Fly in the Ointment.

A young man whose gallantry is in excess of his means sought to remedy this defect and to save the expense of the money required for the purchase of flowers for his lady fair by arranging with a gardener to let him have a bouquet from time to time, in return for his cast-off clothes. So it happened that one day he received a bunch of beautiful roses, which he at once dispatched to her house. In sure anticipation of a friendly welcome he called on the young woman that evening. He got a frosty reception.

"Did—er—did you get my flowers today?" he was finally forced to ask.

"Yes, and the note that went with them."

"Note? Why, did I send a note?"

"You did. A disgraceful note, scrawled with a blue pencil, on dirty paper. Here it is. I don't understand it, and I don't think you are very humorous."

The note read as follows:

"Here's your flowers, but you owe me a pair of pants for 'em."—Cleveland Plain Dealer.

Now What Did She Mean?

At a recent wedding a baby had shrieked without intermission to the great annoyance of the guests, etc. As the bridal party was leaving the church a slight delay occurred. One of the guests seized the opportunity to say to the first bridesmaid:

"What a nuisance babies are at a wedding!"

"Yes, indeed!" answered the bridesmaid, angrily. "When I send out invitations for my wedding I shall have printed in the corner, 'No babies expected.'"—Judge.

Next!

There were a couple of deedy fish flies in the Colonial lobby. We didn't have time to get their names, addresses and photographs, but we listened long enough to hear the conversation. The poignant part thereof was as follows:

"How much did your fish weigh?"

"I didn't have no hay scales with me, you mut. But when I pulled him out it towered the lake four inches."

"Some fish," commented the other, without the quiver of an eyelash.

Reminds me of some good sport I had duck hunting last fall. I fired at a flock of ducks and gathered up four quarts of toes."—Cleveland Plain Dealer.

The Lesser Evil.

Greshine college in 1719 was the scene of a famous serio-comic duel between two celebrated doctors, Doctor Mead and Doctor Woodward, both of whom were lecturers at the college. While walking down Bishopsgate street one morning they quarreled over some medical question and adjourned to the square of the college to fight it out with swords. Woodward fell, wounded in several places, whereupon Mead magnanimously said, "Take thy life." "Anything but your physic," blazed back the chagrined Woodward as he drew his sword.—London Chronicle.

FOOD IN SERMONS

Feed the Dominie Right and the Sermons Are Brilliant.

A conscientious, hard-working and successful clergyman writes: "I am glad to hear testimony to the pleasure and increased measure of efficiency and health that have come to me from adopting Grape-Nuts food as one of my articles of diet.

"For several years I was much distressed during the early part of each day by indigestion. My breakfast seemed to turn sour and failed to digest. After dinner the headache and other symptoms following the heavy fast would wear away, only to return, however, next morning.

"Having heard of Grape-Nuts food, I finally concluded to give it a trial. I made my breakfasts of Grape-Nuts with cream, toast and Postum. The result was surprising in improved health and total absence of the distress that had, for so long a time, followed the morning meal.

"My digestion became once more satisfactory, the headaches ceased, and the old feeling of energy returned. Since that time I have always had Grape-Nuts food on my breakfast table.

"I was delighted to find also, that whereas before I began to use Grape-Nuts food I was quite nervous and became easily wearied in the work of preparing sermons and in study, a marked improvement in this respect resulted from the change in my diet.

"I am convinced that Grape-Nuts food produced this result and helped me to a sturdy condition of mental and physical strength.

"I have known of several persons who were forced to withdraw as I was, and who have been helped as I have been, by the use of Grape-Nuts food, on my recommendation." Name given by Postum Company, Battle Creek, Mich.

The Outwitting of Prunella

By NELLIE CRAVEY GILLMORE

I consumed many perplexing hours over a circumspect, yet sufficiently emphatic reply to Prunelle's recent surprising communication. Here is what she wrote:

"Dear Dick—Our engagement is at an end. Something awful has happened—something that makes it impossible for me ever to marry you.

"Do not, I pray you, attempt to see me; I could not endure it, not now.

"Under separate cover I am mailing to you our betrothal ring, together with the brooch, watch and bracelet you sent me on my last three birthdays. Please do likewise in regard to different trifles I have given you. I do not care for them intrinsically, but under the circumstances it is best that this should be done.

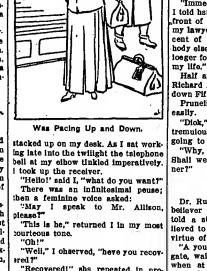
"I am starting for Colorado Thursday, where I shall make my home with the Cahills as governess and companion to their children.

"Do not try to intercept me. This is final, and though it breaks my heart, there is no other way but to sign myself,

Farewell forever,

"Prunella."

The letter had left me bewildered, dumfounded, dazed. It was a long time before I could rake my faculties together, even to think. Had Prunelle, in some miraculous fashion peculiar to females, dragged forth some affair out of the past? Had my latest escapade with a chorus girl been erroneously reported on the evening Dagger? Had some one of my numerous rivals coaxed to her that a distant uncle of mine had died of consumptive? After having cudgeled my ingenuity exhaustively, I produced the following:



"My Dear Girl—Yours to hand and contents noted. I am shocked, startled beyond expression. One might suppose a mere toe deep, too teeder, too genuine to be thus lightly severed. It is my undoubted privilege to request an explanation; and failing in that, to demand one.

"If your will is good enough to indicate the hour, I shall take pleasure in calling at your home. Don't refuse, for draped upon it, I shall find a way of seeing you face to face and hearing the worst.

As ever,

"Dick."

This dispatched, I gave my attention to the long-neglected pile of briefs

Was Pacing Up and Down.

stacked up on my desk. As I sat working late into the twilight the telephone bell at my elbow tinkled imperatively. I took up the receiver.

"Hello!" said I, "what do you want?"

There was an infinitesimal pause; then a feminine voice asked:

"May I speak to Mr. Allison, please?"

"This is he," returned I in my most courteous tone.

"Oh!"

"Well," I observed, "have you recovered?"

"Recovered!" she repeated in profound astonishment. "I don't understand you."

"That letter," I reminded, "wasn't it the result of an hallucination of some sort?"

"Certainly not!" she flung back the words with such force that the telephone wires jangled.

I was quaking inwardly, but determined to bluff it out.

"Oh, come, now, Prunella—don't be foolish! What do you speak out. If there's anything—"

"There is," she cut in sharply, "and here is the truth: I was coming up town on a Broadway car the other day. Your father occupied the seat in front of me; I was talking to another man. His said: 'Too bad about Underwood's stocking every one in that wire deal, wasn't it? Leave his family practically penniless. Dick's engaged to one of the girls I believe, but of course it'll all have to be off now.'

I hit my lips till the blood showed through in purple prints.

"Prunella!" My voice sounded hoarse and angry over the wire.

"Yes?" here came back in some trepidation.

"Is that all?"

"Isn't it enough?"

"No," I thundered, "it's not! Where are you?"

"I'm down town."

"Where?" I reiterated sternly.

"At the Grand Central station. My train leaves in—"

I banged the receiver on the hook, grebbed my hat and flew down stairs. Elevators were too slow for my present frame of mind.

My runabout stood at the curbing. I sprang in and shot frantically through the scattering procession of vehicles, arriving at my destination in eight minutes.

I went at once to the ladies' waiting room. Prunelle was not there. Full of alarm I hurried out into the corridor. Less than ten feet away a girl, slim and graceful in a dark traveling suit, was pacing up and down.

"Prunella!"

She set down weakly on a bench near me, her face scarlet.

"Dick," she said reproachfully, "you shouldn't have done this; you shouldn't, indeed!"

I set down beside her and forced her to look into my eyes.

"Tell me now," I said, "why you are trying to run away from me in this fashion."

"I am not running away at all. I told you I was—"

"But you said Thursday. Today is only—"

"I was afraid—I knew you would try to see me, Dick. And I was determined that—that—"

I looked at her with severe reproach.

"You certainly couldn't have loved me very much," I letterrupted; staring ahead, "if you were willing to give me up like this."

"You have it reversed. I love you too much to stand in the way of your interests."

I looked at her curiously a second; then I burst into downright laughter.

"You are a quixotic little idiot, Prunelle."

"I'm nothing of the sort," she contradicted, with pink cheeks. "I'm just simply proud, that's all."

"Pride be—deshed. Come out of this stuffy place, anyhow."

"But—but you don't understand, Dick. I must wait here till my train is announced. I've already accepted this position and bought my ticket—"

"I'll take charge of that," I interposed, holding out my hand. When she gave it to me, I quite deliberately lifted it up and tore it in two.

"Good gracious!" exclaimed Prunelle. "I paid—"

"My ruschout is waiting outside. We'll take a spin out to the park. There's a fine new church just finished on that way. The minister lives next door; he is an old chum of mine—nice fellow. If you need a fresh pair of gloves or a hook and eye or—or anything—" I stole a twinkling glance at her, "oh, I mean to loan you the money if you do!"

Quite unresistingly, she found herself walking by my side, end out into the street; and the next thing, we were skimming dizzily over the gleaming asphalt.

"Immediately after the ceremony, I told her, as we slid to a standstill in front of the rectory, "I shall drive to my lawyers' and make over every red cent of the blessed money to somebody else. I'll not be responsible a day longer for such a menacing element in my life."

Half an hour later, as Mr. and Mrs. Richard Allison, we were whirling down Fifth avenue.

Prunella glanced at me a trifle uneasily.

"Dick," she questioned, in a little tremulous voice, "who is it you are going to settle—"

"Why, on you, of course, my dear. Shall we go to the Waldorf for dinner?"

Patience.

Dr. Russell H. Conwell is a great believer in patience and he recently told a story indicating what he believed to be an example of making a virtue of patience.

"A young man was standing at the gate, waiting for his sweetheart, and when at last she appeared he remarked kindly, 'What a time you have kept me waiting!'

"'Oh, dear me, how fussy you are,' she observed. 'Why, I didn't promise to meet you till a quarter of eight, and it's only two minutes after eight now.'

"'Ah, Mary, dear,' replied the young man, 'but you have made a slight mistake in the day. You were to have been here at a quarter of eight last evening. I have been waiting ever since.'"—Philadelphia Times.

The Last Laugh.

The frequent and unsuccessful candidacy of certain men in this town for public office reminded George Scotty Dore of a story of his old friend Hogan.

"Hogan was raffling a clock," said Mr. Dore. "He was fairly successful in disposing of tickets in the shop when he worked, but he ran up against trouble when he canvassed his neighbors.

"Dropping in at his neighbor's house he tried to sell a ticket on the clock.

"'It's a fine time piece and it'll ink foine on yez when-not er mantle,' says Hogan, cajolingly.

"'O'wan, the old clock doesn't run,' replied the neighbor.

"'Well,' drawled Hogan, changing front completely, 'well, perhaps yez won't win it and then yez'll have the laugh on the fellow who does.'"

FARM AND HOME BELLS

AID IN PULLING OUT FRAMES

South African Bee-Keeper Finds Little Hook Made of Wire Convenient in Handling Bees.

I have a little tool that I have found very useful in removing frames from hives, especially when they are filled and there are a lot of bees in the way. I take a piece of telegraph wire or other stiff wire and bend a ring to fit over the first or second finger sufficiently close so it will not fall off (over the glove if used). Bend a hook to reach under the end of the frame. It may pass through the small staple, which secures it from slipping off. After hooking securely the frame is easily raised an inch or two, when it may be grasped by the hands and finger, and pulled out. The hook slips down between the side of the frames quite easily; and I find it a great help when I wish to handle bees quickly, more especially if there is a strong colony and a lot of propolis. One great convenience is, it may be left on the finger without in any way interfering with the operator while at work. Thus there is no danger of its getting lost, writes R. Rovieg of Caledon, Cape Colony, South Africa, in the Gleanings in Bee Culture.

This is an ideal spot for bees—perpetual summer with a constant supply of wild flowers; but I find it difficult to keep them working. They are inclined to knock off as soon as they have accumulated a small supply, and take things easy. There is an abundance of wild honey found in small swarms in all sorts of places—crevices in rocks, ant-beeps, and even white ants in the ground. They often shift from place, to place as the season changes—to the mountains in summer and to the valleys in winter.

GOOD EXCUSE FOR SPEEDING

Swarm of Bees Alight on Party in Automobile and Cause Arrest of the Chauffeur.

A swarm of bees is the latest excuse for record-breaking speed. A Massachusetts man was arrested for speeding and acknowledged that he had been going anywhere from 50 to 60 miles an hour, but said he had a good excuse; he was rambling along with his gal when a swarm of bees settled on the machine. One of the party started to brush them away and the rest were busy doing the same. The judge promptly discharged the case, saying that the man had a perfect right to protect all his by fleeing from his bees and that he could not be blamed for speeding.

COMBINING BEES AND FRUIT

Honey Gatherers Add Materially to Fertility of Berries and Fruits by Pollen Distribution.

(By D. W. OTIS.)

The ideal fruit farm, with its orchards of apples, cherries, pears, and plums, its shade trees and its gardens, is hardly complete without at least a few stands of bees. Properly managed they will not only add to the profits of their owner, but supply his table with an abundance of the most luxurious of all delicacies; and add materially to the fertility of his berries and fruits by the pollen-distributing habits that these insects possess.

This important feature, however, is generally omitted, or used in such a way as to result in very little profit and a great deal of trouble; and usually results in failure in the end; and this in face of the fact that it might easily be made one of the most profitable and fascinating of the fruit-grower's occupations.

Honey Is Purest Sweet.

Honey is the purest and the least harmful of sweets. The honey crop is mostly gain, for no flowers need necessarily be raised to sustain the bees. They aid in the fertilization of fruit trees and the smaller clovers.

Comb Honey Expensive.

Comb honey is more expensive than extracted honey because the comb is valuable for housing.

HARROW AND PLOW COMBINED

Attachment Devised That Permits Farmer to Do Double Work Without Any Extra Power.

(By R. G. WEATHERSTONE.)

Farmers have come to learn that the only way to prepare the soil is to let the harrow follow the plow as closely as possible. In common practice the good farmer plows only so much during the early part of the day as he can harrow before quitting time at night.

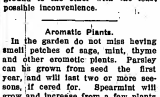
Manufacturers have devised an attachment to the plow which enables one to plow and harrow as he goes. The harrow is a rotary attachment and can be hitched on to any sulky or gang plow. The manufacturers claim that it takes no extra power to operate it, and it does the work of an extra team and men, thus saving operating expenses.

We are inclined to doubt somewhat, the statement that it requires no extra power, because it seems to us that the rotery herrow wide enough to cover two broad furrows dragged behind the plows would make quite a difference in the work of the team.



However, as many of these attachments are now being used, particularly in the west, it is quite evident that they are regarded with favor by progressive farmers.

EXCELLENT SHOE FOR PLOWS

Piece of Plank So Arranged That Implement May Be Easily Transferred Around the Farm.

This is easily made from a piece of plank two inches thick and about eight inches wide. It should be from 18 inches to two feet long.

Nail a strip on one side near the middle and bolt a hook on in a slanting position as shown in the drawing. The lower corner of the strip should be rounded so the plowshare will slip under it. Round the under side of the board so that it will slip over the ground easily and the plow may be transferred from one part of the ground to the other with the least possible inconvenience.

Aromatic Plants.

In the garden do not miss having small patches of sage, mint, thyme and other aromatic plants. Every one can be grown from seed the first year, and will last two or more seasons, if cared for. Spearmint will grow and increase from a few plants and will thrive in a damp place. Sage, if once established, will remain for years.

Peas will do well in almost any good garden soil.

Potatoes are one of the most nourishing of our garden crops.

Thorough preperation of the seed bed is a crop half raised.

Early potatoes are put in as soon as the ground will work in good shape.

Watermelons will thrive on the same cultivation than almost any other field crop.

In the spring when the soil is compact and moist about an inch of moisture will evaporate a week.

Rotation of crops has been grown successfully on the same ground year after year if it is kept well manured.

Melons may be grown following melons for a number of years, but, as with all other crops, it is better to rotate.

In a dry season, going through the corn with a one-horse harrow after it is "laid by" will give good returns.

If you want to add potash to the soil the most profitable way, grow clover or legume crops and turn them under.

Oat smut is a disease caused by a microscopot organism, a fungus, which entirely destroys the heads of the affected plants.

Asparagus is a gross feeder and will pay for liberance amounts of fertilizers, both in the quantity and quality of its shoots.

The two leading crops of the United States are corn and cotton. The 1910 corn crop is valued at $1,500,000,000 and that of cotton in worth $900,000,000.

A ton of ordinary barnyard manure contains 1,350 pounds of water, 10 pounds of nitrogen, 8 pounds of phosphoric acid, while is insoluble, and 18 pounds of potash.

KIDNEY CHILLS AND BACKACHE.

If, when you get wet or take cold, it "settles on the kidneys" and there is a shivery, chilly sensation in the back, it shows kidney weakness which

Mrs. D. K. Jeffers, Colfax, Wash., says: "For two weeks I had to be propped up in bed and I lost 50 pounds in weight. I was in terrible condition, in fact, I came very near dying. The Most Beautiful Thing.

A newspaper recently invited its readers to state in a few words what they considered the most beautiful thing in the world. The first prize was awarded to the sender of the answer: "The eyes of my mother." "The dream of that which we know to be impossible" suggested an imaginative person, and this brought him second prize. But the most amusing thing was that which read, "The most beautiful thing in the world is to see a man carrying his mother-in-law across a dangerous river without making any attempt to drop her in."

SCALP WAS BADLY AFFECTED

"I am more than gratified by the successful results I obtained by the use of the Cuticura Remedies. For several years my scalp was very badly affected with dandruff and scales. My scalp itched terribly at times and at night I could not sleep. My coat collar would be actually white with the dandruff that had fallen from my head. My position being that of a barber, I was particular about having my hair in good condition, and was also in a position to try many lotions, etc., for the scalp. These had little or no effect. I had heard so much about the Cuticura Remedies that I resolved to try them. I shampooed my head with Cuticura Soap twice a week and after drying my head thoroughly, I anointed parts of my scalp with Cuticura Ointment. I was pleased from the first day and continued to keep up this treatment. To think that only three cakes of Cuticura Soap and one and one-half boxes of Cuticura Ointment rid my head of this annoying trouble made me feel quite contented. I have now got a thick growth of hair and I am never troubled with any dandruff or itching of the scalp. There is no question but that the Cuticura Remedies cured me. I frequently recommend them to my customers, and they think a great deal of them." (Signed) John F. Williams, 307 Norfolk Street, Dorchester, Boston, Mass., July 28, 1910.

The latest addition to the Elroy Times printing force comes from Wisconsin. Within the very best of references. As that outfit has been getting help from nearly every state in the Union, we would suggest that they get a creditor from Iowa.

We are pleased to note that about all the homesteaders in this school district have advertised to make final proof. That's the stuff! Get into the harness and pay your taxes to help support your schools. We know some of you would have liked to have shirked the taxes onto the other fellow for two or three more years but the rays of the SUNBEAM got so hot that you had to strike out for Erie to get into the shade. It is our intention to represent all the people, and particulary those who have proved up three or four years ago to get money to improve their land and build their homes. They are the ones that have paid the taxes to keep up the schools and we thought they had had their share and that it was time for all to get in and pay their just share of the taxes.

A DENTAL CURIOSITY.

The Set of Artificial Teeth That Washington Refused.

It may not be generally known that the Father of His Country was one of the first Americans to wear artificial teeth. By the time the war of the Revolution had ended he had parted company with most of the outfit which nature had given him. An ingenious physician and dentist of New York city undertook the then unusual task of the equipment and produced at length a full set of artificial teeth. These are now, of course, a dental curiosity and offer an additional proof of the heroism of our first president, for it is a matter of fact that General Washington wore those teeth for many years and, so far as we know, never complained of them.

The teeth were carved from ivory and riveted, wired and clamped to a somewhat ponderous gold plate. Three large clamps in particular fixed one judiciously in the roof of the mouth and must have caused difficulty, if not anguish. There were an upper and an under set, and the two were connected and held in position relatively by a long spiral spring on each side, says Harper's Weekly.

Nevertheless Washington wore them long and well, a fact sufficiently attested by the worn and dilated condition of both teeth and plate.

At the last account these teeth were the property of a dental institution in Baltimore.

A Useful Coffin.

A writer in an English church magazine once found in a coffin's cottage in Staffordshire a coffin used as a bread and cheese cupboard. Notwithstanding his wife's remonstrance, he told the story of the coffin as follows: "Eighteen years ago I ordered that coffin. The wife and me used to have a good many words. One day she said, 'I'll never be carried in there to be thin by coffin.' 'Well, then,' I said, 'if that'll content thee I'll soon be done.'

"Next day I gave directions to have the thing made. In a few days it came home, to the tune a shreet. I got into it and said, 'Now, then, are thee content?' She began to cry and wanted the 'horrid thing' taken away. But that I wouldn't allow. In the end she got accustomed to seeing it, and as we wanted to turn it to some use we had some shelves put in and made it into a bread and cheese cupboard. We have never quarreled since it came."

Circulating Libraries.

Long before the invention of printing a printer in Philadelphia when he had taken off his forkship sprent at night used to sit poring over the covers of old volumes by firelight. He soon knew them by heart and hungered for more. But books were costly, and he had but little money. He had eight or ten cronies, young men who, like himself, were eager for knowledge. Hadding his books on a shelf, he invited his friends to do the same, that each of them might have the benefit of their all. Ben Franklin thus laid the foundation of the first circulating library in this country.

The Indian's Violoet.

More or less wonderful accounts have from time to time been given of the powers of vision possessed by savage races. During a British anthropological expedition to the Torres strait the visual faculty of the natives was carefully tested, and from these tests the conclusion was reached that the excellence of vision shown by the savages has a psychological origin—that is to say, it arises from knowing what to look for. While the civilized man relishes familiarity with the environment he can see as far as they can. Thus the power of an Indian to tell the sex of a deer at such a distance that distinguishing features like antlers were invisible was found to rest upon his knowledge of the peculiar gait of the male deer.—Scientific American.

Pennington County Schools.

We are in receipt of a lengthy article from superintendent of schools E A Mostue, which came in to late for publication this week. He reports that he has visited nearly all the schools of the County, of which there are 69, and that attendance has been fairly good the past team. The teachers summer training school will be held at Red Lake Falls this year commenceing on June 18th, and continueing six weeks. It is the desire of superintendent Mostue that as many of the teachers attend this school as possiably can.

ELECTRIC LIGHTS.

Their Effect In the First Theaters In Which They Were Used.

The first theater in the world to use incandescent lamps was the Academy of Music, on Halstead street, Chicago, the plant being installed by the Western Edison Light company. The theater was wired for 150 sixteen candle power lamps. The lighting was confined to the auditorium. No electric lights were used on the stage, as dimmers had not been thought of at that time. On the opening night, after the new lights were installed, the actors struck, claiming that it was impossible to make up by gaslight and play their parts under the glare of the electric lights. It was with difficulty that they were persuaded to proceed with the second act.

The first theater to be completely lighted with incandescent lamps was the old Haverly theater, then located on Monroe street, where the Inter Ocean building now stands. This plant consisted of two dynamos with a capacity of 637 lamps. On the opening night only sufficient lights were started at first to enable the ushers to seat the audience. When the curtain rose every light was turned on, causing a tremendous sensation among the audience and eliciting applause that continued for fifteen minutes. The innovation was so successful that McVicker's theater and the Chicago Opera House immediately installed similar plants.—W. C. Jenkins in National Magazine.

Wondrous Tact.

As an example of graciousness and tact Matthew White tells in Munsey's Magazine of a London clergyman who was called on to address an audience of actors. Alluding to the better social status of the players, the clergyman said that in former days it was sometimes customary to brand them as vagabonds and bore a hole in their ears with an awl, that the citizens might thus be forewarned. "And who knows," the clergyman added, "but that it is a survival of an endeavor to hide this mark of indignity that causes some of the actors even today to wear their hair long?"

Where a King's Clothes Were Kept.

St. Andrew's-by-the-Wardrobe is a conspicuous waymark in Queen Victoria street and derives a grotesque distinguishing title from former proximity to the king's great wardrobe. This was originally the town mansion of Sir John Beauchamp and purchased from his executors by Edward III. for the keepers of the king's apparel. "There were kept," says Fuller, "the ancient clothes of our English kings which they wore on great festivals." Shakespeare in his will left to his favorite daughter, Susannah, the Warwickshire doctor's wife, a house near the Wardrobe, "wherein one John Robinson dwelleth." The present Church of St. Andrew's-by-the-Wardrobe was rebuilt by Wren after the great fire and became the city center of the evangelical revival under William Romaine.—Westminster Gazette.

UNITED STATES COURT OF CLAIMS

The Publishers of Webster's International Dictionary allege that it "is, in fact, the popular Unabridged thoroughly re-edited in every detail, and vastly enriched in every part, with the purpose of adapting it to meet the larger and severer requirements of another generation."

We are of the opinion that this allegation most clearly and accurately describes the work that has been accomplished and the result that has been reached. The Dictionary, as it now stands, has been thoroughly re-edited in every detail, has been corrected in every part, and is admirably adapted to meet the larger and severer requirements of a generation which demands more of popular philological knowledge than any generation that the world has ever contained.

It is perhaps needless to add that we refer to the dictionary in our judicial work as of the highest authority in accuracy of definition; and that in the future as in the past it will be the source of constant reference.

The JUBILEE of CARDINAL GIBBONS

CARDINAL GIBBONS

CARDINAL GIBBONS IN HIS NEW ROBES

PREPARATIONS are actively in progress for a celebration that will rank as one of the most interesting events in the history of the Catholic church in America. The forthcoming event is a jubilee observance in honor of Cardinal Gibbons, the head of the church in America. What is more, it is to be a double jubilee,—something that is most unusual if not indeed unique. The date of this significant anniversary is June 30, which is the golden jubilee of Cardinal Gibbons' ordination to the priesthood and the silver jubilee of his elevation to the position of Cardinal.

However, the observances of this significant event will by no means be confined to the final day of June. On the contrary there will be commemorative events of one kind or another that will occur at intervals for a period of several weeks. The present plan is to have the chief events of June 30 take the form of a service in the Cathedral of the Cardinal's home city of Baltimore, to which church dignitaries from all over the country will be invited, to be followed by a reception in the neighboring city of Washington, which will take the form of a tribute by American officialdom to the venerable head of the church and will be attended by President Taft and all the highest officials of the nation.

THE CARDINAL'S RESIDENCE AT BALTIMORE, MD.

WORKING QUARTERS OF THE AMERICAN CARDINAL

However, it is expected that other cities will also desire to pay tribute to Cardinal Gibbons in connection with this dual anniversary and if he continues to enjoy the good health for which he has been famous for so many years it is probable that he will wish to accept invitations for later dates from churches at more distant points so that it will be strange if the eminent wearer of the red hat is not kept busy for several weeks acknowledging the popular expression of good wishes in one form or another. All this, too, in the face of the fact that the Cardinal rather depreciates the plans which have been in the making for sometime past to take due cognizance of the double jubilee. When, soon after the first of the year, prominent clergy and laymen began to lay plans for commemorative exercises the cardinal expressed the hope that there would be as little display as possible.

Finally there will be ceremonies connected with the laying of the corner stone and later the dedication of what is to constitute the permanent tribute to Cardinal Gibbons in connection with the jubilee—namely, a Cardinal Gibbons Memorial Hall to be erected on the grounds of the Catholic University of America in the District of Columbia. It is planned to erect a monumental structure that will cost at least $100,000 and will be notable architecturally as well as serving a useful purpose at the great seat of learning which has become the center of Catholic activities on this continent. The funds for the erection of this commemorative building are being raised by a nation-wide public subscription and thousands of dollars have already been pledged. The great interest which Cardinal Gibbons has always manifested in the university makes it particularly fitting that the enduring testimonial to his career should take the form of an addition to this seat of learning.

The double jubilee in June,—the first event of the kind ever celebrated in this country will be followed in July,—on July 23, to be exact,—by another significant anniversary. This second momentus occasion of the summer will be the Cardinal's attainment of the seventy-seventh milestone in a very active life. It is but little less significant than the other event if for no other reason than the remarkable vigor and vitality constantly manifested by the eminent churchman. Indeed, no person meeting him casually and unaware of his identity would suspect that he has attained so advanced an age. Furthermore it would be difficult to find a better example of the benefits of a simple and systematic mode of life.

Many persons not familiar with his early career have the impression that Cardinal Gibbons is a son of Erin. On the contrary, he was born in Baltimore,—that is in the diocese of which he is now archbishop in addition to holding the position of primate of the Catholic church in the United States. To be sure he was of Irish parentage and during his boyhood his father took him to Ireland where he received the groundings of a liberal education. He was but a youth when he returned to this country and entered St. Charles college in Maryland from which he graduated with high honors at the age of twenty-three. He then entered St. Mary's seminary in Baltimore and after the usual course in philosophy and theology was ordained a priest on June 30, 1861,—the anniversary of which event is commemorated by the double jubilee now in prospect.

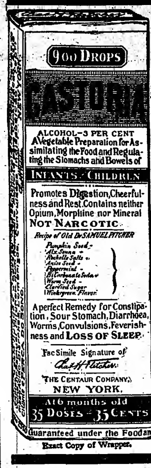
The early work of the churchman was in Baltimore, with which city his church services have been so conspicuously identified all through his long career. Later, however, after serving as private secretary to the late Archbishop Spalding he was consecrated bishop of North Carolina and remained in that state four years. Then followed five years of service with similar responsibilities in the state of Virginia. In May, 1877, he was appointed coadjutor with the right of succession to the archbishop of Baltimore and in less than a year he was formally installed archbishop. He was one of the American prelates to visit Rome in 1883 to outline the work of the third plenary council and his marked ability in this connection was at once noted by Pope Leo XIII, who forthwith appointed him to preside over the plenary council. During the meeting of the council the American archbishop further won the approbation of the pope who, to show his appreciation, nominated him for cardinal,—the signal honor, the acquisition of which forms the second object of the commemorative program now planned.

It seems peculiarly appropriate that the permanent memorial to Cardinal Gibbons in connection with his jubilee should take the form of a hall at the Catholic university for if there is one project for which this prince of the church has ever been a champion and an earnest worker it is this self-same center of higher education under Catholic auspices. It will be remembered that Cardinal Gibbons laid the cornerstone of the university and officiated at the formal opening of the institution, whereas the activities of his long service as chancellor of the university are fresh in the minds of all who keep in touch with educational progress.

As has been hinted above the personal habits of the cardinal are of the simplest character. He is ever active and a subscriber to the theory that change of occupation is the ideal rest. Cardinal Gibbons has long been known as an early riser, getting up as early as 5:30 in summer and seldom later than 6 o'clock even in winter. He usually says mass at 7 o'clock, this being the custom no matter whether he is at the cathedral in Baltimore, or at a modest summer retreat in the country, or at some quiet seaside resort. After mass comes breakfast and then an interval is devoted to reading the newspapers, for the cardinal keeps closely in touch with all current events, not forgetting a decidedly keen interest in what is transpiring in the baseball field.

The main portion of the morning is apportioned between replying to correspondence, receiving visitors and literary work. For the latter the cardinal can find all too little leisure, but he has already attained high rank as a contributor to the literature of the church, his book "The Faith of Our Fathers" being regarded by eminent scholars and divines of every creed as a masterpiece of logic and literary expression. The cardinal's correspondence is, of course, very heavy, sometimes amounting to hundreds of letters a day and his visitors are likewise numerous. The ecclesiastical business for which he is a court of last resort is in itself sufficient to throng with callers the modest reception rooms of the cardinal's residence adjoining the cathedral in Baltimore, but there are also great numbers of secular callers with a variety of missions. Catholic callers when received by the cardinal bend the knee and kiss the large amethyst ring which the cardinal wears in recognition of the spiritual authority vested in him.

Unless he is to attend a formal dinner of some kind in the evening the cardinal usually has the principal meal of the day shortly after noon and then lies down for a brief siesta, particularly if he has had an unusually strenuous morning. Later in the afternoon there is another attack upon the accumulated correspondence and literary work and more than likely a number of visitors will call by appointment. Whatever be the demands upon his time, however, the cardinal endeavors to reserve an hour or more in the late afternoon for his constitutional,—this walk which is a Roman custom, followed by nearly all ecclesiastics, being taken in company with some friend or priest. When opportunity offers the cardinal also indulges in a short walk in the early morning but frequently he has to forego this. Except under unusual circumstances the cardinal retires at or before 10 o'clock and in his early-to-bed rule is found one of the secrets of his endurance, for the eminent churchman though he has never been able to boast what might be termed a robust constitution is wiry and capable of an immense amount of work.



The cardinal's duties necessitate considerable travel and he stands this fatiguing work remarkably well considering his age. The month of June preceding the events in observance of his double jubilee is likely to be an especially lively one for this energetic member of the college of cardinals for this year as usual he has been deluged with invitations to speak at commencements. Cardinal Gibbons has few hobbies. He is fond of reading and enjoys the possession of a splendid library embracing many rare volumes and he is likewise fond of music. Naturally a light eater at all times the cardinal is not tempted by delicacies that defy digestion.

REASONABLE LOGIC.

"Say, mamma, where do the cows get their milk?" asked little Jessie very seriously, looking up from the foaming pan of milk she had been intently regarding.

"Well, dearie, where do you get your tears?" was the mother's questioning answer. After Jessie had spent several moments of very thoughtful silence, she again broke out:

"Oh, mamma, do the cows have to be spanked?"

A READER CURES HIS CONSTIPATION—TRY IT FREE

Simple way for any family to retain the good health of all its members.

The editors of "Health Hints" and "Questions and Answers" have one question that is put to them more often than any other, and which, strangely enough, they find the most difficult to answer. That is "How can I cure my constipation?"

Dr. Caldwell, an eminent specialist in diseases of the stomach, liver and bowels has looked the whole field over, has practised the specialty for forty years and is convinced that the ingredients contained in what is called Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin has the best claim to attention from constipated people.

Its success in the cure of stubborn constipation has done much to displace the use of salts, waters, strong cathartics and such things. Syrup Pepsin, by training the stomach and bowel muscles to again do their work naturally, and with its tonic ingredients strengthening the nerves, brings about a lasting cure. Among its strongest supporters are Mr. John Gravelino of 98 Milwaukee Ave., Detroit, Mich., Mr. J. A. Vernon of Oklahoma City and thousands of others. It can be obtained of any druggist at fifty cents and one dollar a bottle, or if you want to try it first a free sample bottle can be obtained by writing the doctor.

For the free sample address Dr. W. B. Caldwell, 201 Caldwell building, Monticello, Ill.

CREDIT THE NORMALS

GRADUATES OF STATE INSTITUTIONS TO GET CREDIT FOR TWO YEARS AT UNIVERSITY.

KEEPS STUDENTS AT HOME

Movement Is in Line With Action of Other States on Same Proposition—Several of Which Allow Credits.

Winona.—The announcement regarding the advanced credit heretofore to be given to graduates of the advanced course of normal schools by the University of Minnesota is one of special interest to prospective students of the state normals," said President Guy E. Maxwell of the Winona normal. "Some six years ago no credit whatever was accorded the normal school graduates by the University of Minnesota. Through the efforts of the presidents of the schools, however, in conference with President Northrop, the university made a concession of a year of advanced credit to holders of the normal school diplomas.

"Some three years ago, after the organization of the college of education, Dean Jomes of that department recommended and secured the privilege of forty-two units of advanced credit for normal school graduates out of the 126 required for graduation from the four-year course and the bachelors' degree in education. The normal schools, however, felt that their course of study, somewhat heavier than that of the first two years of the college course, should rank as fully and fairly equivalent as the first two college years.

Privilege Extended.

"This privilege has been extended to the normal school graduates of other states by their universities. Minnesota graduates have therefore gone to the University of Wisconsin and elsewhere, receiving full recognition for their two years' work. It is with a view of securing these graduates for the Minnesota University that the faculty of the college of education has just voted to award high school credit unites who finished the full course in the normal schools and who are especially recommended by the presidents, the total of sixty units of credit out of the necessary 126.

"Thus, a student may enter the normal school, pursue a regular course for two years, earn his life certificate as a teacher and enter the schools of the state at a good salary, teach temporarily and enter the university without any loss of time. This privilege will be of great interest of prospective students and ought to appeal to boys and girls whose funds may not seem sufficient to carry them through four years of college work, but who with two years under the small expense connected with the normal school course will later find the way to the university for the remaining two years.

"This plan will also interest parents who desire to have their children under the care of a smaller institution during the earlier portion of their college course. The dormitories now completed or projected for the Minnesota normal schools will afford special assistance to students who seek to earn their college diplomas under the plan suggested."

REV. A. OFTEDAHL ACCEPTS CALL.

To Be Pastor of Branch of Trinity Norwegian Church.

Minneapolis.—The call is extended to Rev. A. Oftedahl of Rochester, to become pastor of a church to be formed by young people and other English speaking members of the Trinity Norwegian Lutheran church. No church has been secured to hold services, but it is expected the church will be officially formed in about a week. Rev. Oftedahl preached his farewell sermon at Rochester, last May 14.

While English services have been held Sunday evenings in the church for 18 years, the young people became determined to organize a church which would not interfere with those who wished to have the services conducted in the Norwegian language exclusively.

CASH WHEAT IN MOVEMENT.

Changes on Liberal Scale Mark Trading in Minneapolis.

Minneapolis. — Changes in the ownership of cash wheat at the Chamber of Commerce was on a liberal scale, making the first transactions in the maturing of the May contract. Up to noon 1,250,000 bushels were delivered, involving about 1,000,000. A rather unusual feature in connection with the tenders was the acceptance of considerable wheat by the Armour Grain Company of Chicago.

FIND BODY OF MISSING MAN.

Hat Gives Clue Which Results in Gruesome Discovery.

Parker's Prairie. — The body of Charles Gunderson, who has been missing since last May, was found on the farm of Alfred Malmgren, for whom Gunderson was working at the time of his disappearance. Malmgren found a hat which he recognized as one belonging to the missing man, and, making a search of the brush near by found what remained of the body.

TIRES OF WORKING FOR NOTHING

Colonel Davidson Not to Be Active on Waterways Commission.

St. Paul.—Colonel J. H. Davidson, who, since November, 1909, has been chairman of the waterways commission created by the 1909 legislature, declares that, while he would for a while nominally continue in that capacity, he did not intend to "spend two more years sacrificing his time and money." The resolution creating the waterways commission provided that they should serve without pay, but Colonel Davidson put in a bill for $2,640.70, of which $1,500 was for salary and the beleoce for expenses. The bill passed the House, but the Senate committee trimmed it down, and then it was lost on account of the adjournment of the Senate through the mistake of a clerk.

Colonel Davidson also attributes the failure of the Senate to pass the bill to the influence of attorneys for the water power companies, which were fighting the Spooner water supply bill, which Colonel Davidson drafted. He said that he has put all his time and energy into the work during the last two years and consequently is a poor man now.

Ralph W. Wheelock, secretary to the governor, said that the work done by Colonel Davidson during the past two years was entirely voluntary and that the position of chairmen of the commission was only nominal. He added, however, that the governor felt that he was morally obligated to help the colonel in getting heck his expenses, and that efforts would be made to compensate the chairmen of the waterways commission by August 1, at least for part of his expenses.

PUPILS TO COOK OWN LUNCHES.

New Scheme to Be Tried in Rural Schools of State.

St. Paul. — Something new in the way of school lunches is to be tried this spring in a number of the state rural schools under the direction of the agricultural college extension division.

Miss Mary L. Bull, domestic science expert of the division, proposes to try out a number of schools to have the children cook their own lunches at school instead of bringing cold lunches.

The children will take turns in bringing materials, and soups, chowders, cereals and vegetables will be cooked under the supervision of the teacher, enough at each time to supply the whole school.

If the plan is found to work well it will be advocated for adoption in all the schools.

BOTH SIDES WAIT IN STRIKE.

Neither Carpenters Nor Contractors Make Decisive Move.

Minneapolis.—The strike of Minneapolis carpenters has settled down to a welting game, neither side yielding from the stand taken at the start, although both carpenters and contractors asserted they were gaining.

The carpenters say that contracts for two private residences formerly held by two members of the Master Builders' association, have been turned over to the union to complete, and that other contracts are being sought by carpenters.

As an evidence that they are winning, the contractors assert that 29 non-union carpenters were put to work on the Syndicate building.

TAKES LAND DEPARTMENT JOB.

Theodarn A. Nelsan Now Manager of State Land Sales Bureau.

St. Paul.—Theodore A. Nelson, chief clerk in the land department of the state auditor's office, has been promoted to the job of manager of the land sales department, a job created by the last legislature. His salary will be $1,800, an increase of $300.

The law permits the payment of a salary of $2,500, but Mr. Iverson proposes to use the remaining $700 for advertising state lands, in addition to the $5,000 appropriated for that purpose.

The job of manager of the land sales department was created by the law which provides for monthly sales of state land in certain counties.

INCREASES SALOON LICENSE.

St. Cloud Council Raises Amount From $500 to $1,000.

St. Cloud.—By ordinance the city council increased the saloon license from $500 to $1,000. This change was made to conform to the state law requiring that all cities having over 10,000 population must charge at least $1,000 license. In the recent United States census, St. Cloud's population was given as 10,300. This change will go into effect July 1. At the present time there are thirty-five saloons in the city, and it is expected that thirty will continue under the new license.

Tahoo Indian Thumb Mark.

Duluth.—With all due respect to Puddin' Head Wilson, the Indian department has incurred a distrustful eye on the thumb mark signature. The Indian agent at Walker has been notified that hereafter all signatures of Indians to official documents by thumb mark must be witnessed by some reputable person who can write. Heretofore the thumb mark has been considered as absolute as to require no witness, but the recent White Earth investigation has caused doubt to arise.

FINDS MANY STRANGE RELICS

WINCHELL EXPLORES LONG BURIED CITY.

Evidences of a Civilization Antedating the Indians Found Near Mankato.

Mankato.—The e race superior in the arts of civilization lived in southern Minnesota previous to the Indians who inhabited it the last few centuries is shown by the findings of Professor N. H. Winchell of Minneapolis, the state geologist, in Cambria township, twenty miles northwest of this city. The people even bed ivory, and quantities of broken pottery were found. The fact that ivory was found indicates that these people lived when elephents inhabited this section—not the mastadon—but the elephants such as they are known today. This was not long after the glecial period.

The relics were mostly three or four feet underground, many layers of soil having covered the former residing place. The site of the city or village covers several acres, and is perfectly level, while the surrounding country is more or less rough.

Now a Corn Field.

The route ley through sod old cornfield, the loose soil of which was thickly strewn with flint chips and small pieces of pottery. The real finds were not, however, made until the work with the shovels began, and as these loosened the earth the relics of a long departed race were brought to view.

The greater number of pieces found were crumbling bones of animals, including the shoulder blades of buffalo, the hoofs of elk, few bones of many animals, squirrels, coons, bears and beavers being represented, and also the lower jaw of a horse. The ancients seemed to have lived well. Many pocket gopher mounds were searched, and the collection of teeth was completed by the finding of a human molar which a gopher had brought up from under ground. Innumerable bones of birds and fish were found, and a fish scale of immense size.

Pottery Finds Valuable.

While not the most numerous, the pottery finds were the most valuable from an archeological point of view. Some of the pieces were from the rims of jars and were artistically decorated with various patterns. No two patterns were alike. The pottery bed the shape of much of that unearthed in the excations of ancient Greece.

Arrow heeds, some big for big game, and some very small, for the killing of birds, and spearhead ailing of stone hetchet heeds were found, and also the rude whetstones with which they had been sharpened. A flint knife, a scraper made from a large and flattened fish bone, a broken hammer and a cell, a hammer head they woe held in the hend when used, were found. Several boiling rocks were also picked up, but soon crumbled into seed from age.

Clay, Iron and Limestone.

Most of the relics were found in greet quantities of ashes. Professor Winchell took e matchel full of relics home with him. In examining the surrounding geological conditions, Professor Winchell found a depoeit of cretacious clay, which is the material from which the pottery was manufactured, and mey heve accounted for the presence there of the clay. He also found a fragment of iron ore from the Vermillion range and limestone from the depoelts near Winnipeg.

Professor Winchell's party included several professors of the Mankato normal school and other leeding citizens.

DOCTORS IN MANKATO.

Minnesota Valley Medical Association Votes to Merce With Southern.

Mankato.—At the thirty-first semi-annual meeting of the Minnesota Valley Medical association, held in this city, ection was taken favoring union with the Southern Minnesota Medical association, which is on organization that covers the southern part of the state. The Southern Minnesota medical association will act upon the metter at its meeting in August, and if it takes favorable action, the two associations will merge next winter. The matter hes been under consideration by both associations for some time and both referred it to committese. The committee of the Minnesota Valley Medical association reported favorably.

Dr. John M. Armstrong of St. Peul read a peper. Dr. O. C. Strickler of New Ulm gave a report of two cases of tetanus; Dr. G. H. Ludke of Belmont presented notes, and Dr. E. W. Benham of Mankato; Dr. F. P. Strathern of St. Peter and Dr. W. O. McCarty of Rochiester read papers.

Last evening the Blue Earth County Medical society entertained the visiting doctors at a luncheon for the members of the Brown-Redwood County Medical society and a joint meeting of these county societies was held.

Seeding Really at End.

Thief River Falls.—Seeding of the smaller grains is almost finished in this section. The ground is in better condition than in many years back. With the proper weather conditions from now on a bumper crop will surely be harvested. Land buyers from the southern part of the state and from Iowa and Illinois are coming in every day. Pennington county has excellent prospects of doubling its population in the next five years. The Commercial club of this city is planning on a campaign to effect this result.

325,000 IN ONE YEAR

THE IMMIGRATION TO CANADA SURPASSES ALL RECORD.

The returns recently issued by the Canadian Immigration Branch shows thet upwerds of 325,000 persons arrived in Canada during the past twelve months, declering their intention of becoming settlers in that country. Of this number about 120,000 were from the United States, the balance being from the British Isles and Northern Europe. It will thus be seen thet the sturdy farmieg element that has gone forward from the United States is being splendidly supplemented by an equally sturdy settlement from across the seas. The lure of Canadien wheet, oets, barley and flax grown on the rich prairie of Western Canada is conetantly attracting more and more, and year by year the tide of immigrents to the Western Canede plains increeses; there is no ebb to this flow. The Canadian authorities are not surprised at the number from the United States being as large as it is but they did not look for such a large immigration from the old countries. Still, they will not be found unprepared. Reception halls are in readiness at all important points in Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta, surveyors were et work during the past season opening up new districts on which to plan those seeking free homesteeds of 160 acres each, railways have been projecting laterals from their main lines, and every provision has been taken to accommodate the newcomer. A recent dispatch from Antwerp reads: "The diversion of European emigration from the United States to Canada is said to be seriously affecting the Atlantic steamship lines. The Red Star today gives up to thn America-Canada line two of the best speed emigrant steamers afloat, the Gothland and the Zeeland. These vessels heretofore in the Antwerp-New York service are now to be operated from Rotterdam to Montreal."

On the date of the above dispatch word came to the Immigration branch that the "Vanguard of the 1911 army of United States settlers reached Winnipeg at 1:30 o'clock this morning. There was a solid train load of effects, comprising 41 carloads and two colonist sleepers attached to the train, which combined the members of 38 families. Every man Jack in the party is a skilled farmer, and all have come north prepared to go right on the land, which was purchesed last year. They are equipped with everything that experience has shown is necessery to make a start on virgin prairie. In addition to machinery and household effects there were a large number of horses and cattle. Some of the farmers had also brought along gas tractors, which will be put right to work on ground breaking."

One of the agents of the Canadian government advises that it would appear as if each month of the present year would show a larger immigration over the past year. The demand for the literature of the department, describing the resources, is greater than it ever has been.

Health For Sick Women

We know of no other medicine which has been so successful in relieving the suffering of women, or secured so many genuine testimonials, as has Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

In almost every community you will find women who have been restored to health by Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. Almost every woman you meet has either been benefited by it, or knows some one who has.

In the Pinkham Laboratory at Lynn, Mass., are files containing over one million one hundred thousand letters from women seeking health, in which many openly state over their own signatures that they have regained their health by taking Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound has saved many women from surgical operations.

Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound is made exclusively from roots and herbs, and is perfectly harmless.

The reason why it is so successful is because it contains ingredients which act directly upon the female organism, restoring it to healthy and normal activity.

Thousands of unsolicited and genuine testimonials such as the following prove the efficiency of this simple remedy.

Coloma, Wisconsin.—"For three years I was troubled with female weakness, irregularities, backache and bearing down pains. I saw an advertisement of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and decided to try it. After taking several bottles I found it was helping me, and I must say that I am perfectly well now and can not thank you enough for what Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound has done for me."—Mrs. John Weatland, R. F. D., No. 3, Box 60, Coloma, Wisconsin.

Women who are suffering from those distressing ills peculiar to their sex should not lose sight of these facts or doubt the ability of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound to restore their health.

Strong Healthy Women

If a woman is strong and healthy in a womanly way, motherhood means but little suffering. The trouble lies in the fact that the many women suffer from weakness and disease of the distinctly feminine organism and are unfitted for motherhood. This can be remedied.

Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription

Cures the weaknesses and disorders of women. It acts directly upon the delicate and important organs concerned in motherhood, making them healthy, strong, vigorous, virile and elastic.

"Favorite Prescription" banishes the fadisposotions of the period of expectancy and makes baby's advent easy and almost painless. It quickens and vitalizes the feminine organs, and insures a healthy and robust baby. Thousands of women have testified to its wonderful merits.

It Makes Weak Women Strong. It Makes Sick Women Well.

Almost druggists do not offer substitutes, and urge them upon you as "just as good." Accept no secret nostrum in place of this ne-arror remedy. It contains not a drop of alcohol and not a grain of habit-forming or injurious drugs. It is pure glyceric extract of healing, native American roots.

UNCLE SAM'S PART in the KING'S CORONATION

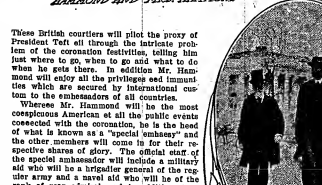
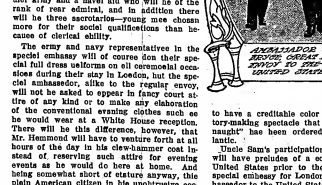
HISTORIC ST. JOHN'S CHURCH AT WASHINGTON WHERE THANKSGIVING SERVICES WILL BE HELD



SPECIAL AMBASSADOR JOHN HAYS HAMMOND AND MRS. HAMMOND



SOUND DIPLOMATS FROM BRITISH EMBASSY

THE PRESIDENT AND MRS. TAFT ENTERTAINED BY THE BRITISH EMBASSADOR

U. S. BATTLESHIP NORTH DAKOTA WHICH WILL REPRESENT THE U. S. NAVY AT THE GREAT CORONATION NAVAL REVIEW

AMBASSADOR JAMES BRYCE, GREAT BRITAIN'S ENVOY TO THE UNITED STATES

UNCLE SAM, in one way and another, is to play quite a prominent part in connection with the coronation in June of King George, Great Britain's new monorch. First and foremost, of course, will be the representation, official and unofficial, of the United States at the spectacular exercises in Loodoo. But aside from this there will be recognition of the momentous event in the American capital and while it will be, perforce, infinitely less showy than the elaborate program in the British metropolis, this echo on this side of the Atlantic will have much of significance for all believers in the hands across the sea tradition.

A kingly coronation is always a magnet for tourists and sightseers of all nationalities—as witness the thousands of spectacle-loving Americans who have planned to be in Loodon for the big show early this summer—but no government is expected to send official representatives to a coronation unless specifically invited by the government whose sovereign is to be crowned. However, Uncle Sam was duly invited, all right, to send special envoys to London for this supreme event of British history, indeed in the present instance, as in the case of the coronation of the late King Edward, the United States was one of the first nations to whom an invitation was dispatched and this is something of an honor, for John Bull invites very few republics to participate in his big celebration and even proudly overlooks some of the less important monarchies in sending out his "bids."

From the minute that the state department accepted Britannia's invitation immense interest was aroused all over the country as to whom the president would appoint special ambassador to the coronation. There is no salary attached to the place and the allowance which the government makes for expenses cannot be expected to cover the outlay of a man who has such a position to maintain. But it is a great honor to be sent as coronation envoy—carrying with it such privileges as dinners with the king and queen in addition to choice reserved seats at all the big functions—and so the place is eagerly sought by men who have the wealth to enable them to carry out its obligations. President Taft bestowed this plum upon his close personal friend, John Hays Hammond, the multimillionaire mining engineer who, for the first time, broke into politics just prior to the last presidential campaign and was mentioned for nomination as vice-president on the ticket with Mr. Taft.

The California mining expert who rolled up the greater part of his wealth in the gold fields and diamond mines of South Africa, has the reputation of being a very liberal spender, but he will needs be to outshine his American rival, Mr. Whitelaw Reid, in the coronation hospitalities. Mr. Reid was the special envoy (the post now held by Mr. Hammond) at the coronation of King Edward, as he had been previously at Queen Victoria's diamond jubilee, and on both occasions he entertained in a manner to cause British eyes to open wide with astonishment. Now, Mr. Reid is our regular ambassador at the court of St. James and as such he has to play second fiddle to the special ambassador, Mr. Hammond. But that is only in official precedence. There is no official etiquette that puts a check upon his private hospitalities. However, President Taft's action has ceased to keep London dizzy with excitement over the coronation season, paying a fortune as rental, and it is likely that no temporary resident of the city of fogs will play host more splendidly during the six weeks of gayety.

Special Envoy Hammond will have one immense advantage over the regular ambassador, Mr. Reid, and, of course, over all the Americans who are present in Britain at this time as private citizens. It will arise from the circumstance that the British government will, in order to make things easy for the special visitor, detail to attend him military and naval aide and court officials who will act as gentlemen-in-waiting just as is the case when a king visits the capital of a friendly nation.

These British courtiers will pilot the proxy of President Taft all through the intricate problem of the coronation festivities, telling him just where to go, when to go and what to do when he gets there. In addition Mr. Hammond will enjoy all the privileges and immunities which are secured by international custom to the embassadors of all countries.

Whereas Mr. Hammond will be the most cosmpicuous American at all the public events connected with the coronation, he is the head of what is known as a "special embassy" and the other members will come in for their respective shares of glory. The official staff of the special ambassador will include a military aid who will be a brigadier general of the regular army and a naval aid who will be of the rank of rear admiral, and in addition there will be three secretaries—young mee chosen more for their social qualifications than because of clerical ability.

The army and navy representativee in the special embassy will of course don their special full dress uetforms on all ceremonial occasices during their stay in London, but the special ambassador, alike to the regular envoy, will not be asked to appear in fancy court attire of any kind or to make any elaboration of the conventional evening clothes such as he would wear at a White House reception. There will be this difference, however, that Mr. Hammond will have to venture forth at all hours of the day in his clew-hammer coat instead of reserving such attire for evening events as he would do here at home. And being somewhat short of stature anyway, this plain American citizen in his unobtrusive coetumle can scarcely expect to attract as much attention in the big public perades as will the princes of various nationalities who will be present in all the splendor of vivid-hued court costumes, bedecked with jeweled decorations.

Yet another American who will have official standing at the coronation events will be Captain Gove, the nevel officer in command of the U. S. S. Delaware, our newest and most powerful battleship. The Deleware, he it explained, is to be sent to England for this special occasion. The huge warship, it may be added, does not go to efford an impressive conveyance for the special ambassador and his suite. On the contrary they will travel on the regular ocean lleers, but Great Britain has invited all the nations on the globe to send warships to the coronation naval parades and more especially to e great naval review off the English coast, and it is to enable the stars and stripes to have a creditable color hearer in this history-making spectacle that our latest "dreadnaught" has been ordered to cross the Atlantic.

Uncle Sam's participation in the coronation will have preludes of a social nature in the United States prior to the departure of the special embassy for London. The British embassador to the United States may be expected to entertain the special ambassador, and probebly all the members of the specini embassy, at a formal dinner, provided he follows precedent in the matter, as doubtless he will, for Hon. James Bryce, the present British ambassador to the United States, has earned a reputation for doing the right thing at the right time and, moreover, he is strongly in sympathy with everything American. This hospitality will doubtless be returned by Ambassador Hammond, who le well equipped for entertaining, having, in addition to his spacious summer home at Gloucester, Mass., a rented house in Washington which he has leased at a rental of upward of $10,000 a year and where he is residing with his wife and children pending the completion of a mansion specially constructed for him at the national capital.

And speaking of Ambassador Hammond's family it may be noted that Mrs. Hammond is as well qualified for the duties of special ambaeadsree as le her husband for the post of special ambassador. Prior to her marriage she was a resident of the state of Mississippi, but since she formed a life partnership with the mining engineer she has traveled all over the world—one of her latest jaunts being to St. Petersburg, Russia, whither Mr. Hammond was summoned by the czar only a few months ago for a consultation regarding the develop meet of Russian and Siberian mines. Moreover, Mrs. Hammond has lived for considerable intervals in London during the time that her husband was associated with Cecil Rhodes and the British capitalists who developed South Africa, so that she has had considerable experience to fit her for her duties as a hostesse during the gayest social season in the interim of the world's metropolis.

If precedent is followed in the case of the coronation of King George commemorative services will be held in Washington (and in all the world's capitals where Great Britain has embassies and legations) simultaneously with the significant ceremony in London. Such commemorative exercises when under the auspices of British diplomate are always especially impressive, one of the most notable within the memory of official Washington being the memorial service in honor of the late King Edward, which was held in Washington at the same hour that the funeral was held in England. Such services are attended by the president of the United States and the members of his cabinet and by all the members of the diplomatic corps in full uniform. When, as in this case, the services are in honor of a British monarch, ther are always held in an Episcopal church, that being the denomination of the Church of England. The scene of such commemorative events in Washington is old St. John's church, the famous "Court Church" or "Church of the Presidents," which is located directly opposite the White House. Unfortunately the general public gets never a peep at such ceremonials because the church is a tiny one, seating only a few hundred persons at most, and virtually every pew in the edifice has to be reserved for the diplomats and public officials who by virtue of their positions are entitled to attend.

Vehicles of the Air

In his comprehensive book on vehicles of the Victor Lougheed, engineer and student of aviation, enthusiasts in few points on the relation of the aeroplane to warfare thet serve to bring out this notion that the day is not far of when the expenditure of millions for dreadnought battleships will be unknown.

The engineer believe many things are possible with the aeroplane and compares the aviator dropping destructive shells into the vulnerable works of a modern battleship from his aerial position to hitaing down ducks with a little shotgun.

"If one aeroplane at a cost of, say, $500, does not destroy a battleship," says Mr. Lougheed, "why, 50 or 100 might do the work. The West Point and Annapolis students may descant upon getting guns that would destroy the daring aviator if he flew low enough to make accuracy possible in hitting a battleship, and they may say that if the aeroplanee destroyer flies beyond the reege of those guns he would not be able to drop a shell where it would do its work.

"They may forget, however, that the funnel of a great battleship offers a wide target, and that a perfect swarm of the little, destructive biplane gnats might be turned loose over a battleship and some one of them might drop the shell in the funnel. You could construct a big fleet of these aeroplanes for less than the cost of one battleship.

"Carry the parallel still further. Suppose a hunter out after ducks with a shotgun were to understand that if he left one of the flock that this one survivor might be able to annihilate him he would not place so much confidence in his shotgun."

Particularly interesting is the relation of navigation to warfare, and the subject obsesses many now that the governments are taking up the experiments along scientific lines. This latest of man's inventions probably will serve first in adding to the terrors and then in laying the grim specter of the centuries.

A very few of the military authorities have pointed out that in the development of the flying machine there is placed, for the first time in history, in the hands of the weak and strong combatants alike, a weapon capable of as effective and unpreventable direction against the kings, congresses, presidents and diplomats who declare war, as it is of direction against the fighting men on the faraway battle fronts.

Already more than one great military and naval captain has suffered disquieting visions of what will happen when, maneuvering unopposed and unseen in the obscurity of the night, not merely one or a few, but veritable swarms of light aeroplanes, in 20,000 lots, coeting no more than single dreadnoughts, commence trailing asortments of high explosives at the end of 1,000 foot lengths of piano wire over cities and palaces and through fleets and armies.

Many authorities are inclined to disparage the fighting ability of the aeroplane, basing their views on the fact that it has been demonstrated exceedingly difficult to drop bombs with any considerable accuracy from great heights. But from a slow-moving aeroplane flying very low it should be an easy matter to cast generous packets of picric acid or fulminate of mercury into the 20-foot diameters of a battleship's funnels.

Fancy for a moment the disillusionment to come when in some great conflict of the future a splendid up-to-date battleship fleet of the traditional order, with traditional admiral and traditional tactics, finds itself beset in midseas by a couple of great, unarmored, liter-fine hulls, engined to admit of speeds and steaming radii such as will permit them to pursue or run away from any armored craft yet built, and deeigned with clear and level decks for aeroplane launching.

Conceive them provided with storage room for hundrede of demountable aeroplanes, with fuel, regular fitties and explosives, and with housing for a regiment or two of expert air navigators.

STILL HATES WHITES

Chief Two Strike Active Though 90 Years Old.

Succeeded Chief Spotted Tail as Head of Rosebud Band of Sioux Indians—Rules People With an Iron Hand.

Sioux Falls, S. D.—Two Strike, the head chief of the Rosebud Sioux Indians, was so named on account of killieg two Pawnee braves at once some time in his early youth. He lives in Rosebud, S. D. He is 90 years of age, and until the last four or five years he enjoyed the very best of health, but now old age has begun to show, and the old time warrior and chief is getting very weak and feeble, but he still insists on getting out in his buggy and driving his little team of ponies. He is greatly feared by all of his people and still rules his tribe with an iron hand, as he still believes it le right to kill any of his people that dare to disobey his commands, and it is thought that if he dares he would exercise his right when any of his people displeased him.

He hee always heen what is known as a bad Indian, and never was friendly with the whites, and he hates them all now as much as he ever did. Whenever he is interviewed he is surly and seeme to hold himself aloof from the hated whites and acts ee if he is lowering himself to even talk with them.

He has been head chief of the Rosebud Sioux since 1890, at which time he succeeded Chief Spotted Tail, who had been killed by Crow Dog in a fight, which was caused by an old family feud of long staeding.

Old Two Strike hee been in all of the Indian wars that have been in his time, and was one of the head leaders in the Fort Phil Kearney massacre, et the foot of the Big Horn mountaine, where about 200 soldiers were killed in the year 1867. And again in the last Indian war of 1890-91, he was with Short Wool at the battle of Wounded Knee, where he was captured and taken to Washington, D. C., and afterward taken to Fort Sheridan as a government prisoner, where he was confined until the spring of 1892, when Buffalo Bill got permission from the government to take him with his Wild West show for a period of two years, after which the government decided that he should be turned loose to live the rest of hie days among he own people, but instead of feeling grateful to the government for having him loose, he has done all in hie power to keep the Indians hostile to the whites, lending all the assistance of the government in sending the Indian children away to school and consequently has caused the government a great deal of trouble, for it is a tribal custom for them obey their chief in every way.

If the inside truth was really known it would probably be found that his orders never coincided very closely to what the government wanted in anything.

The government is no longer obliged to pay him any money, as they have allowed him to settle on his lands, and to keep up the proceeds for his old age. They allow only non coms, as they call them in U. S., all those who are too old or sick to work), to sell all of their land.

He has had two wives, but only one of them is still living, he hae been the father of eight children, all of whom are still living except one, and the second son will succeed him as chief of the Rosebud Sioux and is known es Little Hawk.

Albany, N. Y.—There will be a hoe fee in Winchester county in a few days when the state department of agriculture burns 3,000 4-year-old pine trees just imported from Germany.

The trees are inflicted with blister rust, which is fatal to white pine forests. It destroyed the white pine of certain parts of Germmny, and, according to Raymond A. Pearson, commissioner of agriculture, would wipe out the magnificent pine groves of America, if it got a start.

The Westchester trees belong to a private nursery man.

THE SUNBEAM.

VOL. XI. SUNBEAM, PENNINGTON COUNTY, MINNESOTA, FRIDAY, MAY 19, 1911. NO. 8.

MINNESOTA HISTORICAL SOCIETY.

TALES OF GOTHAM AND OTHER CITIES.

ARMY OF 250,000 TOILS AT NIGHT

NEW YORK.—With an army, conservatively estimated at a quarter of a million of workers who are employed partly or wholly at night, New York city is fast becoming as busy industrially and economically between the hours of 7:00 p. m. and 7:00 a. m as are other cities during the hours that from time immemorial have been dedicated to labor.

The glitter, the glimmer and the clamor of the "Gay White Way" and its environs must, from their very noise and brilliancy, attract attention to the exclusion of all other considerations, after the sun goes down and the myriad imitation suns come up.

But that quarter million of workers is there—not so accessible, not so easily stumbled upon, and far less noisy:

It is hard to complete an accurate list of all those occupations which are carried on at night. But here is a list, which gives an idea of the enormous number of people who earn their bread in a manner that our staid forefathers would have considered "outlandish."

Milkmen, postoffice employees, policemen, firemen, railway employees, employees on the surface, elevated and subway lines, night watchmen, waiters and cashiers in the all-night "hash houses;" then comes that other class of waiters and attendants in the fashionable restaurants, who only begin to hustle about at night; newspaper men, printers, telegraph operators, bar tenders, hotel clerks, bell boys and the "rafe" of other hotel employees; hackmen, chauffeurs, all-night dentists, physicians, surgeons, barbers, cigar store clerks, drug store employees, telephone girls, newsboys, news dealers, actors and actresses, crews of the ferry boats, certain sorts of structural workers, tunnel workers, musicians, nurses; there is a small army of men and women who enter the big department stores after they have closed for the night, and work the night long cleaning and fixing them up ship-shape for the next day's trade.

WILL ENFORCE DRASTIC GAMING LAW

MONTCLAIR, N. J.—The open season for bridge whist and poker ended here when a committee of prominent clergymen called upon Recorder Henry L. Yost and requested that the provisions of the air-tight state gambling law of 1898 be put in force at once.

Lawyers say the New Jersey gambling law is one of the most sweeping ever put on a statute book. Its three sections include every form of dallying with chance. Poker players, euchre players or shakers of dice for drinks may be sent to prison.

"There's this I hear about putting an end to bridge!" a lawyer asked the police chief. "My wife has arranged for a bridge whist party tonight, but I'll call it off if there's any danger of a raid."

The chief's proxy hurriedly consulted a copy of the gambling law and then advised that the bridge party be called off.

Bridge has taken a strong hold on Montclair, with high play as a result. A young Montclair woman, prominent socially, was invited recently to an afternoon tea. Bridge was proposed, almost as a matter of course. No money was staked, counters being used. The girl plunged. When play was ended the hostess informed casually by her guests, "I find by the count ers that you owe me $40."

"Why! I didn't know we were playing for money," gasped the amazed and then deeply mortified girl. But the hostess persisted in her claim, and the girl handed over a check as security. At home she confided in her father, a New York lawyer. He called up the winner on the phone.

"Kindly return my daughter's brooch within 24 hours," he said. The brooch was sent back within an hour, without bill or comment.

GIVEN RIGHT TO SPANK HIS WIFE

ST. LOUIS.—On Fourth of July, at harvest home dinners, when a new railroad is completed, or a canal is dug, or a new mayor inaugurated, florid-faced men get up and talk eloquently of the nation's great progress.

"We are living in an age of marvelous deeds," they exclaim, and we truly are, for in St. Louis a jury found that a man had the right to spank his wife.

Rebecca Yowell, the mother of six children, sued Jacob Yowell for a divorce, charging that he spanked her He confessed to the crime, but claimed as a mitigating circumstance that she talked from ten o'clock till two the next morning, and he couldn't sleep.

Mr. Yowell did not tell the court what she talked about and the court didn't ask. Had there been a woman judge and jury at the trial Mrs. Yowell's reasons for talking four hours at a stretch would have been made known. But this is sure: Those four hours were not devoted to singing "Home, Sweet Home."

Time flies rapidly when one is hearing compliments; in no other circumstance does time fly so fast, and had Mrs. Yowell been praising her husband there would have been no spanking.

Never offer a tip until after service is over.

Be liberal, but don't overdo it.

CHICAGO.—John Henry William Rehm, who, with Henry von Hamlson, another Chicago waiter, will pass the summer in Europe, traveling on the proceeds of tips paid him, gave the foregoing precepts, and plans to follow them in giving his own money away.

Rehm will take his wife and two daughters, Adeline and Elinor, on the trip. They will sail on the Lusitania, in the best quarters available, and for three months will "do" Europe in style.

"A waiter should receive $50 a week in tips," said Rehm in telling of his experience as a Chicago waiter "Sometimes, when politics are on, a waiter can get as much as $10 a day but other times it runs nearer $5. But it isn't so much getting the tips as saving them that counts."

Rehm did not disclose the amount of his savings, but he admitted he had three summer cottages in Michigan, another cottage in Edgewater he sides the one in which he lives, and some city bonds.

IN THE PUBLIC EYE

RAILROAD MAN IS HONORED

O. L. Dickeson of the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy Railway company was appointed vice-president of the White Pass & Yukon route, the most important railway property tapping the rich mineral fields of Alaska.

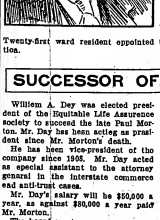
This promotion comes to Mr. Dickeson after a brilliant record, achieved in the Chicago and middle west railroad world. As superintendent of transportation of the Burlington, he has handled many of the important general policy transactions, not only of the Burlington, but of all the railroads centering in Chicago.

Mr. Dickeson is a young man. He was born in Ottumwa, Iowa, in 1877. His father was a pioneer Baptist minister, and is still living, enjoying a prime old age, now more than eighty years of age. He received his early education in the Ottumwa public schools. At the age of fifteen he was compelled to make his own way. He came to Chicago, and by sheer pluck and determination secured a good business education.

He entered the service of the Burlington as a stenographer in the transportation department in 1899. A few years later he succeeded his immediate superior and took charge of the department as superintendent of transportation.

CAPTAIN RESTORED TO DUTY

The court of seven rear admirals which tried Captain Austin M. Knight, U. S. N., on charges of "culpable negligence and inefficiency in the performance of duty" relative to the ordnance test on the monitor Puritan, has reaffirmed its original verdict of complete and honorable acquittal, but Secretary of the Navy Meyer has disapproved the findings. The officer has been restored to duty, however, and the action relieves him of arrest and formally terminates his trial.



The conclusion of the case, with the secretary's disapproval of the verdict, created a mild sensation among officers of the navy.

The notable court, headed by Rear Admiral Robley D. Evans, which tried the accused officer, held its session at the Norfolk navy yard.

After an exhaustive examination of the record by the legal and executive officials of the navy department the secretary announced that the department became satisfied that the evidences of the trial proved all the specifications cited against the officer.

The secretary thereupon referred the case back to the court for reconsideration. The review of the testimony failed to change the opinion of the court and consequently the verdict of acquittal stands.

ANOTHER FROM CHICAGO WARD

The Twenty-first ward of Chicago, which has already furnished eight members of President Taft's official family, has been drawn upon for still another. Samuel Adams has been appointed by Secretary of the Interior Fisher as his first assistant to fill the vacancy caused by the resignation of Assistant Secretary Frank Pierce of Utah, appointed by former Secretary Ballinger.

Mr. Adams was born at Syracuse, N. Y., in 1871. He graduated from Harvard in 1892 and later studied at the Harvard Law school and the Northwestern University Law school. Since 1893 he has practiced law in Chicago. For the past few years he has been a member of the firm of Adams & Candee. During the traction litigation in Chicago he was a special counsel for the city, associated with Walter L. Fisher, now secretary of the interior. Mr. Adams resides at 48 East Elm street, and is the sixth Twenty-first ward resident appointed to a position in the Taft administration.

SUCCESSOR OF PAUL MORTON

William A. Day was elected president of the Equitable Life Assurance society to succeed the late Paul Morton. Mr. Day has been acting as president since Mr. Morton's death.

He has been vice-president of the company since 1905. Mr. Day acted as special assistant to the attorney general in the interstate commerce and anti-trust cases.

Mr. Day's salary will be $50,000 a year, as against $80,000 a year paid Mr. Morton.

The board went on record in favor of mutualization, continued the committee on mutualization, and instructed it to cooperate with the state department of insurance, the trustees and Mr. Morgan.

The vote stood twenty-six for Mr. Day and three against, and was made unanimous. Thomas Spratt, chairman of the committee on reorganization, said there was no opposition to Mr. Day on personal grounds, but that the trustees and Superintendent Hotchkiss believed the election should have been postponed until a definite mutualization plan had been effected.

WASHINGTON GOSSIP

SPEAKER NO LONGER IS RULER

WASHINGTON.—As steam is to the engine, so is the committee on rules to the national house of representatives. True, the speaker has been thrown off the committee and no longer has actually control of it; nevertheless the committee retains what the speaker has lost. Joseph G. Cannon dominated the rules committee of the Sixty-first congress and through it the house, where the majority followed the committee with supine docility.

A body designed to invent instruments by which the formal rules of the house may be temporarily and deftly broken, yet broken without casting a particle of advantage to the minority, the rules committee, it the most interesting of the house committee groups The great ways and means committee, in its dual function as tariff-bill framer and as committee on committees, prepares the political pathway for the house majority on which it must travel to victory or defeat. The mighty appropriations committee, acting as a board of directors of the government bank and as the regulator of public expenditures, does a non-partisan and truly patriotic service to the entire government. But the rules committee, which ranks equally with the two named before—carrying out the figure of the house as a locomotive—must in itself generate the power that thrills the whole machine with life and motion and enables it to travel safely along the legislative highway.

The engineer of this locomotive committee is Representative Robert Lee Henry of Texas. His is the hand that must close on the levers at the right time, and his is the hand that must sound the warning whistle and apply the brakes and take the upgrades on the high speed and the down-grades conservatively and with caution. Responsible for the locomotive's progress, he is accordingly responsible for the entire train of committee cars behind him, and piloting them and their precious cargo to a safe destination in his huge work.

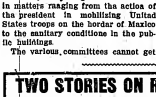
SHOWS HOW LAZY A CLERK CAN BE

THE lazy government clerk has so long been a standard type in the rant fiction that his fellow, the lazy bureau chief, is often utterly neglectful of. Of course, the bureau chief is fewer and farther between than the clerk, and his laziness is thereby not quite so egregious.

A caller entered the antiroom to a certain bureau chief's den. "Is Mr. K——" he began.

The clerk was busy at the telephone, and waved a hospitable hand toward a row of empty chairs.

"Just a minute," he said, and then turned again to the telephone. The visitor tried not to overhear, but nevertheless got something like this: "What did Murphy say to that? . . . O, come now. . . . You did? . . . Get out. . . . Not so you're notice it. The question was I fell tired and went out for a walk with Murphy. . . . He ought to have it painted on his shirt front. . . . Well, what do you suppose I called you up for—to tell me things like that? . . . I'll tell you tonight."



All of which was so obviously not government business that the caller impatiently wondered at the boldness of the clerk—and that of the girl at the other end of the wire. For minutes were passing, "Murphy" figured again; also some unexplained incident of a shirt bosom and a drug store. The caller blushed, and he read the old motto on the clerk in an unapologetic, business-like tone.

"I should like to see Mr. K——, please."

The clerk smiled.

"He's gone for the day."

ERA OF "SHERLOCKING" AT CAPITAL

THE era of investigation has begun in Washington and soon will effect every corner of the United States.

It is impossible to walk around Washington without running across a Sherlock Holmes. There is no branch of the government too inconspicuous to escape attention. The Democrat microscope is being cleaned for use in matters ranging from the action of the president in mobilising United States troops on the border of Mexico to the sanitary conditions in the public buildings.

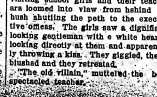
The various committees cannot get actively at work in this direction until December, when the estimates for expenses will be submitted by the president, and this affords an opportunity for the resurrection of a number of committees. The investigations these committees will conduct are as follows:

Expenditures in the department of agriculture.

Expenditures in the department of commerce and labor.

Expenditures in the interior department.

Expenditures in the department of justice.



Expenditures in the postoffice department.

Expenditures in the state department.

Expenditures in the treasury department.

Expenditures in the war department.

TWO STORIES ON REPUBLICAN LEADER

TWO stories on Jim Mann, Republican leader in the house, have developed recently, and the worst of it is they are both on the Chicagoan. A newspaper man who likes the birds and flowers and know all about them was walking down town from his home early one morning the other day. He stopped at Iowa circle to look at the crocuses and the forget-me-nots that were poking their heads through the flowar plots. He saw another man similarly engaged, except that the other man was more curious and was poking around in the black loam with his walking stick, the newspaper man recognized Mr. Mann.

"Well, I see you are a nature lover, too, Mr. Mann," he said.

"Not on your life," answered the minority leader. "I dropped a quarter around here somewhere a minute ago."

Mr. Mann walked out of the White House the other day. Since his acvetion to the leadership he has become secretive and has little to say to the correspondents. The newspaper man called him at the door.

"Nothing doing, boys," said Mann, and he placed the tip of his finger to his lips.

At that precise instant a flock of visiting school girls and their teachers loomed into view from behind a bush shutting the path to the executive offices. The girls saw a dignified looking gentleman with a white beard looking directly at them and apparently throwing a kiss. They giggled, they blushed and they retreated.

"The old villain," muttered the bespectacled senator.

MODERN SCHOOL OF MARINERS.

The old saying that there is no loss without some gain is borne out by the change which has been wrought in the country's shipping. There has been much lament over the decadence of the famous Yankee seamanship, but after the passing of the clipper and whaling fleets at last the come to the high seas a new breed of Americans who are the equals if not the superiors of the old. The mechanical genius of the nation has sent many young men to the steamships or the navy and the merchant marine, says the Cleveland Leader. Ninety per cent of the sailor-mechanics of the United States navy are American born. Twenty years ago, the proportion of Americans on merchant vessels was only about 30 per cent. In 1910 the proportion was 49 per cent., the natives heavily predominating over the naturalized. The showing for this year will be even better, as the movement of Americans to the sea has been steadily increasing for several years. In many ways the mechanics of the new school are better than the old sheltbacks that heaved at the capstan bar and lay out on the end of the yardarm. The demands of steam and electrical machinery require a different kind of skill and more intelligence. The constant advance of mechanics and electrical scisscs makes it necessary for them to keep mentally fresh and alert. They know more and are more progressive than the old-time sailor and in their habits they are cleaner.

A strong movement is to be started in England to limit the reading of trashy novels, which are perverting the emotions and lowering the thought of the youth. Some of the most influential men in England have joined the movement. As a general thing, the danger is not realized to harm the indiscriminate reading of novels is doing their children. The constant reading of novels, even of good ones, weakens the mind. It has about the same effect on the mind that lounging in a hammock or floating down stream has on the muscles. The mind, to appreciate truth, has to deal with truth, and cocounter and overcome obstacles that are in its way. Leading this exercise it grows weak and flabby. The parent might as well, from the very start, give up his child, so far as worth and noble destiny in this world is concerned, who is a constant reader of novels.

A variation of the French Ardan story comes from a New York town, where a man who had deserted his wife had the uncomfortable experience of having her unexpectedly walk in on him and have him arrested. If this variation could only replace the original practice, it would be much better for the community in general and have the effect of reducing the number of these wanderers from their own firesides, who have formed a distinct class of public nuisances.

A Michigan lawyer has found a new way to break a will. One of his clients spoke his will into the trumpet of a phonograph and had the record put away. His lawyer, by dropping the record, smashed it into a thousand pieces. It seems to be impossible to make a will that some lawyer can't break, somehow.

Blind psycho impulse leads beautiful women to the selection of ugly men, according to a Canadian observer, who adds that it not infrequently leads to a fat bank account. Blind? no; psychic? relatively; impulse? hardly.

David Starr Jordan would abolish college baseball because of the "scientific muckerism" in lashing the players. In professional baseball the muckerism is far more scientific but less classical.

The Krupps have a monopoly in a projectile which will hit a balloon. It is likely that, two or three men will have a monopoly in being in the balloon.

The Wisconsin boys who save themselves labor by having a phonograph call the cows out of the pasture are perfectly willing to rely upon human lungs for the dinner announcement.

People who have nothing else of importance to do are arguing the question, "Does the robin sing or does he merely chirp?" It is almost as exciting as playing chess.

"All the epidemic and local diseases thrive upon the family cat," asserts an authority. This may explain why the animal is endowed with nine lives.

A rope manufacturer has just been made a director in a cigar company. Almost anybody could say something about the fitness of things here.

ALARM AT CAPITAL

REBEL THREATS TO ATTACK MEXICO CITY CAUSE FOREIGN ENVOYS TO ACT.

MEET AND PLAN FOR DEFENSE

Wilson Says Action Only Precaution-ary—Provisional President Madero Appoints Cabinet and Establishes His Government at Juarez.

Mexico City.—A movement for the protection of foreign residents in this capital in the event that the rebel forces should attack the city as they have threatened to do, was instituted by the diplomatic representatives of the foreign powers.

Members of the diplomatic corps met in the United States embassy upon invitation of Henry Lane Wilson, the United States ambassador, to plan concerted action for the protection of aliens in the event that the situation in the capital reaches a crisis necessitating the taking of measures to defend themselves.

Mr. Wilson explained that his action in calling together the foreign diplomats to discuss the situation was merely precautionary.

Later the American ambassador called on Francisco de la Barra, the Mexican minister of foreign affairs, to lay before him a contemplated movement on the part of the representatives of foreign governments stationed here. The details of the plan have not been made public.

An atmosphere of deep gloom pervades the federal offices in strong contrast with the spirit of hopefulness maintained throughout the last ten days.

El Paso, Tex.—The possession of Juarez has brought such governmental responsibilities to Francisco Madero, provisional president, that Francisco I. Madero, appointed a cabinet.

The members who were named are: Dr. Vasquez Gomss, minister of foreign relations; Gustavo Madero, minister of finance; Venus Vanuetinas Carrans, minister of war; Frederico Gonzales Garza, minister of the interior; Pino Suarez, minister of justice, and Juan Sanchez Azcona, secretary to the president.

Doctor Gomez was agent of the revolutionary party in Washington up to the time peace terms were being discussed, when he came to El Paso to participate in the conference.

Gustavo Madero is a brother of the provisional president. The others are well known in the insurrecto movement.

TWO DEAD IN TRAIN WRECK

Twenty-Five Others Injured When Coaches Are Derailed on Denver and Rio Grande.

Denver, Colo.—Two killed at least twenty-five injured, several seriously, comprise the casualties resulting from the derailment of westbound Denver & Rio Grande passenger trains near Minturn, 30 miles west of Leadville.

The wreck was caused by spreading rails. The rails gave way after the engine and baggage car had passed and the weight of the heavy Pullman cars caused the day coach and tourist sleeper to buckle up and roll down the 15-foot embankment into the Eagle river.

Standard Oil Official Dead.

New York.—Philip Rogvecht, manager of the foreign shipping department of the Standard Oil company, is dead at his home here of a complication of diseases. It was under his guidance that the Standard's methods of shipping oil to all countries of the globe were systematised.

EIGHT DIE IN FIRE

"GREAT LAFAYETTE," VICTIM OF MUSIC HALL DISASTER.

Corpses of Alice Dale and Jos Coster Recovered—Actor Perishes in Flames Trying to Save Pets.

Edinburgh, Scotland.—Search of the ruins of the burned Empire Music hall developed the bodies of eight persons who lost their lives in the conflagration.

Among the dead are "Lafayette the Great," who escaped the flames at the outset, but re-entered the burning building to rescue his horse and dog.

Two members of his company, Miss Alice Dale, who impersonated the Yeldey Bear midget, and Joe Coster, were found. The other bodies are those of members of Lafayette's orchestra. Miss Dale and Coster were natives of England.

The fire started in a mass of scenery used in the conclusion of Lafayette's performance, which was a spectacular military pageant in which he represented Lord Roberts and other celebrities on horseback. In a moment the stage was filled with flames. The iron fire curtain was hastily lowered and the audience, which at first thought that the burst of fire was a part of the spectacle, escaped with little panic.

According to some of those who escaped from the rear exits, a trained lion belonging to Lafayette got loose during the panic and blocked the stage door. Lafayette after a desperate struggle with the beast got him out of the way.

Lafayette, who had played for 20 years in the United States, was a popular and picturesque character. He recently finished a season at the largest London halls. He had a residence in London, and across the front of it were blazoned the words, "Lafayette the Great." Under this were pictures of himself with his horse and dog. Several American negroes composing his brass band are supposed to have escaped.

DIRECT VOTE BILL ADVANCED

Senate Places House Resolution in Position of Preference.

Washington.—After disposing of the technical parliamentary obstacles Senator Borah of Idaho succeeded in having the senate consider the house joint resolution to amend the constitution so as to provide for the election of United States senators by popular vote. The effect is to make the resolution the unfinished business and thus give it preference.

The order was made on a roll call, but out of 71 votes only Senator Brandegee, Burnham, Gallinger, Heyburn and Penrose voted in the negative.

DEADLOCK IN SENATE

GALLINGER FAILS OF ELECTION AS PRESIDENT PRO TEMPORE ON SEVEN BALLOTS.

BACON GETS DEMOCRAT VOTE

Situation Results From the Opposition of Insurgent Republicans, Five of Whom Vote Against Caucus Nominee—Three Are Paired.

Washington.—The incapacity of the Republican party in the senate to control a caucus edict without the aid of the insurgents was demonstrated in the senate when after more than two hours of effort, and as a result of seven ballots that body failed to elect Senator Gallinger of New Hampshire as president pro tempore to succeed Senator Frye of Maine.

The 79-year-old senator's resignation was based on poor health. The deadlock was due to the opposition of the insurgent Republican senators, five of whom voted against and three of whom were paired against Mr. Gallinger.

Soon after the senate convened Vice-President Sherman absented himself from the chair and Senator Lodge assumed the chair. Immediately Senator Culloom, as the chairman of the Republican caucus, moved that the senate proceed to the election of a president pro tempore, placing Mr. Gallinger in nomination. The nomination of Senator Bacon of Georgia by Senator Martin, chairman of the Democratic caucus, followed. Senator La Follette performed the same service for Senator Clapp.

Upon the first ballot it was apparent that when the insurgents did not cast their votes against Mr. Gallinger they were paired as to render effective the votes of absentees.

Secretary Brown announced his desire to vote for Gallinger, but stated that owing to a pair with Senator Works, who was unfavorable to Gallinger, he could not do so. Later he stated that his pair had not been arranged so that the New Hampshire senator. Mr. Dixon was paired with Mr. Cummins and Mr. Kenyon with Mr. Borah.

The first ballot totaled 73 votes, of which Mr. Bacon, the Democratic candidate, received 31; Mr. Gallinger, the Republican candidate, 32, and Mr. Clapp, 4, while Mr. Becon voted for Mr. Gallinger and Mr. Clapp for Mr. Brisbow.

Messrs. Bristow, La Follette, Gronna and Poindexter voted for Clapp. Messrs. Cummins, Bourne, Works and Crawford, insurgents, were all absent, but paired for Senator Clapp, except Mr. Crawford, who was ill. All the Democratic votes were cast for Mr. Bacon, Nelson, necessary to a choice, 37. The only change in the second ballot was that Senator Gallinger, who had refrained from voting on the previous roll call, voted for Mr. Lodge, increasing the total vote to 74, and making 38 necessary to elect.

The figures for each candidate were unchanged throughout the voting until the last ballot, vote Senator Bradley retired, thus reducing the vote by his own ballot, and that of Senator Taylor of Tennessee, who was paired with him.

For many points of order raised the most serious, presented by Mr. Root, related to the right of a senator to refrain from voting on account of a pair. Mr. Root contended that under the rules all senators are required to vote when their names are called.

Mr. Bailey replied that the immemorial custom of the senate has so interpreted pairing as to render it equivalent to a rule. He declared that he would rather be expelled from the senate than break an order to break a pair.

Ultimately the chair ruled that a pair could be recognized only as an excuse for not voting, and by a vote the senate held this to be a valid excuse.

During the balloting Senators Stone, Bailey and other Democrats made the contention that a plurality should elect. A decision in their favor would have given Senator Gallinger the chair held against them.

After the fifth ballot Senator Gallinger was adjourned until Monday, but his motion was voted down, 36 to 42, Democrats and progressives voting in the negative. But, after two more roll calls, Mr. La Follette's similar motion prevailed without division, it becoming apparent that all balloting must be ineffectual.

STRUGGLE FOR DEATH

AGED WOMAN FIGHTS TO DIE ON NIAGARA BRINK.

Constable After Battle Pulls Her From Cataract With Pike Pole—Dress Catches on Rock.

Niagara Falls, N. Y.—Constable Thomas Harrington, after a desperate fight at the brink of the cataract rescued Mrs. Elizabeth Hartley of Buffalo, aged sixty years, who was determined to end her existance, from certain death. In doing so he endangered his own life in his struggles with the determined woman.

Mrs. Hartley entered the water about sixty feet above the falls. Her dress caught on a jagged rock 15 feet from the brink of the falls. There she was held until Harrington reached the bank with a pike pole and hooked it into her dress.

Her arms pinioned by the terrific current, Mrs. Hartley tried to get free from the pole, but finally, weakened by her struggles, she became quiet and was dragged ashore. At the hospital where she was taken it is said she cannot live.

On the river bank were found a letter and a bunch of flowers. The latter read: "No longer to be treated as a thing demented."

Word received later from Buffalo said that Mrs. Hartley was on inmate of the state hospital there. She had been on parole for several weeks and left the institution to take a position in a private family.

DIETZ OPENS HIS DEFENSE

Makes Serious Error in Peceming Motion for Discharge of Wife, Son and Himself.

Hayward, Wis. — In his efforts to present a defence against charges of murdering Deputy Sheriff Harry John F. Dietz made a miserable failure. He opened his case with the usual motions to the court that the defendants be discharged, and done it in good legal form, though denied. He then surprised the state by introducing a number of photographs of the barn where it was alleged that he was hiding when he shot Harp. The photographs strongly contradicted the claims of the state witnesses that Herp was shot through a port hole in the roof of the barn, the photographs showing no such holes.

The state later admitted privately that probably the court would have been forced to grant a motion for the discharge of Mrs. Dietz and Leslie, in view of the meager evidence presented against them, but Dietz made his motion including all three, and failed to win his point.

FREE LIST BILL IS PASSED

House by Vote of 236 to 109 Adopts Farmers' Measure—Now Goes to Senate.

Washington.—By the overwhelming vote of 236 to 109 the farmers' free list bill passed the house amid Democratic applause.

There were 24 Republicans voting for the bill on final passage, made up of the progressives from the middle west.

It is believed the decisive victory the bill got in the house will go far towards securing for it consideration in the senate, although it may not pass the body.

The Republicans voting for the bill were Anthony, Anderson, Davis, Hanbe, Hubbard, Jackson, Kent, Kopp, La Follette, Lenroot, Lindbergh, Madison, Miller, Morgan, Mrs. Murdock, Nelson, Norris, Roberts (Nev.), Steenerson, Volstead, Warburton, Berger (Soc.-Milwaukee), Helgesen, Akin (N. Y.).

Age of Oysters.

Oysters grow only during the summer and especially during the long, warm summer at that, and are scarcely big enough for market before the third year. It is easy after looking over a bunch of shells to tell how old an oyster is. A summer hump and the winter sink come across the shell every year, but after the seventh or tenth year full growth comes; then, by looking at the sinks between the humps it is hard to tell anything more about Mice Oyster's age. Oysters live to be twenty years old.

FEED YOUNG GIRLS
Must Have Right Food While Growing.

Great care should be taken at the critical period when the young girl is just merging into womanhood that the diet shall contain that which is upbuilding and nothing harmful.

At that age the structure is being formed and to insure a healthy, sturdy character, health and happiness will follow; on the other hand unhealthy cells may be built in and a sick condition slowly supervene which, if not checked, may ripen into a chronic condition and cause life-long suffering.

A young lady says:

"Coffee began to have such an effect on my stomach a few years ago that I finally quit using it. It brought on headaches, pains in my muscles, and nervousness.

"I tried to use tea in its stead, but found its effects even worse than those I suffered from coffee. Then for a long time I drank milk at my meals but at last it palled on me. A friend came to the rescue with the suggestion that I try Postum.

"I did so, only to find at first, that I didn't fancy it. But I had heard of so many persons who had been benefited by its use that I persevered, and when I had it made right—according to directions on the package—I found it grateful in flavour and soothing and strengthening to my stomach. I can feel no words too strong to express my love of what I owe to Postum!"

"In every respect it has worked a wonderful improvement on the headaches, nervousness, the pains in my side and back, all the distressing symptoms yielded to the magic power of Postum. My brain seems also to share in the betterment of my physical condition: it seems keener, more alert and brighter. I am, in short, in better health now than for a long while before, and I am sure I owe it to the use of your Postum." Name given by Postum Company, Battle Creek, Mich.

Organized Natural Science Departments at State Institution in 1878—Recognized Authority in Mineralogy.

Minneapolis.—Dr. Christopher W. Hall, professor of geology at the state university, and for more than thirty years connected with that institution, died at his home. He had been a sufferer with anemia for two years having contracted the disease while attending a convention of the International Geological association in Santiago, Chile. He has been confined to his bed for the last month.

Funeral services will be held at 1 p. m. Saturday at the First Congregational church, Rev. Clement C. Clark, pastor, officiating. Cataract lodge No. 2, A. F. & A. M., of which he was a past master, will than convey the body to Hastings, and have charge of the burial there beside the graves of his wife, father and mother.

Studied Abroad.

Born at Wardsboro, Vermont, Feb. 28, 1846, Christopher W. Hall received his early education in the public schools and entered Middlebury college, Mass., where he graduated with honors in 1871. He took his Master's degree at his alma mater two years following. He taught at the Glens Falls academy in New York from 1871-2, was an instructor at the Mankato, Minn., high school for the year after, and was superintendent of schools at Owatonna from 1872-5. He went to the west to Germany where he attended the university of Leipsic, receiving his doctor's degree from the institution in 1877. The next year he came to the University of Minnesota as instructor in natural sciences. He was made a professor almost immediately upon his arrival, the specialties given to his care being biology, geology and mineralogy, or all the natural sciences save chemistry and physics. To him was given the development of that branch of work in the university with quarters in old Main hall.

Professor Hall continued as sole instructor in all the branches given him until 1884, when Professor Henry F. Nachtrieb, then a young instructor, was given charge of the zoology department. In 1888 he was made assistant curator of the general museum, a position which he held for many years. The general museum comprised the collections of the geological and natural history survey of the state augmented by purchase and donation and at the time contained some 18,000 specimens.

In 1897 he was given charge of the geology department and due to the work he was carrying retired from the deanship. Frederick Jones being later chosen for that position. He continued in charge of the geology department to his death, though he had asked a year ago of the board of regents if he had not retired at the end of the school year that he might devote his time to writing and research work. The request was granted.

Professor Hall was an accepted authority here and abroad on mineralogy, petrography and geology, and had written several books on his subjects. He has written one book entitled, "The Geography of Minnesota," and also wrote a bulletin for the United States Geological survey on "The Water Resources of Southern Minnesota." He served as an assistant on the Minnesota Geological survey, and was one of the five original members of the United States Geological survey. He was a fellow of the American Association for the Advancement of Science, a fellow of the Geological Society of America, a member of the Association of Geographers, former president and secretary of the Minnesota Academy of Natural Sciences, and president of the Minnesota Geological society.

LAKE WILSON IS FIRE-SWEPT.

Main Portion Razed by Conflagration During a Heavy Wind.

Sleyton.—The main portion of the village of Lake Wilson was destroyed by fire during a heavy wind. The blaze originated from an unknown cause during the noon hour, and as the town is without fire protection it spread rapidly.

A restaurant, bank, general merchandise store, hardware store, hermess store and all the implement stores and other business places on the side of Main street north of the railroad track, and two lumber yards, elevators, the depot, railroad tanks, pumping station and the Lake Wilson hotel on the south side of the track were completely destroyed. The loss is estimated at $130,000, partly insured.

LITCHFIELD POSTMASTER DIES.

Chas. H. Strobeck Was Also Prominent in County Politics.

Litchfield.—Postmaster Chas. H. Strobeck, prominent in the business and political history of Litchfield and Meeker county for over forty years, is dead. He had held the offices of county attorney and judge of probate and was serving his second term as postmaster. He was 70 years of age and leaves a widow and two grown children. He was a Mason.

NO POLITICS FOR JIM.

Former Congressman Tawney Says He Has No Plans.

Winona.—Former Congressman James A. Tawney of Winona has no intention of entering a law partnership with Attorney General Simpson at Minneapolis, and at this time he is not setting his lines with the idea of regaining a seat in Congress. He says there is absolutely no truth in the rumors to that effect, which found their way into print in the Twin Cities during his visit there last week.

"I have not seen George Simpson since my return from Congress, and the first I heard was the proposed law partnership was when my attention was called to an article in a Twin City paper while in Minneapolis," said the former congressman today. "There is absolutely no truth in that report, and I have not the least idea where it originated."

Mr. Tawney declared the talk that he was looking longingly upon a promised berth if the reapportionment bill giving Minnesota another congressman is passed by Congress, is the concoction of an imaginative mind. He said he is not now in politics and has made no plans to get back. He said that when the time comes, if it ever does, when he seeks favors from the voters he will tell the people what he wants.

SEEKS TO DODGE LOSSES.

Wheat Speculator Refuses to Pay When Hit By Market.

Moorhead.—Alleging that speculation in wheat is gambling and that on this account he cannot be held liable for debts incurred in this manner, Louis Hicks, of Hickson,, twelve miles south of here, is now fighting the claim of Atwood, Stone & Co., a grain commission house of Minneapolis, for $1,000 which the commission asserts is due for margins.

Louis Hicks and his brother Ole live at Hickson, south of this city and are large grain dealers. The testimony introduced in yesterday's trial showed that Louis Hicks went to Minneapolis Atwood to buy 10,000 bushels of December wheat on margins. In October he wrote him to purchase a second 10,000 bushels of December. Atwood bought the wheat, but the price steadily dropped. When Hicks' money ran out the Minneapolis office of the commission house telephoned and wired repeatedly for more margins, but their messages were disregarded by Louis Hicks.

During this time Hicks would not give orders to sell. At last the commission house sold the wheat at a loss of $1,500. It is now suing Louis Hicks to recover the $1,500.

TAKEN TO PRISON.

Walker Man Didn't Appreciate Kindness of Judge Stanton.

Walker.—John Wells, whose little joke with the judge kept him out of prison for a time, was taken to Stillwater as a result of his hilarity over his freedom. Wells, with the county jail, charged with being with drunken Indians and with aiding them in securing liquor.

At Judge Stanton was going through the jail Wells courteously asked him if he had ever served time and exclaimed "Have a Little Pity." Next day, when brought into district court, Wells pleaded guilty to the charge and the judge gave him his freedom with a six-month suspended sentence tied to it.

Wells then went to Cass Lake and commenced to celebrate. He changed his name from "Have a Little Pity" to "A Hot Time in the Old Town," and ended up in the Cass Lake jail while he was awaiting the next term of court. Judge Stanton was notified and forthwith instructed the deputy sheriff to take Wells back to Walker. From here he was taken to Stillwater to commence that six months' sentence.

THREE SUITS AGAINST CITY.

Rochester, Defendant in Trio of Cases Involving Damages.

Rochester.—When the June term of the district court of Olmsted county is in session the city of Rochester will be the defendant in three suits.

The Laird-Norton Lumber company has commenced action against the city for $7,500, with interest, for coal delivered by the company and burned in the electric light plant, a controversy having arisen over the quality of the contract, which has held up the payment for the coal.

The heirs of N. P. Olsen, deceased, an old resident of the city, have started an action for $5,000 damages against Rochester as it is alleged that a Gillman's death was caused by a fall on a defective sidewalk.

On October 29 Jane Tierney fell off a stone pier near Mayo park into the Zumbro river and was drowned, and the widow has commenced an action to recover $7,000 damages. All three suits will come up at the June term of court.

SEEK MEMBERS OF MOB.

Freeborn County District Court Inquires Into Freeman Assaults.

Albert Lea.—The summer term of the district court for Freeborn county is on here. There is a large calendar with work enough to keep the court busy a fortnight. The grand jury was charged by Judge Kingsley, and the greatest work that body will have to do will be to ascertain the names of the men which formed and feathered Dr. J. P. Freeman of Glenville a few weeks ago.

FLOGGING IS SANCTIONED

COMPROMISE FIXES 15 LASHES AS MAXIMUM.

Control Body Refuses to Depose Supt. Whittier, Despite Governor.

St. Paul.—Corporel punishment at the state training school for boys has been officially sanctioned by the state board of control. In a report filed by Governor Eberhart, H. A. Whittier, superintendent of the Red Wing institution, whose conduct was investigated by the recent legislature, is practically upheld. The board announced it had laid down specific regulations under which corporel punishment is to be conducted in the future, and places the responsibility in the superintendent.

This action is taken as a challenge to Governor Eberhart, who demanded that Superintendent Whittier be removed and that corporel punishment be abolished.

In its report filed in the governor's office the board recommends continuation of corporel punishment in a "judicious measure." Fifteen lashes is set as the maximum punishment to be administered to any inmate under the new ruling. The attendants are cautioned in addition to take great care not to injure the boys. It is specifically provided that all punishment must be under the direct supervision of the superintendent.

The board calls attention to the opinion of Attorney General Simpson and states that under its opinion no valid reason for the dismissal of Mr. Whittier appears. The governor is asked to note the fact that the legislative investigation committee did not reveal any specific charges as might be placed at the disposal of the board in ouster proceedings.

SYNOD HOLDS SESSION.

Evangelical Lutheran Conference Holds Annual Meet at Lindstrom.

Lindstrom.—The Central conference of the Evangelical Lutheren Synod of the Northwest held its fourteenth annual conference at the Trinity church in this city. Rev. J. Sander, L. H. D., and about fifteen pastors from various cities and villages in the Northwest were in attendance.

The Central Conference of the Northwestern Synod includes Minnesota, the Dekotas, Montana and part of Canada. The conference opened its exercises with by Rev. Dr. A. F. Ellmquist, of Minneapolis.

At the business meeting the pastor read the report and all reports and special business was disposed of, after which the reports from the different fields were read and conSidered.

The following pastors were in attendance: Rev. Mr. Ellmquist, Rev. Mr. Trehert, Rev. Mr. Gruber and Rev. Mr. Beck, Minneapolis; Rev. Mr. Beates, Rev. Mr. Schnur, St. Paul; Rev. Mr. Helms, North St. Paul; Dr. Krause, Chicago; Rev. F. E. Jenson, Chicago; Rev. Mr. Haupt, Albert Lea, and Rev. Mr. Rockay, St. Paul.

FISH SUPPLY DIMINISHED.

Low Water and Hard Freezing of Past Winter Kills Many.

Fergus Falls.—The fishing season has now opened here, and considerable interest is being taken in the question whether the low water and the hard freezing of the past winter has seriously reduced the fish supply.

Otter Tail county has about 1,000 lakes, large and small, and fishing is an important industry here. Those who have investigated find fish have not suffered in the larger lakes, but in some of the smaller ones have fared badly. When some of these smaller lakes were cleared of ice, dead fish came to the surface by hundreds, and were scattered along the shores to such an extent as to make the neighborhood disagreeable. In the larger lakes, however, the fishing is as good as ever, and many who went out Sunday returned, with the limit allowed by law.

FINDS STOLEN HORSES.

Newfolden.—Sheriff Forsberg has been in the vicinity this week, as well as around Viking, picking up horses that have been sold here by a horse thief during his past weeks.

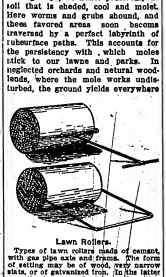
About two years ago a man named Carter purchased a quarter section of land near Viking. Only a short time ago he brought to this farm a number of horses, cattle and harness, saying he had brought them from his Dekota farm. He began to sell them and in a little while had them all except his into cash, when he deperted for parts unknown.

The two area of the purchasers were opened a few days ago when a North Dakota man came over and claimed them, saying they were stolen in his home state. The sheriff has been busy since collecting them, but no trace has been found of Carter.

MUST FACE MURDER CHARGE.

Harry Albrecht, of St. Cloud, Indictee for Homicide in First Degree.

St. Cloud.—The Stearns county grand jury in session here, returned an indictment against Harry G. Albrecht for murder of Charles O'Brien at a dance in this city December 26, 1910. Albrecht was intoxicated, and being knocked down by O'Brien, went out and returned with a revolver, meeting his victim on the stairs and mortally wounding him.



FARM AND ROAD IMPROVEMENT

ALWAYS KEEP LAWN ROLLED

Repeated Leveling Tends to Discourage Destructive Moles and Prevents Injury to Grass.

The labyrinth of tunnels constructed by the mole serves as passageways for several species of mice and other small mammals not favored by nature, with the means of digging runways of the latter. For this reason little is due the credit for most of the damage to seeds, roots, and tubers encountered in the soil, and not to the mole himself.

While the mole seeks out the highest and dryer spots for his home and his highways, he hunts preferably in soil that is shaded, cool and moist. Here worms and grubs abound, and these favored areas soon become traversed by a perfect labyrinth of underground paths. This accounts for the persistency with , which moles stick to our lawns and parks. In neglected orchards and natural woodlands, where the mole works undisturbed, the ground yields everywhere

Lawn Rollers.

Types of lawn rollers made of cement, with gas pipe axle and frame. The form of the one on the left is made of wood staves, or of galvanized iron. In the latter case the form may be left on the roller. The dimensions of the roller should be about 18 inches long, by about 12 inches in diameter.

to the trees, giving evidence of the presence of runways under the leaves or matted grass.

Frequent and thorough rolling of the lawn furrowed by mole ridges, will have a good effect.

Repeated leveling of the mole ridges on a lawn by means of a suitable roller not only tends to discourage the animals from making further inroads on the premises, but prevents that injury to the grass roots which would otherwise have resulted, and makes the lawn always appear sightly. A practical and substantial roller for this purpose may be made of cement, with gas-pipe axle and handles. It should weigh about 200 pounds.

BAD ROADS AND SMALL LOADS

Same Principle Applies to Farmer With His Team as to Railroader With His Locomotive.

(By WALTER R. LEUTZ.)

The president of a western railroad shows what he considers the relation between good roads and bed mean to the farmer, by some facts releting to his own road.

He says that 12 years ago the railroad was able to handle only 110 cars to the train, the locomotive in one in a train. This was made possible through improvement of track, engines and cars, which additional improvement has cost many millions of dollars.

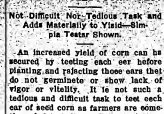
The same principle applies to the farmer with his team as to the railroad man with his locomotive. Our country has some of the best railroads and some of the worst wagon roads. If the wagon roads were improved so the former could have a continuous good road from the farm to the market, he would be able to pay the cost from the increase in cash in a very few years.

Good roads cost big money, it is true—about a billion dollars for 500,000 miles of macadam—and we cannot expect wagon roads for nothing. But material is secured, to stand this expense, but we do maintain that the common dirt road of the south and west can be improved 50 per cent—meds possible during the rainy seasons and fit to carry good loads at all times and at very small expense.

Drainage by tile and ditch, the concentration of the line of travel, etc., practically nothing, would, in three years, convert thousands of miles of bog into fine highways and add millions to the incoms of the farmers.

Adulterated Alfalfa Seed.

Alfalfa seed is subject to adulteration with cheaper seeds closely resembling it, and the great danger lies in the fact that with the adulterations some noxious weeds may be introduced which will cause endless trouble and work in the future.



Grow Vegetables Quickly.

Vegetables to grow quickly and be tender, require a rich soil, either naturally fertile or made so. If the soil is rather sterile it should receive a coat of well-rotted manure each fall after everything is removed.

VALUE OF SEED CORN TEST

Not Difficult Nor Tedious Task and Adds Materially to Yield—Simple Tester Shown.

An increased yield of corn can be secured by testing each ear before planting and rejecting those ears that do not germinate or show lack of vigor or vitality. It is not such a tedious and difficult task to test each ear of seed corn as farmers are sometimes led to believe. Fifteen average ears of corn will plant one acre using four kernels to the hill, placing the corn three and one-half feet apart between the rows. When the importance of planting ear-tested seed corn is fully realized few farmers will plant corn without first submitting it to the test.

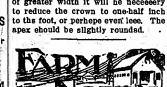
Simple Box Tester.

Upon muslin cloth squares are drawn and numbered, upon which are laid the grain from each ear to be tested. When the tester is finished, as shown at the left, is placed on top to keep the grain moist.

KEEP RATS OUT OF GRANARY

Floor Plastered One and One-Half Inches Thick With Cement Gives Entire Satisfaction.

(By H. M. RICE.)



I bed a bin in my granary that I had been using for corn and oats. The rats cut the floor so full of holes that it would scarcely hold corn cobs. I nelled small pieces of boarde over the holse and then mixed up some cement one to three and plastered that floor all over 1½ inches thick, first watting the floor thoroughly. I used the lime left over from my several times since and it is in perfect condition. The rats heve not touched it since. This bin is used only four feet wide and of course for a large grenary one would heve to cut the cement in blocks to keep it from checking.

MAKE GOOD MACADAM ROADS

Highway Should Be Crowned in Order to Allow Water to Run Quickly to Gutters.

Every macadam road should be crowned, in order that the water falling upon it may run quickly to the gutters. It is also necessary that the shoulder roads should have the same slope as the mecadam or perhaps e little greater.

For a road 15 feet or less in width it will be found cetisfectory to have the center 6½ inches higher than the sides, forming a crown of three quarters of an inch to the foot. On roads of greater width it will be necessory to reduce the crown to one-half inch to the foot, or perhepe even less. The apex should be slightly rounded.

FARM NOTES

Long, straight garden rows make cultivation easier.

Poultry droppings make the fertilizer for the onion bed.

Sweet corn is e very profitable crop. One reason for this is because it is so easily Handled.

Do not plow when the ground is wet. When thie is done the soil is compacted into hard lumps.

When clover can be grown, profitable crops can be grown and the land kept up by clover and lime.

Some can be planted any time in June and some of the quick growing varieties as late as July 15.

Spring beans should be drilled in double row six inches apart with just enough space between to allow for cultivation.

The onion le akin to the turnip and cebbege, you must see that the roots are not in the ground, but need not be so particuler about the hulb.

An authority says that potatoes should be planted in hills. It is much better to plant them in deep furrows and keep the ground level.

From early spring until August set a few rows of summer letuce every two weeks or so, and thus try to provide a continuous supply of good heede.

Potash salts is the general name applied to the various salts of potash that are mined in lerge quantities about tha town of Stassfurt, Germany.

Pie plent is a good commercial vegetable. The demand for it on the city markets is good. It is little trouble and can be shipped well, standing almost any distance.

The "Tristeer" is the name of one of the newest varieties of watermelons. These melons are just right in size to be served whole to one person, iset as cantaloupes are.

In general, commence spraying potatoes when the plents are six or eight inches high, and repeet the treatment at intervals of 10 to 14 days in order to keep the plants well covered with Bordeaux throughout the season.

MUNYON'S PAW-PAW PILLS

TRADE MARK

A trial package of Munyon's Paw Paw Pills will be sent free to anyone on request. Address: Professor Munyon, 53d & Jefferson Sts., Philadelphia, Pa. If you are in need of medical advice, do not fail to write Professor Munyon. Your communication will be treated in strict confidence, and your case will be diagnosed as carefully as though you had a personal interview.

Munyon's Paw Paw Pills are unlike all other laxatives or cathartics. They coax the liver into activity by gentle methods. They do not scour, they do not gripe, they do not weaken, but they do start all the secretions of the liver and stomach in a way that soon puts these organs in a healthy condition and corrects constipation. In my opinion constipation is responsible for most ailments. There are 20 feet of human bowels, which is really a sewer pipe. When this pipe becomes clogged the whole system becomes poisoned, causing headache, indigestion and impure blood, which often produces rheumatism and kidney ailments. No woman who suffers with constipation or any liver ailment can expect to have a good complexion or enjoy good health. If I had my way I would prohibit the sale of nine-tenths of the cathartics that are now being sold for the reason that they not only destroy the lining of the stomach, setting up serious forms of indigestion, and so paralyze the bowels that they refuse to act unless forced by strong purgatives.

Munyon's Paw Paw Pills are a tonic to the stomach, liver and nerves. They invigorate instead of weaken; they cure the blood instead of impoverish it; they enable the stomach to get all the nourishment from food that is put into it.

These pills contain no calomel, no dope; they are absolutely harmless and stimulating. They school the bowels to act without physic.

Regular size bottle, containing 45 pills, 25c. Munyon's Home Directory, 53d & Jefferson Sts., Philadelphia.

100 YEARS OLD

Pettit's Eye Salve

THE SUNBEAM.

BY W. G. HUNT.

Published every Friday, at Sunbeam, Pennington County, Minnesota.

Subscription price $1.00 per year in advance. If not paid in advance $1.50

Entered as Second-class matter August 30 1905, at the post office at Sunbeam Minn. under the Act of Congress of March 3, 1879

We attended the government sale held at Crookston last Monday, of the vacant lands on the eleven townships and was surprised to see such a rush for the land, and but fifty percent of the bids were residents of this locality. A good many of them were young men who expected to settle here five and six years ago who were not old enough at that time to make homesteads. We have seen a number of openings of land for homestead entry at the Crookston Land Office when there was a rush to file, but the one last Monday was the best managed of any we ever saw, and the land office officials are entitled to the credit of taking care of a rush and filing them so fast that they did not care who filed first. There was a number of instances where several parties wanted the same land but they were all registered and numbered and each man had to wait until his turn came. Chief of police Creamer was on hand with a sufficient force to keep good order and see that all had an equal chance. There was several contests started and the land attorneys will have a harvest for the next year.

The Secret Test.

"How," the president of the Fat Man's club was asked, "did you prevent fraud among your applicants for membership? Didn't some men try to get in that weren't up to the standard weight?"

"Yes," the portly officer replied, "but it was no use. Applications had to be presented in person at the Polk building, fifth floor. There was no elevator. The applicant climbed the five flights of stairs.

"At the top he met a man who asked, 'Were you looking for the Fat Man's club?'

"'Yes.'

"'The main office is on the first floor,' the man said. 'Your application is rejected. We receive no men who can climb five flights of stairs.'"—Youth's Companion.

The Last Luxury.

Ten-year-old Arthur had been telling impressively of the number of servants employed in his home. He continued, "And our house is fixed so that if you want a drink or a window raised or to get upstairs or anything all you have to do is to pull a chain."

"But what do you want with so many servants in that sort of a house?" asked one of his hearers.

"Oh," replied Arthur, "we have the servants to pull the chains."—Judge.

"I am all right now, thanks to Dr. Miles' Heart Remedy."

The same relief is ready for you. Are you sure you do not need it? If Dr. Miles' Heart Remedy helped Charles Holmes, why won't it help you?

"I was troubled with heart disease, and after reading about Dr. Miles' Heart Remedy, I got a bottle. Before I got the Heart Remedy I had to sit up most of the night, and felt very bad at my stomach. Whatever I would eat made me feel worse, and my heart beat very fast. But thanks to Dr. Miles' Heart Remedy, I am all right now. I eat good, sleep good, and feel like a new man, although I am almost 68 years old. I have been a soldier in the late war of the rebellion, and was badly wounded." CHARLES HOLMES, Private Co. Seed corn for sale at the big Highlanding store.

Knut Sundahl and Mr. Myre were at the homestead sale at Crookston Monday and bought land in Star township.

Carl Johnson, from St. Hilaire was transacting business in this locality Wednesday and made a pleasent call at this office

Torgel Lofthus, Gunder Anderson and Osmond Mandt were up from DeerPark Saturday and made application to make final proof.

Talfak Lindtvedt and John Mostrom, not only bought land at Crookston Monday, but they also bought a complete thresh ing rig.

Gunder Asbjorinson and neighbors, of Malcne, will get their final proofs heard about July 12, as the land office is badly crowded just now.

Ole B. Omlid was down to the land sale Monday and bought 80 acres more land adjoining him, on section 23 in Highlanding. Knut Omlid also bought land.

Don't neglect your cough for a minute when Mark's Lung Balsam is so handy to get. Safe and pleasent to take. Ask your store keeper for it and take no other.

Better stop coughing Mark's Lung Balsam will do it. It contains no opium, it is safe for children. Can be taken several times a day as required for cough.

The Highlanding ferry is now in good condition, and anyone using it when I am not present will please leave the ferry for at Ellingson Bros. as it is not a free ferry.—S. L. Holm, owner.

Mark's Lung Balsam is one of the best medicines for cough, croup, whooping cough, lung throat and chest trouble. Get a bottle at your nearest store, the $1.00 bottle's hold five times as much as the small bottles. Three sizes 25, 50, and $1.00.

Wm. Cousins and pe editor on our way home from Plummer on Tuesday stoped and took dinner with our old friend Dan Carroll, from Polk county, who has a fine farm in the town of Mayfield. He has completed seeding over a hundred acres of croo.

The 1910, Realestate taxes is payable this year at Red Lake Falls and at Thief River Falls, for residents of Pennington county, before June 1st. A penelty of 10 per cent will be added to the tax on June first, if one half is not paid, the other half to be paid before Oct. 31st.

We had a plesent trip to the city of Crookston last Saturday, returning home Tuesday. We did not get a very large farm ont of our first homestead, so we increased the size a little Monday, by geting land that corners with the old homested, which again makes us an Eleven towns homesteader.

Miss May Arndt and H. C. Dobner made a settlement of a contest case last week, whereby Mr. Dobner signed a relinquishment and Miss Arndt homesteaded the land Monday. The land is one of the best farms in the town of Goodridge.

There will certainly be some warm contests on some of the lands filed on last Monday, and the law is badly "mixed." But all the lawyers are agreed that the first man to settle on April 15th, stands the best chance to win out, although it seems to be very easy for any lawyer to fix the law to just fit the case of his client. Taken as a whole we consider it the worst mixed up law that homestead land was ever opened under in northern Minnesota, in fact it has the appearance of having been stirred up with a pudding stick.

Tom Wsale landed a Kratka farm at the land sale Monday.

G. L. Clark was transacting business at Red Lake Falls this week

Halvor Wold came over from Kratka Saturday to make application to make final proof.

Talief Hovid, from McIntosh, bought a quater of land in the town of Star at Monday's sale.

Walter McAndress drove down to St. Hilaire Saturday after a load of feed, returning Monday.

We will publish the report of the Highlanding creamery for the month of March next week.

The warm weather the past week has rushed the groath of the grain very rapidly and the farmers are all busy breaking land for more.

Miss Sophia Heckna was down to Crookston Monday with May Arndt and homesteaded a quater section near enough to hers so they can exchang work in harvest and threshing.

Oscar and Aslak Nesland left Crookston for Fargo Monday evening, where they will work at the carpenter trade. Before going they signed as witnesses for their brother Ole for a warm contest case.

Lattimore says he will probably visit some of the good people of Deer Park this week. He had ought to take "Taft" along and get a feed for him. By the way Jobo, did you get them new tans on your shoes yet? If you take your walking partner telephone ahead to the women folks to prepare dinner for a threshing crew.

ROLAND LOCALS.

News are scarse this week.

Miss Alma Lindberg took her little sister Velida to Crookston Saturday where she will have an operation for pendecitis.

Later: We met Mr. Lindberg at Crookston Monday, and he informed us that the operation had been successful and the prospects of the little girls recovery were good.—Ed.

Miss Maggie Short left for Plummer Monday after her visit with the family of Con Short.

Mrs. G. Boe and children visited with Mrs. K. N. Fore Sunday.

Otto Dahl and Jens Fore made a business trip to Plummer Saturday.

Eddie Arveson made a trip to Crookston Saturday to file on land.

The Oklee base ball club will come up to Roland next Sunday and play a match game with the Lillo nine. All come and see a fine game of ball.

There was a little surprise party for Miss Ida Lillo, gotten up by her school scholars Saturday evening, and she received a present of a fine set of dishes. All of them spent a plesent evening.

Ben Rindahl from Neptune made a business trip to Oklee Monday.

Eddystone Lighthouse.

The Eddystone lighthouse, fourteen miles off Plymouth, England, and exposed to the full fury of the southwestern seas, was built by Winstanley in four seasons. Begun in 1696 and finished in 1700, it was destroyed in the dreadful storm of 1703. The second structure was completed in 1709 and destroyed in 1755, after it had faced the wind and the waves for something over forty-six years. The third tower, finished in 1759 and condemned in 1878, was followed by the present wonderful structure, which since 1882 has been defying the elements while it flashed out over the terrible waters its saving light. Since the brave Winstanley built the first Eddystone lighthouse similar safeguards have sprung up like magic sentinels along all the coasts of all the oceans, and those who sail upon the great deeps of the earth are forewarned and forearmed against the dangers which threaten them.—New York American.

Surprising the Buiack.

In times of crisis and worry a kind word has been known to have surprisingly good results. The unexpectedness of such a word is perhaps the secret of its force. A late book, "Of the Wool Track," backs the moral with an anecdote.

A team was working on the Broken Hill road, and a bullock—the Bestenbah of the team—had gone obstinate, and the coach was passing. The whip was swinging, and some apt remarks were just forming in the back of the teamster's tongue when he caught sight of a clerical hat on the front seat and just in time thought better of it. He coughed politely.

"Ahem!—Strawberry," he said, "just caught."

To his delight Bobbinbirkett Blewbury proceeded.

American and Garmati Firemen.

A Hamburg fireman of distinction who had occasion to visit the United States some years ago returned full of admiration for the splendid way in which American fire companies usually respond to alarms and was of the opinion that the American companies were ready for action more promptly than those in Germany, because the individual suits subordinated everything else to the point of leaving quarters at the earliest possible instant, in do which the American fireman at night would slide down the pole partially clad and was indifferent as to his appearance in riding to the scene of the fire as long as he was on the spot to meet the emergency. The European fireman, on the other hand, having had military training, would be inclined to avoid the pole and would walk down the stairs, devoting a few seconds to the adjustment of his garments, and would be prepared to start only when ready to appear before the public in regulation costume.—Consular Reports.

How Cloves Are Cultivated.

Cloves are now cultivated in many tropical regions. A clove tree begins to bear at the age of ten years and continues until it reaches the age of seventy-five years. There are two crops a year, one in June and another in December. The tree is an evergreen and grows from forty to fifty feet high, with large oblong leaves and crimson flowers at the end of small branches in clusters of from ten to twenty. The tree belongs to the same botanical order as the guava. The cloves, which are the undeveloped buds, are at first white, then light green and at the time of gathering bright red. Pieces of white cloth are spread under the trees at harvesting time, and the branches are beaten gently with bamboo sticks until the cloves drop. They are dried in the sun, being tossed about daily until they attain the rich dark color that proclaims them ready for shipment.—Harper's Weekly.

An Embarrassing Situation.

A young man fresh from the varsity, where he had excelled in athletics, presented himself for ordination. The bishop, as was his custom, entertained the candidates at the palace, and after dinner the usual informal evening party took place. At this function the young man referred to entered into conversation with an affable gentleman in clerical attire whom he found standing in leisurely fashion just within the drawing room door. "Who's that rather scrumptious looking girl on the sofa?" said he. "She's my wife," replied the affable cleric, with an amused smile. The young candidate was silenced for a moment, then he stammered: "I am sure I beg ten thousand pardons! I thought she was the bishop's daughter." "So she is," was the quiet rejoinder, "and I'm his lordship's domestic chaplain."

UNITED STATES COURT OF CLAIMS

The Publishers of Webster's International Dictionary claim that it is in fact the popular Unabridged Dictionary of the English language, and justly entitled to the name, and for the purpose of adapting it to meet the legal and every other requirement of another jurisdiction.

We are of the opinion that this allegation stood clearly and successfully against the world. The Publishers claim that the work which they have thus produced, the International, as it now stands, has been corrected to date by experts and is admirably adapted to meet the legal and every requirements of a dictionary which demands more of popular confidence and reputation than any precedent that has ever been published.

It is perhaps needless to add that we refer to the Dictionary in our judicial work as of the highest authority in accuracy of definition and that in the future as in the past it will be the source of constant reference.

WHERE COLLEGE SPIRIT RULES STRONG

By EDWARD B. CLARK

WHEN William H. Talt was a candidate for the Republican nomination for president soma newspaper paragraphar seld that doubtless every delegate to the convention who claimed Yale as his alma mater would vote for the nomination of Mr. Taft, no matter what his instructions were from the people who made him a delegate.

Of course this paragraph was jocose, but Yala men seem to be particularly loyal to the president of the United States, and it is a curious thing to note that the loyalty of the men ol all colleges to graduates of their institutions is marked in Washington. Every official of high position seems to have the enthusiastic support ol the graduates of the school which sent him out into the world with a sheepskin under his arm, and parly polities seem to cut no figura et all in the matter.

Of course the Yale men are not all for Taft, for Yale has turned ont men of all parties, and men to whom party means much more than mere personality. It may he, however, thet Mr. Taft, if he runs again, will get the vote nt the polls—conventions' vote not considered—of every man who was a member of his class at the New Haven school. They say in Washington—and some of the president's classmates live here—that he was as popular with his classmates as eny man whom they claimed as their own, perhaps more popular, hut the Yale men don't care to make comparisons that might seem invidious.

The Yale men who were at school with tha president and who came to Washington to visit, always make straight for the White House. This means something more than that Mr. Taft is simply a holder of a hig public offica.

If n person wants to learn how popularity at school or uopopularity at school lasts through life let him make a study, if he can find the opportunity, of the standing today ol some men in the army and navy. There are in one or the other of the twin services today men who have splendid records as officers, and yet who would give over several pnges lrom their efficiency records if they could writa tho word "popular" in tha seem invidious.

W. W. RUSSELL

WAS PROMPTLY POKED IN THE EYE BY THE BONY HAND OF PETE'S SKELETON

There are soldiers and sailors of high rank, men gray in service and gray in years who have never been able to live down some little act of their lives at either the naval or military acadamy which made them unpopular with their fellows, and the effect of which lasts to this day.

Naming no names and giving no spacific case with data and circumstances it may be said that in one of the greatest controversies which ever vexed the service one man won out with the country, hut did not win out with his fellow officers, and be did not win out with them simply becnuse they thought that the thing he was charged with doing was in keeping with one act he committed as a boy, an act that lost him standing with his lellow students.

At West Point and Annapolis they have a habit of "cutting" the boy who bears tales, or who shows a streak of timidity that is called hy a harsher word, or who does some other thing that hoys in their boyish humor do not like. When a man graduates and gets into the service he is no longer "cut," hut his society is not sought, and as a result perhaps of a mere momentary weakness, or a mere monentary thoughtlessness, a whole career from the social point of view may be hlasted. There are some cases in the army and navy today, and a pretty fair measure by which to judge of a man's personality is the measure of regard in which he is held in latar lifa hy the men who went to school with him in the day of the boy.

William W. Russell not long ago was this government's envoy extraordinary and minister plenipotentiary to Venezuela. He was in tha South American country at the tima of the strained relations which existed for a while hetween Uncle Snm and Praident Castro.

William W. Russell is popular tn the navy and his popularity dates hack to his school days. He is a gravs diplomat with a light in his eya that neither gravity nor position can put out. But he was not always a grave one hurdened with the affairs of state. Once upon a time ha was "Pete" Russall, midshipman at tha United States naval acadamy. William was changed into "Pete" the minute that he reported at Annapolis, hut truth compels tha statemant that naither the official archives nor tha middiss' archives disclose the reason for turning William into "Pate." Suffice is to know that the middies would hava it that way, and that way it went.

Soms tima ago I had dinner with a graduate of Annapolis whn had known William W. Russell in his "Pete" days at the academy. Midshipman Russell did not gradnate, hut he was long enough nt the academy to leave his mark npon the institution and to make his memory dwell lovingly tn the hearts of succeeding ganarations of middies. Possibly some of the stories that the graduate told of Pete's school deys may account in some measura for the fact that he became a diplomat instead of hecoming a salt.

Midshipman Russell had a way with him, and the middies and the authorities were not long in finding it out. Pete had difficulty in restraining himself on occasions, as witness:

One Sunday at Annapolis the chaplain preached long and droningly. The listening middies were tired out with the heat of the day and the hurden of the sarmon, which lasted one hour and ten minntes. The sermon over, the soloist in the choir, nndaterred and nndismayed hy the langth of the chaplain's discourse, started in to sing "Sun of My Soul." He went through tha first line untrippingly and then struck intn tha second. "It la not night," he sang. Then he repeated, "It is not night," and repeated tt egain after tha mannsr of soloists who don't know when the listenars hava had enough and having a good hold ara loath to let go.

Tha sarmon and the song got on Pete Russell's nerves. He sat in the middla saat of a pew in the vary middle of the corps of midshipmen with officers at the front, at both flanks and at the reer. Under the strain of the thing Pete stood up, whistled melodiously, hut very loudly tha tuna accompanying the third and fourth lines of the first stanza of "Sun of My Soul," and then before the bewildered and shocked officers could put in an interference, he calmly commanded tha soloist "to get a move on him."

They grahbed Pete out from his middle pew seat and marchad him down the aisle undar guard. When tha corps was dismissad and was marching hack to the harracks Pate was going in the opposita direction headed for tha prison ship, Snntee, with his hooks and his hlanket swung over his shoulder.

As he passed the marching middias and the officers in command he was heard loudly soliloquizing, with his head wall down in counterfeit abjectness:

"Poor Peta, poor Pate, hreakers right undar poor Pete's how."

Once upon a time Pete set to work during his idle hours and constructed a skeleton more fearfully and wonderfully made than any man. Pete knew tha peculiarities of a cartain inspecting officer whose hahit it was on entering a midshipman's room to see if all was well and ordarly, to pull the door hack with a sudden jark and to look hehind it for traces of sweepings, for it was a common hahit with midshipman to sweep things hehind the door in the hope that they would pass unnoticed.

Pete finished his skaleton and hy the axercise of nothing less than devilish ingenuity ha snceeded in so adjusting it that whsn tha door was given a sharp, quick jerk, the thing would driva its fist straight into the eye of tha man who did the jerking. It wasn't intentional on Pete's part, for he simply forgot, hut he went to recitation one morning, the morning that the skeleton had heen put up, and left his roommate, who didn't know that tha skeleton behind the door was in existence, to suffer any consequenca which might come The inspecting officer came and gava the door a jerk and was promptly poked tn tha eye hy the bony hand of Pete's skaleton.

The officer instantly marched Pete's roommate, all innocent that he was, to the Santee, where he was locked up. In three hours the roommate haard some shuffling steps outside his prison door. Looking out he saw Pete with his books and his hlanketa coming to shere his duranca.

"Whet's the mattar, Pete?" ha nsked.

"Nothing," said Pate, "only I forgot to taka that d——d skalaton down."

Whsn William W. Russall first want to Vanezuela in a suhordinata diplomatic capecity, an Amarican naval officer who knaw him wall, who likad him, end who had memories of the diplomat's pranks et Annnpolis, concluded that Pata should hava a proper recsption, hut it ls neadlass to say that he didn't take Pete into his confidenca.

When Russell, newly accredited to the "court" of President Castro, drova from his hotel to the presidential palace in an opan carriage and wearing a hlack frock and high hat of diplomacy, he was graeted in the middla of avery hlock and at avary street corner with vociferous chesrings from all the street gamins that Caracas possassed. The mighty cry thet want up almost constantly from hotal to palaca was:

"Viva Pata Russall."

It is said that William W. Russall's memory was cherished at the naval academy. His name ls hald in remamhranca, so strongly tn remembrance that no midshipman named Russall who has antered the acedemy in the nearly 30 years which have alapsad since our formar Venezualan minister sevarad his school connaction has escapad the name "Pete."

Missouri Mules for Africa

By tha steamship Welsh Princa, which arrived in Capa Town the first week of February, says the Daily Consular and Trade Report, thera cams a shipmant of Amarican mulas which, hy those competent to know, are adjudged to he the finest mules yat landad in South Africa.

They wara purchasad hy a wall-known local farmer, who toured the state of Missouri to get them on hahalf of Brice Bros. of Springs, who hold the contract for the supply of mules to the Johanneshurg corporation. Tha shipment consists of 124 mulas, all of which are four to seven years of age and stand 15 hands in height, this haing the stipulation mada hy tha corporation, who further stipulated that they must all he hred in the state of Missouri, which ls in such high repute as a mule hreeding country.

A representative of the South African News had an opportunity of seaing the shipment, and ha states that thay ara a magnificant lot and have stood the trip from America well. Seven days were required for their railway transportation to the American port, 30 dnys at sea, with three mora days to Johannesburg.

On one occasion a heavy sea was shipped and portions of tha mule hoxas washed away. The captain of tha vessel slowed the vessal down for threa hours whila tha whola crew arected other hoxas. On the whola voyaga there wns not a casualty, and, considering the time the mules had been on the journey, they looked well and fit. This is the second shipment that Brice Bros. have hrought. According to a local daalar, the mnles just imported ara worth £100 ($486.65) to £120 ($583.98) a pair in Cape Town.

"If we could hreed mnles lika those in this country," said a South African authority, "our fortunes would ha made." The huyer stated that mules were very dear in Missouri, £40 ($194.66) each haing considered an avarage prica, and whila in Missouri ha saw ona pair which realized $3,000.

Superstitious Racing Man

Last year Mr. Fairie did not enter his famons three-year-old, Lemberg, for the Newmarket Biennial, says London Answers.

It is an odd fact that no winner of the Biennial has ever been successfnl in winning the Derhy, and consequantly a superstition has grown up that the race is an unlucky ona for Derhy aspirants. Whether Mr. Fairie was influenced hy this superstition or not tt is impossihla to say, hut at any rate Lemherg was not entered.

Trainers, taking them all round, nre a practical, hard-headed lot, with a few snperstitions; hut jockeys as wall as the racing puhlic at large, have a large share of superatitious beliefs.

Most jockeya have their favorite courses. Fred Archer, for instance, praferred Epsom to any other and certainly it wes the scene of his graatest triumphs. On tha other hand, ha disliked Manchester and ha was not alone in his avarsion to it.

The lata Tom Loates always said that ha felt something would happen to him at Manchsster, and eventnally he did hava a fearful smash there and lay in hospital for many weaks.

Wells, who rode the Derhy winner twice running, wonld nevar ride withont a potato in his pocket. The potato had heen given to him as a child hy an old woman who was supposad to ha a witch. It was hardly larger than a hig pea and as hard as a stone. He helieved that it hrought him luck.

ECZEMA BROKE OUT ON BABY

"When my hahy was two months old, she had eczemn and rash very hadly. I noticed that her face and body hroke out very suddenly, thick, and red as a coal of fire. I did not know what to do. The doctor ordered castile soap and powders, hut they did no good. She would scratch, as it itched, and she cried, and did not sleep for mora than a week. One dey I saw in tha paper the advertisement of the Cuticura Soap and Cuticura Ointment, so I got tham nnd tried them at once. My hahy's faca was as a cake of sores.

"Whan I first used tha Cuticura Soap and Cuticura Ointment, I could see a difference. In color it was raddar. I continued with them. My hahy was in a terrihle condition. I usad the Cuticura Remedies (Soap and Ointment) four timas a day, and in two weeks sha was quita wall. Tha Cuticura Remedies healed her skin parfectly, and har skin is now pratty and fina through using thsm. I also usa the Cuticura Soap today, and will continue to, for it makes a lovaly skin. Every mother should use tha Cuticura Remedies. They are good for all sores, and tha Cuticura Soap is also good for shampooing the hair, for I have triad it. I tell all my friends how the Cuticura Soap and Ointment cured my hehy of eczama and rash." (Signed) Mrs. Drew, 210 W. 18th St., Naw York city, Aug. 26, 1910.

Barbara of the Beach

By PHILIP KEAN

(Copyright, 1911, by Associated Literary Press.)

"Father, you shouldn't have let me spend so much at school when all of you needed things—you shouldn't."

She knelt beside the big chair, and with her face against the rough collar of his coat, sobbed out her protest.

"There, there," he smoothed her crisp curls with his big hand. "It was the failure of the peach crop, girlie, and money has been so scarce."

"I didn't dream," was her renewed explanation, "and I have been going on as if we were millionaires."

"Not quite that, but you were dipping in pretty heavy, so your mother and I thought it would be best for you to square your shoulders to poverty, like the rest of us."

"Of course. Mother can let Chloe go, and I'll do the cooking."

"Not so fast," her father warned. "You'll have all the work you need to help mother with the kiddies, and we'll all have to lead the simple life, Babbie."

"You will see how economical I can be."

As the months passed, however, Barbara was convinced that economy could be carried no further. They had let Chloe go, two of their daily meals consisted largely of fruit, and the third often lacked meat. The problem of making ends meet was heavy.

The climax came one Monday morning, when the little mother was kept in bed by a headache, and Barbara went to her father for orders.

"Father, everything has given out, and you won't let me ask for credit at the store."

"No," sharply. "I guess it has come to bread and water, Babbie. I must have every penny to put in the orchards. It means our living next year, you know."

"If I could only earn something—"

"No, not yet," he caught her fingers in his, "you are too young."

"I am sixteen."

"Too young," he repeated.

"Do you think it is too hot for soup for lunch? There are some vegetables left—odds and ends."

"Anything to satisfy the children—I can eat lettuce and bread and be cheerful."

He smiled at her so brightly that she kissed him and cried: "You are a wonder!" Then, with the inspiration of his high courage, she put her whole heart and soul into the making of the soup.

Want for a Walk Through the Long Land of Pines.

After lunch she went for a walk through the long lane of places which led to the beach. The wind, blowing from the south, brought with it a warmth which made most of the guests of the summer hotels retire to their rooms, and the porches were deserted. A few bathers faced the purple vistas. A half dozen hooded chairs, set on the sands, protected a little company of old ladies who, at no other hour of the day, dared to brave the elements. Up the beach the ladies played under the cars of languid nurses.

As she walked among the little folk, Barbara was struck by the wistfulness of most of the childish faces. As young things will do, they carried their treasures of seaweed and shell to their nurses, only to be met by cold-eyed indifference. Barbara, understanding their needs, smiled at them, and was soon the center of a circle.

"Let's build a sand castle with a moat," was her enlivening suggestion.

It was all very fascinating, the old ladies were delighted, and a certain tall young man, lounging languidly in a chair, watched with interest the efforts of the very charming and energetic girl.

"Say 'thank you,' Toddiekins," he told his small sister, "and ask her to come again."

"Please," begged Toddiekins, and Barbara promised.

But the next day her mother was not well, and the day after it stormed, and the day after that there was baking to be done, and it was while Barbara was rolling out little cakes that Toddiekins appeared at the back door.

"By big brother and I want you to come down to the beach and play," she announced, "and make forts and things."

"But, darling," Barbara pleaded, "I am making cookies."

"Oh!" said Toddiekins, ruefully. Then she peered around the corner of the porch. "Oh, dear Brother Bobs come here, my lovely lady is making cookies."

He came rather sheepishly, "Toddiekins was yearning for him," he explained.

"I should like," Toddiekins ventured, "to ask for a cookie. May I, Brother Bobs?"

"They're not baked, dearie," Barbara said, "but in ten minutes they will be ready. If you don't mind waiting?" She put the question to the smiling young man.

"I would wait ten years," he said with alacrity.

The little cakes were served in the arbor outside, with a pitcher of cold milk to accompany them.

"I went you to meet dad," Barbara said, as she brought the good things out on a tray. "Mother isn't well."

The shabby old man regarded the wayfarers heartily.

"Stopping at the big hotel?" he asked. "Well, now, you must come over often, mustn't they, Bebs?"

"Is that what you call her?" Toddiekins asked, curiously. "Why, I call my big brother Boha. It's just as if their names were made for each, isn't it?"

They laughed at that, and big brother Bobs said:

"I feel as if we had imposed on your hospitality—but we couldn't resist the cookies. And now you must let me take you out in my car. This afternoon, shall it be?"

It was a pleasant thing to see dad's shabbiness and mother's weariness and Barbara's responsibilities forgotten as they sped away in the big automobile.

Barbara sat beside the driver and he told her of the death of Toddiekins' mother, his favorite sister, and of the tragic drowning of the child's father a year later, and so the little ones was in his care, and that of a nurse.

"I try to be everything to her," he said.

"But you have money—everything is easy, with plenty of money."

"Money will not bring back mother-love and father-love to Toddiekins."

"Forgive me," Barbara said quickly, "but lately it has seemed as if there isn't anything worth thinking of but money. Last year the peach crop failed, and that's our living, so I had to come home from school and help."

"Life ought to be made easy for you," he said.

Six weeks later he asked her to marry him.

She looked at him with startled eyes. "Oh, what must you think of me? I have talked of my poverty, of my needs of money—but I never dreamed of this."

"I think of nothing but my happiness."

She shook her head. "I would always feel that I had been bought."

"Then you don't love me?"

"I don't know. Oh, please go away and don't ask me."

After that Toddiekins came alone.

Barbara, plodding through the dreary days, made up her mind to many things.

"Dad, I am going to see if I can't find something to do," she announced one morning. "I am going to the city."

"Oh, girlie—"

She told him of the love she had put out of her life, so he asked for the last time: "You think you couldn't marry him, girlie?"

"Oh, I must not; I must not."

The next day she sought work in the great town. She ate her dinner in a cheap restaurant, for she dreaded to go to the poor room which she had rented for a week.

"How am I going to stand it?" was her thought.

Somebody sat down opposite her, but her eyes were so blurred with tears that she did not see who it was. Then some one said, "Oh, Babs, Babs, I have found you."

"Do you think ? will let you drag your life in such an existence?" he demanded later, as they walked through the electric lighted streets. "You love me, Babs. It was in your eyes when you looked up and saw me."

"Hat—"

"There are no 'buts' if you know I was poor, Babs. If you knew that marriage would mean struggle and hardship and sorrow, would you say 'no?'"

They dined later at a wonderful and exclusive hotel, and Babs' shabbiness was relieved by the resplendence of a large bunch of violets, and by a diamond circlet on her third finger.

KIDNEY TROUBLE CAUSES LUMBAGO

Remarkable Story About Great Remedy

I cannot refrain from writing to say that your Swamp-Root has benefited me greatly. Last year I had a severe attack of lumbago. Was bad for a long time, and on seeing your advertisement, I determined to give it a trial. I did so and in two weeks was cured. I gave a bottle to a poor woman who could scarcely walk. She came to me in four days to tell me she was all right and most thankful. I had another attack last November and was so bad that I could not rise from my chair without assistance and could hardly lace up my boots. I at once sent for more Swamp-Root and after taking two bottles, I am more than glad that I am well again. My age being seventy-three, I am the more convinced of the excellence of Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root.

She—I heard Freddy Fickle has decided to merry end settle down to a particular girl.

He—Huh! She can't be.

Ambiguous.

Obliging Shopmen (to lady who has purchased a pound of butter)—Shall I send it for you, medam?

Lady—No, thank you. It won't be too heavy for me.

Obliging Shopman—Oh, ao, medam, I'll make it as light as f possibly can.—Punch.

Size of the Feet.

Paris just now is having a wave of interest in human feet. Two scientists, Marie and MacAuliffe, recently advanced the observation that the tallest type of men had the biggest feet, while the tallest type of women had the smallest feet. Which has started the houlevardiers to scanning the feet of pedestrians.

Out of 100 normal men these scientists have ascerted that only 18 have small feet, while of 100 insane men only 24 have large feet. These proportions for women are almost exactly the reverse. Out of 100 sane women only 21 have large feet, while of 100 insane women 18 have small feet. On the male side of the proposition the American—long having looked upon Lincoln as one of the sanest, segest of American statesmen—probably will agree with the French scientists.

Socially Launched.

In his native town Jimmy had always been most popular with young and old, but when he was sent away to boarding school, he was for a time too homesick to make friends. His first letter was little more than a wail.

"I'm wey behind the other boys in everything," he wrote, dolefully. "They'r only studies, but it's grammar stun and hanjos and everything. I don't believe they'll ever have much use for me."

But the second letter, written after a week in the new school, was quite different in tone.

"I'm all right," he wrote to his mother. "The boys say they'll teach me all they know, for they're proud to have me here. I can stretch my mouth half an inch wider than any other boy in school, and my feet are the longest by a full inch. So you needn't worry about me any more."—Youth's Companion.

GETTING FRIENDLY.

Tom—Making any progress in your suit for Miss Millyun's hand?

Dick—Oh, yes.

Tom—Why, I heard her father kicked you out every time you called.

Dick—Yes; but he doesn't kick me as hard as he used to.

IN THE GOOD OLD SUMMER TIME.

Many a time this summer you're going to be just about done out by the heat—hot, and so thirsty it just seems nothing cojld quench it. When such conditions arrive or when you just want a delicious, petete tickling drink step into the first place you can find where they sell COCA-COLA. It's delicious, refreshing and completely thirst-quenching. At soda-fountains or carbonated in bottles—Sc everywhere. Send to the COCA-COLA CO., Atlanta, Ga., for their free booklet "The Truth about COCA-COLA." Tells what COCA-COLA is and why it is so delicious, cooling and wholesome.

Some Antique Mugs.

The college collector of antiques stopped off at Becos Ridge.

"Good day, sir," he said, addressing the gentleman in the rocking chair. "I'm looking for antique mugs."

"Why, down on Main street, in Hiram Sprucehy's shop. Granged Wheatley and Pap Simmons are in there getting shaved, and by hek, when it comes to antique mugs, I reckon he's the oldest in the country, stranger."

"Boob" Walked Away.

The telegraph girl in the Waldorf hotel was talking over the wire the other day with a girl friend in the main office of the company. It was during a lull in business. The girl in the hotel told a funny story in Morse, and a man standing a few feet from her desk laughed. The girl noticed his quiet merriment and spotted him as an operator. The men used to work a wire many years ago. The girl considered it rude for him to listen to the ticking conversation. However, she let certain that he was not an operator. She decided to find out. "Listen, dear," she clicked out, "there's a man standing near the desk, listening who looks like a boob from Paintsville." Without the man's aid she made a hurried getaway.—New York Press.

The Riddle.

The Sphinx propounded a puzzle.

"Why does it always rain the day you move?" she asked.

Herewith the ancients gave it up.

Child's Idea of Goodness Set Forth in Perfect Faith, Without Irreverence.

All things are relative, and to the child, gazing at life and its wonders with eyes as yet undimmed by sophistication or sorrow, nothing is impossible, nothing unspeakable, nothing too sacred to be discussed or too difficult to be attempted. Not irreverence, nor impertinence, but innocence prompts such speeches as that recorded of the child of a popular journalist by his devoted paternal grandmother.

"Grandma," said the little boy delightedly addressing her, "do you know what's going to happen? Papa says that if we're real, real good, he'll take us to the circus!"

"That's nice," mused the young hearted adult between whom and the eager youngling no hint of age separation mars perfect comradeship. "How good do we have to be?"

Can't Get Away From It

Is it possible to nourish, streagthen and Rebuild the Brain by Food?

Every man who thinks uses ap part of the brain each day. Why don't it all disappear and leave an empty skull in say a month of brain work? Because the brain rebuilds each day.

If he builds a little less than he destroys, brain fag and nervous prostration result sure. If he builds back a little more each day, the brain grows stronger and more capable. That also is sure. Where does one get the material to rebuild his brain? Is it from air, sky or the ice of the Arctic seal? When you come to think about it, the rebuilding material must be in the food and drink.

That also is sure.

Are the brain rebuilding materials found in all food? In a good variety but not in suitable proportion in all.

To illustrate: we know bones are made largely of lime and magnesia taken from food; therefore to make healthy bone structure we must have food containing these things. We would hardly feed oats sugar and fat to make healthy bone structure in a growing child.

Likewise if we would feed in a skillful manner to insure getting what the brain requires for strength and rebuilding, we must first know what the brain is composed of and then select some article or articles (there are more than one) that contain these elements.

Analysis of brain by an unquestionable authority, Geoghegan, shows of Mineral Salts, Phosphoric Acid and Potash combined (Phosphate of Potash) 2.21 per cent of the total; 8.33 of all mineral Salts.

This is over one-half.

Beamis, another authority, shows "Phosphoric Acid combined" and Potash 75.44 per cent from a total of 101.07.

Certainly more than one-half of Phosphate of Potash.

Analysis of Grape-Nuts shows: Potassium and Phosphorus (which join and make Phosphate of Potash) is considerable more than one-half of all the mineral salts in the food.

Dr. Geo. W. Carey, an authority on the constituent elements of the body, says: "The gray matter of the brain is principled earthy matter, indrganic cell-salt, Potassium Phosphate (Phosphate of Potash). This salt united with albumen and fat forms the principal constituents nerve fluid of the gray matter of the brain. Of course, there is a trace of other salts and other organic matter in nerve fluid, but Potassium Phosphate is the chief factor and has the power within itself to attract to its own law of affinity, all things needed to manufacture the whole or life."

Further on he says: "The beginning and end of the matter is to supply the lacking principle, and in a natural form, exactly as nature furnishes it in vegetables, fruits and grain. To supply deficiencies—this is the only law of cure."

The natural conclusion is that if Phosphate of Potash is the needed mineral element in brain and you use food which does not contain it, you have brain fag because its daily loss is not supplied.

On the contrary, if you eat food known to be rich in this element, you place before the life forces that which nature demands for brain-building.

Mind does not work well on a brain that is broken down by lack of nourishment.

A peaceful and strong poised mind is necessary to good digestion.

Worry, anxiety, fear, hate, s!e., etc., directly interfere with or stop the flow of Ptyalin, the digestive juice of the mouth, and also interfere with the flow of the digestive juices of stomach and pancreas.

Therefore, the mental state of the individual hee much to do (more than suspected) with digestion.

Brain is made of Phosphate of Potash as the principal Mineral Salt, added to albumen and water.

Grape-Nuts contain that element as more than one-half of all its mineral salts.

A healthy brain is important, if one would "do things" in this world.

A man who sneers at "Mind" sneers at the best and least understood part of himself. That part which some folks believe links us to the Infinite.

Mind asks for a healthy brain upon which to sot, and Natura has defined a way to make a healthy brain and renew it day by day as it is used up from work of the previous day.

Nature's way to rebuild is by the use of food which supplies the things required. Brain rebuilding material is certainly found in

Grape-Nuts

The Centenary of the War of 1812

The true story of the opening battle told for the first time

By Prof. B. J. Cigrand.

COPYRIGHT 1911 BY W. G. CHAPMAN.

ON May 16, 1811, one hundred years ago, the first shot was fired in the second war with England. Thus the one hundredth anniversary of the beginning of "the war of 1812" is not in 1912, but fell on May 16, 1911! It was the beginning of a naval engagement off the coast of Virginia, and the thunder of the opening gun has been referred to as "The second shot which was heard around the world." Indeed the battle might well be known as "the Lexington of the war of 1812." Yet, strange to say, both the American and British governments have persistently endeavored to eliminate from history's pages this unique naval combat, and apparently tried to keep the people in ignorance of what actually transpired on the high seas on that memorable occasion. Though nearly a score of sailors were slain, the affair was hushed up as far as possible through governmental influence on both sides of the water, notwithstanding that the incident helped to change the geography of the Western Hemisphere and marked a red-letter day in our naval annals. It was the awakening of the new American spirit, the inauguration of the real foreign policy of the United States, the beginning of our international influence.

The war of the Revolution ended in 1783. England withdrew her troops from New York city and reluctantly admitted the independence of the United States, but in spirit refused to accord the young republic a respected place in the household of governments. She constantly sought opportunities to humiliate her conqueror, and assumed an especially aggravating attitude in insisting upon the right to take from our vessels, merchant or naval, any sailors who were supposed to have been born under the British flag. Men made captive thus were forced to enter and serve upon British ships of war. This was a very practical illustration of the edict promulgated by the English cabinet: "Once an Englishman, always an Englishman." A most distressing situation for America grew out of the British kidnaping policy, and such of the impressed men as endeavored to escape, or indicated discontent with their seizure, were severely punished according to the naval standards of the day, which were not remarkable for gentleness.

For a score of years the young republic endured these high-handed outrages on the persons of its citizens. Our statesmen, among whom were Adams and Jefferson, seemed unable to handle the problem, and their endeavors to enlist European sympathy against Great Britain's drastic proceedings were in vain. But what a whole nation seemed powerless to accomplish was at length achieved by a single person equipped with the necessary amount of nerve and a fine disregard of consequences. It was a plain case of "the right man in the right place at the right time." On May 16, 1811, the unusual combination of qualities and circumstances was harmonized to cope successfully with a national emergency. Our histories lay little stress on this really important event, and a close investigation of the authentic published archives reveals certain salient facts concerning it which are now set forth fully in print for the first time.

The British frigate Guerriere stopped an American vessel, the Spitfire, about fifteen miles from New York. English officers went aboard her and arrested for impress a young sailor, whom they declared was an Englishman by birth. The American captain protested in vain.

"I have known this lad personally from childhood," he asserted, "and know him to have been born in the state of Maine."

"All that may be so," responded the British captain, "but what can you do about it—he has no protection!"

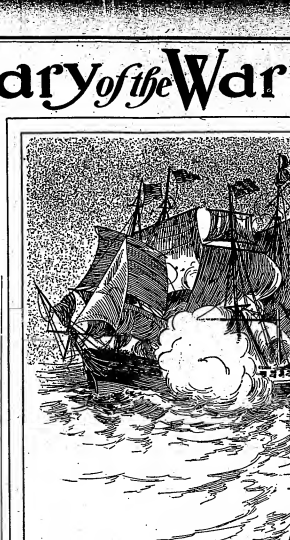
Under the circumstances the argument was unanswerable, and the lad was carried off to the Guerriere. The Washington authorities were duly notified of the occurrence, but apparently they had become so accustomed to such happenings that little or nothing was done in the matter, and the documents relating to the inquiry rested in dusty pigeonholes of departmental desks. Finally a genuine sea captain chanced to assume the duty of the hour, and the war department, acting under some pressure the details of which are not made clear in the official records open to the public, gave orders for the frigate, The President, to cruise on the Atlantic off Chesapeake bay.

On the evening of May 16 Commodore Rodgers, in command of The President, sighted a sail on the eastern horizon, and concluded that the strange vessel was none other than the Guerriere, which had forced the boy from Maine into British service. Rodgers at once gave orders to sail in pursuit and to ascertain what flag the stranger flew. Several hours passed era the vessels came within close range of each other. The sun had set and darkness was falling when Rodgers sprang into the rigging and tried to decipher with the aid of his glass the ensign borne by the object of the chase. But the shadows of night had rendered the colors undistinguishable, and Rodgers, seizing his speaking trumpet, shouted with the full strength of his powerful lungs, "What ship is that?"

There was no reply, and again Rodgers repeated his hail. Then a response came from the stranger in the shape of a sheet of flame and a round-shot which hurtled along the upper deck of The President and buried itself in the main mast. Before Rodgers could give the command to "return fire" one of his eager gunners anticipated his leader's instructions, and the first shot fired by an American vessel in the war of 1812 thundered forth defiance to the foe. The commodore then gave the order to engage, and the broadsides of both craft crashed in unison. A pall of blackness had now descended on the deep, and the battle raged fiercely on by the dim rays of the deck lanterns and red flashes from the cannons' mouths. Suddenly the enemy ceased firing, and Rodgers gave orders to follow suit, believing that she had surrendered. But the momentary lull was broken by another broadside from the stranger, and the powder-begrimed, cheering Americans replied in kind. Through the darkness of the night they fought on steadily, until again their adversary's fire was silenced. For the third time Rodger's stentorian voice roared across the waters:

"What ship is that?"

The response came back faintly:



"We are his majesty's ship—"

The wind was blowing strongly and away from The President, and prevented the conqueror from hearing the name of the defeated craft. The rigging of the enemy was badly cut up and shattered and her decks were crimson shambles. At daylight Commodore Rodgers ascertained the name of the battered hulk his guns had hammered so mercilessly through the night to be the Little Belt, a consort of the dreaded Guerriere frigate.

When The President reached home and the news of her exploit and victory was made known, the heroes of the battle were everywhere received with tremendous enthusiasm. For a short while Commodore Rodgers was praised and lionized on all sides, but suddenly negotiations were opened between the Washington and British cabinets, and a change of scene took place. The American diplomats saw fit to keep the heroes of the combat from public view, and the people were naturally bewildered by their actions. To climax matters a court of inquiry was appointed by our government as a result of a claim put forward by A. S. Bingham, the British commodore, in which he stated that The President had fired the first shot and commenced a sudden and unwarranted attack upon his ship. The unwinding of a vast quantity of diplomatic red tape followed, and both governments were seemingly desirous of hushing up the whole business. But the American people at large believed in Rodgers and his gallant crew and made their protests heard in no gentle tones. A real and not visionary war cloud lowered on the international horizon, and Rodgers himself, disregarding what were practically orders of silence from the navy department, made the following bold declaration:

"I may be censured, but I was determined not to be the aggressor, nor would I suffer the flag of my country to be insulted with impunity. And that is why I gave a general order to fire, and we have taught England a lesson."

To the foregoing spirited announcement the American public—contrary to the wishes of President Madison and his peace-loving policy—gave hearty and instinct applause. It transpired that the British vessel was fearfully damaged during the engagement, besides sustaining a loss of 31 men killed and wounded, while The President escaped almost unscathed, and had but one injured, a boy slightly wounded in the hand. In his recent history Julian Hawthorne devotes less than a page to this initial battle of the war of 1812, and the following sentence is worthy of being quoted:

COMMODORE ROGERS

THE BROADSIDES OF BOTH CRAFT CRASHED IN UNISON.

The story spread that Rodgers had sailed under express orders from our administration to pursue the Guerriere, and to demand our impressed citizen or the mouth of her guns. But the court of inquiry which ensued clearly demonstrated that the American government had no special responsibility in the lucky accident for our flag and the prowess of our navy."

These are the only lines which emphasize and indicate the importance of the battle, the name of the defeated craft. The rigging of the enemy was badly cut up and shattered and her decks were crimson shambles. At daylight Commodore Rodgers ascertained the name of the battered hulk his guns had hammered so mercilessly through the night to be the Little Belt, a consort of the dreaded Guerriere frigate.

THE STRANGERS RESPONSE WAS A ROUND-SHOT

When The President reached home and the news of her exploit and victory was made known, the heroes of the battle were everywhere received with tremendous enthusiasm. For a short while Commodore Rodgers was praised and lionized on all sides, but suddenly negotiations were opened between the Washington and British cabinets, and a change of scene took place. To the foregoing spirited announcement the American public—contrary to the wishes of President Madison and his peace-loving policy—gave hearty and instinct applause. It transpired that the British vessel was fearfully damaged during the engagement, besides sustaining a loss of 31 men killed and wounded, while The President escaped almost unscathed, and had but one injured, a boy slightly wounded in the hand. In his recent history Julian Hawthorne devotes less than a page to this initial battle of the war of 1812, and the following sentence is worthy of being quoted:

Then the British frigate Shannon, the flagship of Admiral Broke, was sent out on a cruise, and in 148 days captured 11 British merchant ships and the English corvette schooner, the Highflyer. The crew of the latter vessel had burned and plundered Hayre de Grace, Maryland, the home of Rodgers, so that the commodore may be said to have had private as well as patriotic reasons for wishing to lay The President alongside of her.

Before he sailed from Boston Rodgers had obtained from some unknown source a partial knowledge of the secret signal code of the British navy, and caused certain flags to be constructed accordingly. When he came in sight of the Highflyer he flew the British ensign, which was immediately hailed. A signal was then displayed on the English vessel, and Rodgers succeeded in answering it correctly. He then signaled that he was the British ship Sandwich, and the two vessels ranged alongside each other. One of Rodgers' officers donned the uniform of a British lieutenant and went aboard the Highflyer, where he informed the commander that part of the Highflyer's signal code was lost, and asked that he be allowed to make good the deficiency. The permission was graciously granted, and taken advantage of, after which the British officer accompanied his new acquaintance aboard the American vessel. Rodgers greeted him courteously, and then asked:

"Do you know what ship you are aboard of?"

"Why, yes," responded the British officer; "it is his majesty's ship, Sandwich."

"Did you ever hear of a vessel called The President?" inquired Rodgers.

"Indeed I have," replied the unsuspecting Englishman. "That is the craft we are supposed to take."

"Well, The President has taken you," smiled Rodgers.

The full truth of the ruse by which he had been betrayed flashed at once upon the chagrined Briton, but he saw that he was helpless. The crew of The President were at quarters ready for instant action, and the Highflyer lay at their mercy under the frowning muzzles of the American guns. There was nothing for it but to submit as gracefully as possible. Rodgers ordered the British officer back on board, and soon the stars and stripes floated in the breeze over both vessels. The sword worn by Hamilton Rowan, the English commander, was the personal property of Rodgers, taken amidst other plunder at the burning of Havre de Grace, but destined to be returned to the owner in token of the surrender of one of his majesty's crack sea-fighters. The Highflyer was taken captive to the American shore, and the country once again rang with the praises of the dashing and ingenious Rodgers.

To Rodgers and The President also belongs the peculiar distinction of having fought for 80 hours in absolute daylight. This is explained by the fact that the engagement in question took place in the Norway latitudes where perpetual daylight exists at a certain season of the year. It was Rodgers who broke up the blockade of the port of New York, and who became known to friends and foes alike by the fitting title of "the commodore of the seas." He was acting secretary of the American navy in 1823, and on August 1, 1828, he died at Philadelphia in his fifty-eighth year.

Then They Got It.

It was at the botanical dinner of the Rotary club the other night, in the Hermit club, that Tom Goss, the lawrence, was commanded upon the departure from the regular course-setfest. "As for me," he said, "I prefer the—"

"Table d'hote," broke in Ferdinand Bliss, the Mazda man, pronouncing the word as if it rhymed with "dotty."

"I thought that word was pronounced as if it ended like dot, or lot," said Will Hunkin, the building contractor.

"You're both wrong," continued Tom Goss. "But you can easily learn to pronounce the word if you make it rhyme with what we all most need. Now, all together!"

And together they pronounced it correctly. They all needed the dough.—Cleveland Leader.

PECULIAR WAY OF COACHING

Japanese Baseball Players Make Little Noise in Getting Runners Around Bases.

Americans have been not a little amused by the Japanese baseball players who are in this country, not because they do not play good baseball, but over one of their peculiar habits. They do not coach the way Americans do. They make signals silently and reports say that while they may be deficient in some of the other features of the game, they are certainly marvelous base runners. It may be due to this silent signaling, but the average American crowd attending baseball games would hardly stand for this sort of thing in our national interpretation of the game. What the average crowd wants is loud coaching accompanied by all possible antics. This sort of thing has a tendency to liven up the crowd itself and, after all, the real fun of going to a baseball contest is to get in the game a little one's self. The Japanese method may help along a base runner, but it certainly does not help along the crowd to any great extent. The average American is great for noise anyway and when he gets out and pays good money for the privilege of yelling he wants something to sort of start him. The Japanese method would not make much of a hit in the United States.

McINTYRE IS FUNGO HITTER

Spit-Ball Pitcher Claims, He Clouted Ball Over Clubhouse at Brooklyn Baseball Park.

Harry McIntire, master of the sidearm splitter and premier fungo swatter of the Cub camp, has issued a challenge. One of those regular three-ply defis to all aspiring sluggers of the National, American, Southern and Central leagues, and the American Association. In his little ultimatum, hurled broadcast around the realm of organized ball "Mac" offers to trim any fungo specialist in party.

The former Dodger has studied the fine art of long-distance swatting for more then ten years, and made it a jocular moment while driving fly balls to "Dusty" Miller on the Memphis "turtle back" grounds batting practice. On the afternoon in question Miller attempted to catch McIntire's wallops in each of the gardens—left, right and center—but the big dish marvel easily hammered the ball to every section of the fence until the manager called a halt on the festivities, reminding McIntire that baseballs are not to be picked off the bushes.

Blested over his success in this exhibition, "Mac" settled down to a course of study. His attributes his success solely to the manner in which he grips the bat. Gives him a light war club, 36 inches long, and he'll stand up there all afternoon running the knob-hide to all quarters of the plant.

There's a certain knack about fungobatting essential to real success, says McIntire. For instance, one must clutch the bat with his right hand, laying particular stress upon the swing, while the left hand attends to the job of guiding the club in its collision with the leather. No exceptional wrist-twist to practice. Singularly enough left-handed batters rarely blossom out as fungo-fungo smashers.

Harry McIntire.

McIntire claims his record wallop traveled 475 feet, the ball calling from the home plate on over the clubhouse in center field at the Brooklyn Park.

HUGGINS IS BADLY INJURED

St. Louis Second Baseman Hurt in Collision With Two Other Players—Holds Ball.

Miller Huggins, second baseman of the St. Louis National league baseball team, was badly hurt in a collision with Evans and Konetchy in a league game at Cincinnati.

The three players came together while trying to catch a short fly ball in the eighth inning. Two were out and the bases full of Cincinnati players. Huggins reached the ball just as the other two crashed into him.

He held the ball, thus making the third putout and saving the game, which consequently ended in a tie.

NATIONAL CAPITAL AFFAIRS

Lawmakers Are Besieged by Women

WASHINGTON—That a member of congress spends his days in working for or against such momentous projects as tariff reduction, Canadian reciprocity, appropriations for this or that and other kindred subjects, is, to the popular mind, precisely what he is sent there to do. But that he also consumes a goodly portion of his working day in receiving or avoiding women, will be, perhaps, a mors or less surprising statement to the average voter.

And yet—don't cessure the congressman for doing so. Nine out of ten times he's more eager to dodge his feminine callers than to see them. This business of handing out cheerful smiles and being sought after by Mildly Fair may be all right in story books, but it doesn't go in congress. If he could do so the average member would turn over the job of receiving Phyllis and Cousin Mary from the country and Mrs. Home Stater to any one who wants it—in a jiffy.

They can be found either in the reception room of the house of representatives or in the marble room of the senate, chiefly, however, on the house side. From the opening day of a session until its close they—these "women in waiting," as one congressman facetiously calls them—are to be seen.

There are young girls, slender and fair, who come in groups, properly chaperoned, from boarding schools just to "see congress-day" to the member from their home state. They are frankly curious and vastly excited over the novel experience.

There are women with the battle-scarred faces of the unhappy aged. Some of them are in rusty black and make no attempt to conceal the poverty that drives them to this last hope of winning the sympathy of a men who can get them a government position or aid the passage of a certain bill. They are "on duty" each day, from noon to adjournment, in the sitting little room on the house side. If he could do so the average member would turn over the job of receiving Phyllis and Cousin Mary from the country and Mrs. Home Stater to any one who wants it—in a jiffy.

There are young girls, slender and fair, who come in groups, properly chaperoned, from boarding schools just to "see congress-day" to the member from their home state. They are frankly curious and vastly excited over the novel experience.

There are women with the battle-scarred faces of the unhappy aged. Some of them are in rusty black and make no attempt to conceal the poverty that drives them to this last hope of winning the sympathy of a men who can get them a government position or aid the passage of a certain bill. They are "on duty" each day, from noon to adjournment, in the sitting little room on the house side. If he could do so the average member would turn over the job of receiving

Can't Fathom Fight on Mormons

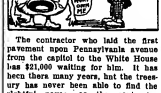
SENATOR REED SMOOT of Utah, who is an apostle of the Mormon church, in spite of all the attacks he has weathered since his advent into public life, cannot get used to the campaigns waged against his religion. The protest against placing the likeness of Brigham Young upon the silver service that is to be presented to the battleship Utah by the citizens of the state caused Senator Smoot to make a call upon the secretary of the navy recently and explain to him the facts in the case.

The proposition is to have engraved upon the silver service a likeness of the pioneer mormon that stands at the head of Main street, Salt Lake City. This monument was erected at the very spot where the pioneers of that state, 143 in number, camped when they went into that wilderness to carve out a new empire. All of them were Mormons and Brigham Young, the prophet, was their leader, so that in addition to having the names of all of the people of Utah stone a status of Young stands, life size, at the top of the monument.

There is so religious significance to the statue or to the proposition to engrave the likeness upon the silver service, Senator Smoot explained to Secretary Meyer, although it happens that the pioneers were Mormons.

The senator also stated that the committee having in charge the selection of the silver for the battleship and the designing of the design, is composed of Mormons and non-Mormons and they are unanimously in favor of engraving a picture of this mooument upon the service. The result of the senator's talk was that Secretary Meyer will stand pat and not interfere. To all who protest he says that the silver service is a voluntary gift from the people of Utah and the department has no right to stipulate as to the design.

New Statesmen Are Economical



IN this new house of representatives there are a number of members who have come here with a full realization of the fact that they are one-termers. They know that according to all human probabilities they will not be returned, and so they propose to make all they can out of two years in office. No expensive hotels for them; on the contrary, they are figuring how they can live on their mileage and clerk hire, and save their salaries.

The result is that the superintendent of the house office building has had hard work to keep members from putting cots in their offices for sleeping there. It is said to be a fact that some of these "close" congressmen have insisted that they be given the right to move their trunks into the house office building and sleep there, though they have not yet proposed doing light housekeeping.

Speaking of committee rooms, the shift caused by the change in the political complexion of the house has resulted in embarrassment to some of the members who have been in the habit of taking their nips regularly during the day.

"Gosh, but I'm dry, and tired, and need a drink," remarked a statesman as he stood in the corridor the other day. "But blamed if I know where to get it. Last session I had lots of friends who kept bottles in their committee rooms, and I suppose there are just as many now, or more, but I don't know where to locate them."

$300,000 In Gold Awaits Claimants

STACKED in one corner of the steel-ribbed vaults of the United States treasury, $30,000 in gold coin is going begging. The government cannot give it away; yet none of the rightful owners can be induced to take it. It represents unclaimed interest on the public debt.

Somewhere in nooks and crannies and out of the way places are the government's interest checks for the money, which never have been cashed.

From time to time the treasury attempts to call in the checks and the vagaries of human nature are shown.

One citizen has more than $60,000 waiting for him and holds the checks for it. He was recently invited to cash in and made a trip to Washington to tell treasury officials the checks were his property, he would cash them when he pleased, or burn them up if he wished. If he does the latter, his money will be held in the vaults until congress, perhaps, might dispose of it. The treasury can do nothing but keep it.

The contractor who laid the first pavement upon Pennsylvania avenue from the capitol to the White House has $21,000 waiting for him. It has been there many years, but the treasury has never been able to find the rightful payee, as the contractor failed and his affairs became involved in litigation which has never been settled.

The amounts of this seemingly owneless fund range from thousands of dollars down to a few cents. The smaller amounts are all held for those who owned government securities at some time or other and probably have forgotten to collect their latest interest.

PROMINENT PEOPLE

FROM PLUMBER TO PEER

The United States is the land of opportunity, but even in the European countries under monarchical governments and burdened with hereditary aristocracies it frequently happens that the lowly born succeed in mounting well toward the top of the ladder. This is especially so in England. Generally furnishes a recent example of the possibilities of merit and shiftly. Harry Plate, of Hanover, is a plumber; He was a journeyman for many years and traveled about the country with his kit looking for jobs. But Harry had brains and he secured not only an education but great influence among his fellow craftsmen. Some time ago the Artisans' congress petitioned Emperor William to give it representation in the upper house of the Prussian parliament. He selected Herry Plets and made him a peer with a seat in what corresponds to the House of Lords in Great Britain. There he will eit hereafter, keeping watch and advocating everything which he believes is for the benefit of the great working mass of the people, with always a tender spot in his heart for the grimy man with a kit of tools.

PAYS $50,000 FOR A BIBLE

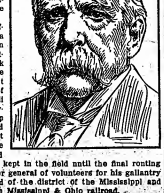
"Now I want some fun," said Henry E. Huntington, nephew of Collis P. Huntington, a few years ago, when he had contemplated retiring from active business life and devoting himself heart and soul to his passionate love for book collecting.

He had worked constantly and strenuously since early youth. He had made himself the street railway king of the Pacific Coast. He had piled up millions of dollars. He was fifty years old.

"Now I went some fun." Mr. Huntington started out to get what he wanted. And his pursuit at "fun" as he understands it, has culminated within the last few days in two strokes of sanestional magnitude.

The first was his acquisition of the famous church book collection, one of the most splendid in the world. It cost him $1,300,000. The other was his purchase a few days ago of the celebrated Gutenberg Bible, the chief treasure of the Hoe collection. To own that precious volume Mr. Huntington paid $50,000, twice the sum which, up to then, stood as the record price paid for a book.

LAYS CRIME TO LORD BACON



Dr. Orvilla W. Owen, who is digging diligently in the mud of the River Wye in England for manuscript he believes were hidden there by Lord Francis Bacon, is after bigger game than has been unpearsed.

The American declares that the cipher which is guiding his operations and ravnals that Bacon killed Shakespeare and buried the bard of Avon's head in the box which is now being reclaimed from the river bottom.

The top of what the American thinks is the hidden cache was reached by the sounding rods, but there is a considerable layer of clay to be removed before the logs or planking forming the cover can be removed.

Despite the contention of archaeologists that Dr. Owen is only excovating a structure used as a foundation for a Roman bridge, the investigator insists that everything tallies exactly with his cipher forecast, and maintains that Bacon recquired the edapibility of the disused bridge structure as a place for the burial of his manuscript. Dr. Owen is working on the property of the Duke of Beaufort, having been directed plainly to this particular spot, he says, by the cryptograph which Bacon left in order to establish after his death that he was the author of the Shakespearian plays and various works accredited to others.

IS ACTIVE AT EIGHTY YEARS

One of the few surviving generals on the union side during the Civil war is Gen. Grenville M. Dodge, of Council Bluffs, Iowa, who has just celebraied his 80th birthday. In the war he was noted as a brava and skilful general and after the close of the struggle he won renown as the engineer who blazed the trail for the Union Pacific railroad.

Gen. Dodga is a type of the self-made men. At the age of 10 he drove a butcher's cart in the town of Danvers, Mess., his birthplace. Later he devoted his energies to truck farming and earned enough to take the military and science course at Norwich university. At the age of 20 he went west, settling at Council Bluffs, and on the outbreak of the Civil war he was made colopel of the Fourth Iowa infantry, which he had raised. He commanded a brigada at the battle of Fea Ridge, where three horses were shot under him and though severely wounded in the side kept in the field until the final ronting of the enemy. He was made brigadier general of volunteers for his gallantry and in June, 1863, assumed command of the district of the Mississippi and superintended the construction of the Mississippi & Ohio railroad.

HAPPENINGS IN THE CITIES

Crow Heads Puzzle the Officials

INDIANAPOLIS, IND.—Here is a pretty kettle of fish. The offices of the county clerks in Indiana are being filled to overflowing with the heads of dead crows, and the result is not pleasing to the sense of smell, to say the least. Cause about this way:

At the last session of the legislature the farmers of the state succeeded in having a law enacted which placed a bounty of ten cents upon the head of every crow. The farmers argued that the crows destroyed much of their crops by eating the seeds after they were scattered on the ground and were a nuisance in general. Everybody thought it would be a good scheme to abolish the pest by killing off a large number of the prolific crows. And so it came to pass that the law was enacted and most everybody thought the question was solved at once and for all time.

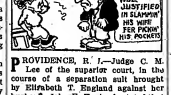
But it wasn't. The county clerks are the sufferers and complainants now. The farmer boys spend their "off rainy days" hunting crows. They are bringing them to the county seats by hundreds. The heads are strung like so many heads or pearls, and often the stringe measure four or five feet in length. In communities where the crows are plentiful—and that seems to be all over Indiana—the gunners can beg enough crows in a day to recilize a good compensation for their work.

Here is where the rub comes in. The county clerk who receives and pays for the crow heads must keep them until his books, stock and office materials are audited by the county commissioners, which is once a year. Now what is the county clerk going to do with the hundreds and hundreds of crow heads brought to his office? Surely he cannot put them away in the safa with other valuables.

And that is the reason the county clerks of Indiana have signed a round robin and forwarded it to Governor Marshall, praying him to offer a solution for the least expensi a commission for that end.

Chinese Queues for Milady's Wig

CHICAGO.—Price of coiffures are due for a stump and "milady of the boulevards" may soon be promenading down Michigan avenue bedecked in the very latest of late imported puff which but recently formed the most conspicuous part of the hirsute adornment of the Celestials of South Clark street.



It may seem strange that the most fashionable of Chicago's smart set will be able to purchase real "imported" puffs, curls, braids, switches and rats which were once the queues of Chicago chop suey parlors and Chinese laundrymen, but the fact remains indisputable, for according to the edict recently passed in China 90 per cent. of all the Celestials in the United States have divorced themselves from one of the most typically distinguishing features of the race—the queue.

Following a similar move in the Chinatown of New York, San Francisco and other cities, the Chinese of Chicago on the other day kept the barbers busy with the shears and by night tharn were few left along South Clark street who could hoast of the "pigtails" which were their pride of other days. Hip Lueg, mayor of Chicago's Chinatown, and the leaders of the famous Moy family, Lee Gee and Moy Tong Hoy, all bowed with good grace before the power of the scissors.

The hair is being shipped by the Chinese to Londoe where large English hair dealers will convert it into coiffures of the latest feshions and of course, shades, and then ship "rent imported" puffs back to American act.

The money which the Chinese in the country will receive for the hair is to be sent back to China.

Wife Rifles Pockets! Then Beat Her

PROVIDENCE, R. I.—Judge C. M. Lee of the superior court, in the course of a separation suit brought by Elizabeth T. England against her husband, John E. England, stated that a man is justified in chastising his spouse if she rifles his pockets.

The Englands have been married about five years, and recently there has been trouble in the household. Mrs. England wantad separate support from her husband when she came into court. She told on the witness stand that they had three children and had been living happily enough until a short time ago.

One night, she raleted, Mr. England arrived at his home on Warren street about 8 a. m., and proceeded to curl up on the floor. Mrs. Legland admitted that she thought he was asleep and started to go through his pockets in search of a watch and ring which she claimed belong to her. But Mr. England woke up and gave her a slap in the face.

She tried to go through his pockets again and testified that he gava her a kick in the back. Under cross-examination Mrs. England told that she had struck her husband with a shoe. After listening to considerable of this testimony, Judge Lee stated in his opinion the couple ought to be brought together and become reconciled. He brought out the fact that the woman only wanted separata support and probably would become reconciled to her husband soma time, and thought the present a good time.

"But you must tell your client," admonished Judge Lee, with a smile, in addressing Lawyar Cooney, "that she must not go through her husband's pockats again. A man is justified in slapping his wife if she goes through his pockats."

Aero Landing and Lake on Roof

NEW YORK—New York within a year is to have one of the most remarkable buildings on earth. It is designed to replace Madison Square Garden, and not the least of its features will be a landing stage for flying machines. A $2,000,000 structure is to be reared on the site of the old Brewster carriage factory on the west side of Broadway between Forty-seventh and Forty-Eighth streets. It will be used mainly for exhibition purposes and various trades in the sporting line.

The Broadway project is backed by interests identified with the Schlitz Brewing company of Milwaukee, represented in New York by John Gimmels, restaurateur, and Oscar Schmidt. The building will be erected by the Atlas Development company, which in January of last year took a long lease on the Brewster site from the Sutphin estate.

The new building is to be adapted particularly to the needs of the automobile, motor boat and aviation industries and their allied trades. With this end in view, certain unusual structural features have been planned, such as a starting and landing track on the roof for flying machines, a lake 60 by 125 feet, also on the roof, for the display of motor boats, and an enormous freight and passenger elevator, 25 by 52, capable of carrying an aeroplane, a 50-foot motor boat or about 400 persons at one trip.

The basement, which will have a very high ceiling, will contain a restaurfnat seating 5,000 or 7,000 persons and run on the plan of the famous restaurants of Berlin and Munich and with a hand of about 75 places.

INTELLIGENT DOGS.

If one may judge by the size of the claims presented in the various counties for sheep killed by dogs, we are rapidly losing the best of our sheep in Kentucky, and the dogs are showing an almost human discrimination in mutton, says the Louisville Courier-Journal. Sheep killed by dogs are valued at anywhere from $6 to $12 apiece. From this it appears that the dogs must be given to killing Cotswolds and Southdowns in full fleece. In one western Kentucky county it has been discovered that sheep are very generally listed for taxation at $4 a head. In the same county the claims allowed for bucks, ewes and lambs killed by dogs range from $8 to $12. If the assessor's report is to be believed, there must be a tremendous lot of scrub sheep in that county to pull down the average to $4 a head, and the dogs must exercise mighty good judgment in avoiding the "scalewags" when they go forth on a slaughtering expedition. The dogs are showing a marked preference for high-class mutton that presently, it is to be apprehended, there will be no blooded sheep left in that particular county. Dead sheep seem to be more valuable than live ones, and it is difficult to account for such a situation unless it be that Kentucky dogs are progressing extraordinarily in acumen and in fastidiousness. Under such circumstances it might be well to raise the dog tax or to import a considerable number of canines that are not so all-fired smart.

To the long list of recipes for attaining old age must now be added a new one, highly recommendeded by a man not with a Teutonic, but with a Celtic, name. He is enthusiastic about sauerkraut, which he maintains will enable any man or woman to live a century or more. It will conduce not only to longevity, but to happiness. It is both nutritious and appetizing. It feeds the body and stimulates the mind. It is cheap. At least that is what its sponsor claims as the result of his personal daily experience with sauerkraut for about 50 years. He does not say how often one ought to eat sauerkraut in order to become a centenarian, but since he advocates two meals a day for the average persons, he would probably not recommend eating sauerkraut between meals.

A wise Connecticut hen rode on the pilot of an engine as far as a point known as Plymouth Rock—which was her own kind of a hen—and laid an egg on the pilot in payment of her fare. There is really no occasion to go fishing when stories like this can be picked up at one's back door.

One of the writers who sell stories to the magazines complains that he gets only $35 for a story 5,000 words long. Well, if he isn't a cripple he can surely find a job as ditch digger or a farm laborer somewhere, provided money is all he wants.

The harem skirt for women is not enough, it seems. The Scottish Highlanders in New York were recently incorporated with the avowed object of encouraging the wearing of kilts on the public streets.

A Chicago doctor thinks that everyone should have his vermiform appendix removed. Who will be the first legislator to introduce a bill making the removal of vermiform appendices compulsory?

The report is persistent that the queen of England doesn't like Americans. There are a whole lot of Americans toadying around royalty that we do not care much for either. The queen is probably justified.

We are advised that in eating grapefruit it is well to use a range-finder and then deploy the spoon so that the juice does not hit the eye. It is bound to hit the eye of somebody else at the table, however.

A manufacturing company in New Jersey has had a young man arrested for flirting with its girl employes. His case will perhaps come under the head of forming a combination in restraint of trade.

A St. Louis sword swallower tried the other day to swallow a fork, and it is going to be difficult for him to recover. The sword-swallower never should fool with pointed tools.

Ten thousand alarm clocks were recently shipped from this country to China, and a Philadelphia paper prints a joke about the waking up of the Hermit Kingdom.

A western railroad is going to put soda fountains on its summer trains. This will, without doubt, add to its fizz-ical valuation.

THE SUSPENSE IS OVER

DEMAND U. S. PROBE

ILLINOIS UPPER BODY ASKS THAT LORIMER ELECTION INQUIRY BE REOPENED.

WASHINGTON TO GET REPORT

National Senate Is Requested to Take Action in Matter—State Senators Who Bolted Hopkins, Primary Nominee, Are Criticized.

Springfield, Ill.—By a vote of 30 to 10, the Illinois state senate, after an exciting session, adopted a resolution submitting to the United States senate the report of the Helm investigating committee, which declared that Senator William Lorimer would not have been elected in May, 1909, had it not been for bribery and corruption, and calling upon the federal senate to take action in the matter.

To this resolution was added an amendment criticizing those senators who bolted Albert J. Hopkins, the primary nominee to succeed himself.

A second resolution declaring there was tangible and definite evidence of wrongdoing and official misconduct on the part of Senators John Broderick and Stanton C. Pemberton and asking that the Helm inquiry be extended to May 31 was first given a black eye by Lieutenant Governor Oglesby, who said it was extending the life of a committee beyond the life of the legislature, and then defeated, 39 to 8.

Washington.—Senator La Follette gave notice in the senate that he will call up his resolution providing for a reinvestigation of the Lorimer case next Monday, immediately after the conclusion of morning business. The senator will make a statement to the senate of reasons why he believes the reinvestigation should be ordered and will press for the passage of his resolution at the earliest opportunity.

START OF CORONATION FETES

King George Dedicates Victoria Memorial, Emperor and Empress of Germany Being His Guests.

London.—The presence of the German emperor and empress and their daughter, Victoria Louise, who, rumor says, is to be given in marriage to the prince of Wales, at King George's dedication of the great Victoria memorial, and the opening of the Festival of Empire marked the beginning of the three months' reign of merrymaking with which the British empire will celebrate the coronation of the king and queen in June—incidentally putting millions of dollars into the pockets of British tradesmen.

The dedication ceremonies took place near Buckingham palace, where the great monument to the late queen overtops the Mall and rears its stately proportions high in the air, crowned by a gigantic bronze statue of Peace.

After the ceremonies were over the royal family, together with their German guests of honor, repaired to the palace for dinner. This will be followed by a royal entertainment in the evening, which will include among its guests the many prominent Germans who make their home in London.

PEACE SEEMS SURE

DIAZ AND CORRAL WILL RESIGN BEFORE JUNE 1.

Madero Will Act as Chief Adviser to De La Barra, Who Will Become President ad Interim.

City of Mexico.—Peace in Mexico seems assured. President Diaz and Vice-President Corral will resign before June 1. An armistice covering the entire republic has been signed.

Minister of Foreign Relations de la Barra will become president ad interim.

Francisco I. Madero, the revolutionist leader, will be called to the City of Mexico to act as De la Barra's chief adviser and as the greatest guarantee possible that every pledge made by the government will be carried out.

As viewed by the public it will be virtually a joint presidency pending the calling of a new presidential election.

The cabinet will be reorganized. The minister of war will be named by De la Barra. The foreign office will be in charge of a sub-secretary named by De la Barra. Other cabinet officers will be chosen by De la Barra and Madero jointly.

A new election will be called within six months.

Political amnesty will be recommended to the chamber of deputies.

These are the conditions upon which President Diaz will compromise, as announced by Minister of the Treasury Limantour. Virtually they are admitted in high quarters to be a complete surrender to the revolutionists.

The resignation of Diaz and the joint regency of De la Barra and Madero are said to constitute a guarantee so complete that the original insurrecto demand for 14 governors no longer needs to be considered.

The cabinet was in almost continuous session for two days notwithstanding the severe illness of President Diaz. The president's entire face is infected from an ulcerated tooth. His upper lip is swollen far beyond its normal size and his face is inflamed. He speaks with the greatest difficulty, but, while he is in severe pain, his condition is not alarming at this time, despite his advanced age.

The government's conditions were telegraphed to Judge Carbajal at Juarez with instructions to submit them to Madero. Soon after the terms were submitted an armistice covering the entire republic was agreed upon.

Inasmuch as the government believes it has made every concession that the revolutionists have requested, it is firmly believed that a treaty of peace will follow.

GIVES FORTUNE TO NURSE

Walter E. Duryea, Millionaire, Long a Cripple, Leaves $1,500,000 to Attendant in Will.

New York.—By the will of Walter E. Duryee, the crippled athlete and broker, the bulk of his fortune, estimated at $2,500,000, goes to Miss Eleanor Peregrine, a trained nurse who acted as his housekeeper for the last twelve years of his life.

She is given $50,000 outright, $30,000 in trust, a house in Montclair, N. J., and all the residue of the estate after certain legacies have been paid. Her total share is thought to be worth $1,500,000.

WILL OBEY THE LAW

STANDARD OIL ATTORNEY SAYS COMPANIES AFFECTED BY DECISION WILL SEPARATE.

NO PLAN YET DECIDED UPON

Tobacco Case Ruling Will Determine Taft Policy—President Satisfied With Decision of Supreme Court, Despite His Former Views.

New York.—At 26 Broadway, Standard Oil headquarters, officials of the company seemed to be in anything but a gloomy mood over the Supreme court decision. Their attitude showed clearly that they had expected such an opinion for some time and were ready for it.

Two points are clear. First, that there will be no contumacy by the company—it proposes to obey the decree; and, second, that it will be some time before any plans of reorganization are given out.

The company has insisted throughout that no plans had been formulated in advance of the decree, and the statement made by Mortimer F. Elliot, general solicitor for the company, takes the same attitude. He said:

"Having only before us the press reports of Chief Justice White's oral opinion and the remarks of Justice Harlan, and not having seen the opinion of the court in full, it is impossible to make any lengthy statement. The full opinion must be read and studied by my associates and myself before it can be intelligently dealt with.

"It may, however, be said that the Standard Oil company will obey the decree of the court and that all the companies embraced in the court's decree will carry on their business as usual under the direction of their own officers and through their own corporate organizations."

Washington. — Until the Supreme court has rendered its decision in the pending case of the tobacco trust the administration will formulate no policy based on Monday's far-reaching decision. The manner in which the court will now apply the rule laid down in the Standard Oil case to the facts presented in the suit against the tobacco trust become the paramount issue with department officials.

So far as the effect of the decision is concerned, both the president and Attorney-General Wickersham declared that they were perfectly satisfied; and neither would permit himself to be drawn into any expression of opinion with regard to the point made by Associate Justice Harlan in his dramatic dissent. Not even the quotations from President Taft's previous utterances, which seem to put him at variance with the majority view of the court served to bring forth any explanation from Mr. Taft. In conversation with callers on this point, he merely referred to the fact that every man was entitled to a view on the circumstances before the Supreme court had passed on a case; but once the court had decided, it is the president's opinion that patriotic duty and a regard for American institutions require that every citizen loyally accept the view of the Supreme court as his own.

YOUNG BOY SLAYS FATHER

Crazed Parent Orders Son to Pull Trigger of Shotgun and Has Head Blown Off.

Greenwich, Conn.—Prevailing upon his twelve-year-old son to pull the trigger, Fred Husted, forty-six years old, a prosperous farmer, had his head blown off with his own shotgun.

After years of toil Husted had just succeeded in paying off the mortgage on his 80-acre farm, for which he recently refused an offer of $80,000. Recently he has been ill from grip. He awoke from a nap, during which he had had a frightful dream. The combined effect is thought to have temporarily crazed him.

Sending his wife on an errand to a neighbor's house, Husted called to his oldest son, Lester, that he was going to shoot hawks, which had attacked the chickens. Picking up his double-barreled shotgun, which was always kept loaded, he laid it on the kitchen table and directed the lad to pull the trigger. Lester hesitated, as his father knelt on the opposite side of the table, looking directly into the muzzle, with his eye only four inches away. Finally the boy snapped the trigger, when his father insisted that the gun was not loaded, but the lad held the trigger with his finger and there was no explosion.

The father then arose, again cocked the gun and assured the lad the gun was not loaded. The man dropped to his knees again and ordered the boy to pull the trigger "to see how it sounds." The lad did so and the man dropped dead instantly, the whole left side of his head blown off.

The coroner rendered a verdict of suicide.

40,000 Manchurians Homeless.

HITS LABOR CHIEFS

NEW PROCEEDINGS AGAINST GOMPERS AND OTHERS.

District of Columbia Justice Would Punish American Federation Leaders for Contempt.

Washington.—On its own initiative, the Supreme court of the District of Columbia instituted proceedings for alleged contempt, against President Samuel Gompers, Vice-President John Mitchell and Secretary Frank Morrison, all of the American Federation of Labor. The sentences of imprisonment imposed on these men by this court were revoked by the United States Supreme court, and the case was remanded to the district supreme court.

The United States Supreme court, in setting aside the sentences of imprisonment, held that the case on which the lower court had acted constituted a civil contempt against the Bucks Stove and Range company, and that the offense was punishable only by a fine to be recovered by the wronged corporation.

Justice Lamar, in handing down the opinion, called attention to the fact, however, that if the lower court felt aggrieved it could have brought criminal contempt proceedings in the premises and have inflicted a jail sentence.

The lower court has been quick to take advantage of the opportunity afforded to reopen the case. As the labor dispute which brought the case into court had ended it was presumed the matter would be allowed to drop.

Justice Wright of the district supreme court, who imposed the sentence on Messrs. Gompers, Mitchell and Morrison, in instituting the proceedings anew appointed Joseph J. Darlington, Daniel Davenport and James M. Beck, counsel for the Bucks Stove and Range company, as a committee to inquire "forthwith" into the question of whether the labor leaders had violated the court's order.

OSBORN BOOSTS CANADA PACT

Michigan Governor Declares 95 Per Cent. of the People of His State Want Reciprocity.

Washington, D. C.—Governor Chase S. Osborne again boosted the president's reciprocity program and commended Representatives Young and Loud of Michigan for supporting it.

"Ninety-five per cent. of the people of Michigan want it," he said. "Sixty-seven per cent. of the country papers of the state are for it and at a recent debate at the Michigan State Agricultural college, at which the president and dean opposed reciprocity and younger members of the faculty favored it, 1,100 students, all farmers' boys, voted 8 to 1 for it. There is no doubt where Michigan stands on the issue."

Governor Osborn also was congratulating himself that Colonel Roosevelt had made public use of an expression used by him recently in introducing the colonel to a Michigan crowd and that was:

"I am the kind of a progressive who wishes to stay on the track."

PACKERS WANT NEW HEARING

Federal Judge Grants Permission to Defendants to File Motion to Reopen Their Case.

Chicago.—Judge George A. Carpenter, in the United States district court, allowed counsel for J. Ogden Armour and the other indicted packers to file a motion for a rehearing of their demurrer to the indictments. The motion was based on the decision of the Supreme court in the Standard Oil case.

The court declared that he would not hear oral arguments and directed the attorneys to file briefs within one week. The court then told what he believed is a fair construction of the decision and the whole proceeding ended in less than fifteen minutes.

Judge Carpenter held that the Supreme court must regard the Sherman anti-trust act, under which the defendants have been indicted, as a penal statute.

SAY LORIMER SEAT BOUGHT

Helms Committee Reports That His Election Could Not Have Been Procured Without Bribery.

Springfield, Ill.—The report of the Helm committee on the election of William Lorimer to the United States senate was sent into the senate by the chairman.

The document recited the facts of the investigation and said it was evident from the evidence taken that the election of Lorimer could not have been procured without bribery and corruption.

No recommendations were made in the report for taking the matter to the United States senate and outside of the recital of the facts set forth there was no comment.

COCONUTS in the AMERICAS

BY CHARLES MELVILLE BROWN

It has been commonly remarked that the uses of the coconut palm (cocos Nucifera) are numerous as the days of the year. Found nearly everywhere within the tropics, almost the sole dependence for food of the palmivorous inhabitants of many countries, this king of low tropical countries furnishes man with food, drink, medicines, domestic utensils, nurteriels for boat and house building, oil for cooking, lighting, and lubricating, and innumerable other purposes, and is of all the palmaceae the one that yields the greatest versity of products. Tennant has truly said that of the coconut palm a ship can be built and laden, too.

De Candolle, in "Origin of Cultivated Plants," does not consider the coconut palm a native of the western hemisphere, but places its original habitat in the Eastern archipelago, somewhere in the neighborhood of Sumatra and Java, and surmises that nuts floated thence both east and west; eastward to the Islands of the Pacific and the coast of Central America, and westward to Ceylon and the east coast of Africa. He placed its introduction into Brazil, Venezuela and the West Indies by missionaries about three centuries ago. De Martius says that the Portuguese introduced it on the coast of Guinea about the same time. The navigators Dampier and Vancouver found it at the beginning of the seventeenth century in groves on the islands of Panama bay, as well as on Cocos island, 300 miles off the Pacific coast of Costa Rica. At that time these islands were uninhabited. Later the cocoseut palm is reported on the west coast from Mexico to Ecuador, and Seeman reported having seen the palm both wild and cultivated on the Isthmus of Panama. In 1526 Oviedo wrote that the cocoenut palm was abundaet on the Pacific coast in the province of the Cacique Chiman, now Darien, Panama.

Argument in favor of an American origin, as stated by De Candolle, is as follows: The trade winds of the Pacific, to the south and yet more to the north of the equator, drive floating bodies from America to Asia, a direction contrary to that of the general currents. It is known, moreover, from the unexpected arrival of bottles containeing papers on different coasts, that chance has much to do with these transports.

His arguments contrary to an American origin of the cocoanut palm and in favor of an Asiatic are as follows:

First.—A current between the third and fifth parallel, north latitude, flows from the islands of the Indian archipelago to the Gulf of Panama. To the north and south of this are currents which take the opposite direction, but they originate in regions too cold for the cocoanut, and do not touch Central America, where it is supposed to have been long indigenous.

Second.—The inhabitants of Asiatic islands were far bolder navigators than the American Indians. It is very possible that canoes from the Asiatic Islands, containing provisions of cocoanuts, were carried by storms or false manuevers to the islands of the west coast of America; the contrary is highly improbable.

Third.—The area for three centuries has been much vaster in Asia than in America, and the difference was yet more considerable before that epoch, for it is known that the cocoanut has not long existed in the east of tropical America.

Fourth.—The inhabitants of the islands of Asia possess an immense number of varieties of the palm, which indicates a very ancient cultivation. Rhmse enumerates eighteen varieties in Java and adjecent islands, and thirty-nine in the Philippines. Nothing of a similar nature has been observed in the Americas.

Fifth.—The nuts of the cocoanut are more varied and more nutritious in Asia.

Sixth.—It is not probable that the ancient Mexicans and inhabitants of Central America would have neglected to spread the cocoanut in several directions had it existed among them from a very remota epoch. The little breadth of the Isthmus of Panama would have facilitated its transportation from one coast to the other and the species would soon have been established in the West Indies, as it has since become naturalised there since the discovery of America.

Seventh.—If the cocoanut in America dated from a geological epoch anterior to the Pliocene or even Eocene deposits in Europe, it would probably have been found on both coasts and the eastern and western islands of tropical America equally.

Eighth.—No ancient deta of the existence of the cocoanut in America have been found, but its presesce in Asie three to four thousand years ago is proven by several Sanskrit names.

From these facts the most ancient habitation in Asie would be in the archipelego and in America in the islands west of Panama. Its introduction into Ceylon, Indian and China, De Candolle states, does not date further back than three thousand years, but its transport by sea to the coasts of America and Africa took place perhaps in a more remote epoch, although posterfior to those epochs when the geographical and physical conditions ware different from those of our day.

In early hotanical works cocoaunts are mentioned, being derived from an East Indian word, coc or cocuc, used to indicate the fruit of the cocos Nucifera,'or cocoanut of a fancied resemblance of the three circular depressions to the face of a monkey, whose conversational powers are limited to uttering a sound like "coco."

At the present day, on the islands of the Bay of Panama, such as Colbe, Cobita, Jicaron, Montuosa, Ladrones, and along the southwestern coast of Chiriqui in Panama, and Punta Burica and Golfo Dulce in Costa Rica, are found dense groves of wild cocoanut palms, the fallen nuts piled up around their base, in many instances to a depth of two and three feet, washed back and forth by the swirl of the great tides of these coasts until hurled against some jagged rock the protecting husk is torn away and the tender karnel becomes the prey of the myriads of soldier crabs patrolling these great sandy stretches at low tide. Others are carried by swift currents to neighy coasts, where, thrown high on the beach at flood tide, they may garminate and take root; others come as floating manna and becalmed pearl-fishing crews, supplying at once food and drink to the divers whom the tides carry far from their base of supplies—an analogy to the aphorism of the ill-wind.

Accepting De Candolle's theory as correct, this same process of distribution from the low-lying coasts of the eastern archipelago to these islands of the Bay of Panama, mentioned by Dampier and Vancouver in their explorings, might have been seen taking place a thousand years before the Christian era, or by Columbus' successors in the Dukedom of Veragua, off which coast they lie; thence carried by human agency to farther shores, north into Central America and Mexico, south into what le now Colombia and Ecuador, and across the Isthmus of Panama to the Mosquito coast, Venezuela and the West indies, there to meet with those brought over from Africa by either ocean currents or early explorers.

In the Americes today the cocoanut is an important product of Mexico, Guatemala, Nicaragua, Honduras, San Salvador, Costa Rica, Panama, Colombia, Ecuador as far south as Guayaquil, Venezuela, Guiana and Brazil; and in the West Indies, Cuba, Santo Domingo, Haiti, Bahamas, Jamaica and Trinidad. Cocoanuts are being planted more extenevely every yeer in southern Florida, and within a few yeore will doubtless constituta an important product of thet steta. Pacific America sends cocoanuts to the San Francisco merket from the Hawaiian islands, while copre, or the dried kernel, and oil expressed therefrom, reech this merket from the orient.

Along the coast of Brazil there are wild cocoenut groves over 200, miles long, and millions of nuts are shipped annually from this country to the United States and Europe. Mexico reduces much of its product to oil and ships to the United States in this form, although a good trede in raw nuts is maintained. Of those exported from Cuba, Honduras, Nicaragua, Penama and Jamaica, the greater part is in the raw state.

Trinidad reduces much of its product to copra, for Europe, and oil, principally for the local consumption of its large and thrifty population.

In 1903 the approximate estimate of area under cultivation in the cocoanut palm in all parts of the world was 3,140,000 acres.

Of this vast area there are probably 220,000,000 palms bearing fully 7,000,000,000 nuts annually, the mojority of which are consumed for food purposes where produced.

The cocoanut palm flourishes near the equator and as far north as 80 degrees, especialiy along low coests, although many are found in India at an elevation of 3,000 feet, and cases are known where the palm does well at an elevation of 4,500 feet above the sea.

As a rule a cocoanut tree throws out a spathe and a leaf every month, each flowering spike yielding from 10 to 25 ripened nuts. The product of a healthy tree properly tended may be from 50 to 150 and even 250 nuts annually.

The principal products of the cocoanut palm are raw nuts, from which the desiccated meat is made; copra, or the dried karnel, from which in turn oil is expressed; poonac, or the residue after extracting the oil, and coir.

The uses of these products, as well as of every portion of the palm itself, are almost innumerable.

Twenty-eight per cent. of all the cocoanuts raised in the world are grown in the Americas, where, however, they are scattered over a much greater area for each palm than is the case in the orient, thereby making the work of collecting and shipping more difficult and expensive. Due principally to this fact, the vast stretches of cocoanut groves of Brazil, Venezuela, Mexico and the western coast of Central America have never been extensively exploited for cocoanuts. Increasing demand, higher prices than in former years, and the approaching completion of the Panama canal, which means new markets brought about by improved transportation facilities, are rapidly bringing these fields within the radius of profitable exploitation, in addition to stimulating the scientific culture of this palm throughout tropical America.

TREATMENT OF BOG SPAVIN

Trouble May Be Corrected by Application of Cold Water and Lotion of Acetate of Lead.

A round, smooth tumor at the front and on the inside of the hock. It is the result of sprains, bruises or other injuries. When these injuries occur too much joint oil is secreted, causing a bulging of the ligament. Lameness seldom occurs unless a bog spavin. If lameness be present other structures are certain to be effected, and some pain and heat will be noticed, together with a stiffness of the joint.

Treatment consists of applications of cold water to the affected parts and a lotion made of two tablespoonfule acetate of lead in a quert of water. A blister made of one teaspoonful bisloride of mercury and four tablespoonfule lerd, rubbed in a little with the fingere, and repeated in two days or two weeke and continued for some months, will correct the trouble. Wash the parts having received the blister twenty-four hours after application. It is also advisable to tie the horse's head while the blister is on, so that he cennot bite the part.

FLESH FLIES BOTHER SHEEP

Flock Should Be Watched Closely, Especially in Warm, Damp Weather, to Keep Pests Away.

When the sheep's wool becomes filthy and the skin irritated an ideal condition is made for the work of the maggot fly. And when the meggots get a start they create a more and more friendly herbor for their kind as they work and increase in numbers under the wool, eaye the Sheep Breeder. A sheep infected with meggots is a most pitiful sight, helpless against the parasites eating out the flesh until sheep dies, its life geewed out in a most cruel manner. For the sake of humanity, if for no other reason, sheep should be saved from such suffering. These flies can do no damage if not given a outtable place to lay their eggs. Sheep should be watched carefully, especially in warm, damp weather, and dirty tag-locks or other filth clipped off and a little tar dabbed on if the skin is cracked. These meggots also get in their work under rem's horns. Indeed a ram with heavy horns lying close to his head will hardly pass through a summer without infection unless the flies are kept away by putting some tar on the ram's head.

An infected sheep can he told by the fact that it refuses to eat, stands with its head down and most often by itself, and stamps its feet or jerks its head exactly as irritation by meggots would lead one to expect. The remedy is simple. Cut away the wool clost. Clean out all meggots, using turpeatine to wash them out. Smear the place thoroughly with tar. Then keep watch of the sheep to see that the flies do not again start in the same place. Thoroughness in cleaning out the parasites is ecsential, for one left in will start the damege all over.

The Ideal Horse Stable.

A well known stockmse says: The ideal stable should have the horse fronte north to obtain an even temperature, it should not he too large so that you keep the animal heat under control, and not have stalls temperatures either materially raised or lowered when half a dozen animals are either taken out or brought in.

The ventilation should be perfect and as strong as possible up to the iuiguitous draught point. Let the ceiling he as high as convenient, and if the wise builder has left an inch or so open around the upper edge, when the etahlemen cannot stop it up all the bettar.

CRACKS IN HORSE'S HOOFS

Breach From Bottom, as Shown in Illustration, Can Be Restrained by the Use of Clips.

Sendcracks commence either from the top or the bottom of the crust. When from the top, the coronary band is often involved, and there is pain and lameness, perhaps some escape of blood and inflamation of duet before the potient reeches home, if the accident has occurred on the road, as it commonly does. should be adopted directly a break occure in the hoof, as it is always disposed to enlerge. As seedcrocks vary from the mere splitting of a few superficial there to deep breeches extending right through the crust, it will be obvious that different measures must be teken, and slight cases treated while at work. The diagrem is intended to illustrate a breach from the bottom, which can be restrained by clips.

small window or opening for ventilation. Tha opening at the top makes it very convenient to care for the sow and her pigs.

Taking Pride in Stock.

The proportion of live stock really well grown is not large. This is not so much because of the lack of food as of the lack of those nice little attentions so necessary to the proper utilisation of food, such as feeding it in a palatable condition and at regular times.

Tha average owner does not take the interest that he ought to. When he takes a pride in his stock he is sure to give it close attention, and with close attention comes success. Such a taste can be cultivated in the sama way as any other taste or liking.

LIVE STOCK NOTES

Start the green colt in easy.

The horses' shoulders need attention.

Next to corn, clover is about the best hog feed, while both mixed always show good results.

Train the colt before he is six months old, and you can control his disposition when he is older.

For growing calves, sheep and hogs, oilmeal can constitute about one-tenth of the grain ration fed and prove very beneficial.

As long as the breeding of a cow is profitable she should be bred. It is not advisable to sell off a good brood animal.

Sheep should not ha too fat for the first six months. Developmant of bone and muscle should be the first consideration.

A shed that is warm and poorly ventilated will often cause the sheep's wool to loosen, besides injuring the animal's vitality.

Newly broken colts should not be worried too hard this spring. They are apt to overstrain themselves and be injured for life.

Never give drugs to a horse any more then you would to a baby unless he is downright sick. Shutting off his feed will cure all minor ills.

Medium-sized hogs are now most in favor. It is best to feed hogs for only eight or ten months. After they are a year old the feeding is not profitable.

Sows should ha bred in trios. Then if two of them should produce small litters, all the pigs may be given to one sow, and the other may be again bred or fattened and sold.

TAFT IN ACTION.

President Taft turned the cold shoulder to the delegates appointed to go to Washington as the representatives of the Minnesota farmers backed by a petition of 35,000 Northwesten farmers, to protest against the passage of the Reciprocity Pact. The delegates were kindly received by our Senators and Congressmen from Minnesota, who rendered them all possinble assistance. Mr. Collins, editor of the Northwestern Agriculturist made the remark before the senate committee, "That he had been a Republican all his life, but did not know which way to turn now." "We will comfort you," said Senator Baily the Texas Democrat, "We have learned in times past to fear the greeks bearing gifts," retorted Mr. Collins.

Those who tried to make light of this great demonstration by the Northwestern farmers will find out their mistake in the next campaign. As for Taft, if the Republican party should be foolish enough to nominate him, and a farmer was caught supporting him, that farmer should be put into a cage and hawled around the country for exhibition, with a big sign board, nailed on the cage to read. "The only living farmer of the Northwest who will vote for Taft Purchased at great cost."

The railroads of the country are preparering to make a fight to restore the three cent a mile car fare rate. Should they win out the political party that goes into the next campign, without government ownership of railroads in their platform will be about as much out of date as a man would be that went to war with an old muzzle loading musket.

Hon. Halvor Steenerson has introduced a bill in congress for the relief of innocent purchasers of land from Indians on white earth. It is something that we hope here are not much interested in, but it shows that our congressman is wide awake and looking after the best interests of his district.

THE LOCAL NEWS.

Applications to make final proof written free at this office. Call and see us, when you are ready to make your final proof.

Dan Carroll drove over from his Mayfield farm for a Sunday visit with Walter McAndress and ye editor.

Judgeing from the base ball reports from St. Hilaire, Glen Martz must be a first class ball player, as well as surveyor.

There will be a school picnic of the Highlanding school, on Saturday June 3rd., All are invited to come and enjoy a days outing.

Knut Lintvet, Tom Lofthus, John Peterson and John Swanson came up from Deer Park on Tuesday to make application to make final proof on their homesteads.

Don't neglect your cough for a minute when Mark's Long Balsam is so handy to get. Safe and pleasent to take. Ask your store keeper for it and take no other.

Our corn field is now nicely up, and as they used to say down in Iowa it is a good stand. It will be ready for the cultivator next week.

Better stop coughing Mark's Long Balsam will do it. It contains no opium, it is safe for children. Can be taken several times a day as required for cough.

The Highlanding ferry is now in good condition, and anyone using it when I am not present will please leave the ferry for at Ellingson Bros, as it is not a free ferry—S. L. Holm, owner.

There are still some homesteaders that are letting their seven years run out before making any application to prove up. Again we warn you, that there has not been any law passed congress extending the time of making final proof on a homestead over seven years.

We took a walk over the grain fields of Walter McAndress last Sunday, and we never saw a better crop prospect in northern Minnesota at this time of year. The wheat is well stooled out and covers the ground with its dark mantlet of green.

Mark's Long Balsam is one of the best medicines for Cough, croup, whooping cough, lung throat and chest trouble. Get a bottle at your nearest store, the $1.00 bottle's hold five times as much as the small bottles. Three sizes 25, 50, and $1.00.

By the way John, how much business did you do in Deer Park? They tell me that they set the dogs on tramps down there, so if you are looking to gain business by telling old war stories, you had better stay on the north side of Red Lake River.

The 1910, Realestate taxes is payable this year at Red Lake Falls and at Thief River Falls, for residents of Plummer county, before June 1st. A penalty of 10 per cent will be added to the tax on June 1st, if one half is not paid, the other half to be paid before Oct. 21st,.

Frank Lundeen and Peatrus Tafson, two of the prosperous farmers from Deer Park was up to Sunbeam Wednesday to make application to make final proof. They both have valuable farms, with expensive buildings, and do not propose to tempt anyone to make them expenses, by them letting their seven years run out.

John is now trying to come the old Adam act of hideing behind a womans petticoats. Come off the pitch you old petrified stiff, we haven't said anything against your lady type setter, now do not lose ad to, but we will warm up your and your partner "Fatts" old dried up hides, until you will know better than to go trampingg around the country telling about Hunt and THE HUNTS'.

We had another fine shower of rain last night, which soaked the ground up in good shape to keep the grain and grass growing.

Sam McMahn and C. L. Clark have taken a contract to level down and make a road on the big ditch near Hilda and commenced work this week.

Mrs. Ole Orerum has set out a large number of fruit trees on her Highlanding farm, and also a lot of ornemental trees, which will add much to the value and appearance of this fine farm.

We understand that Mrs. P. C. Wold is very sick, with the chance of recovery in doubt. We extend our sincere sympathy to Mr. Wold, who certainly has had his full share of sickness in his family the past year.

The floating dredge still stands up on the high prairie at the head of ditch No. 47. A monument to the ignorance and stupidity of its builders, for doing that class of work. That ditch was petitioned for because the farmers wanted it, and not to make room for an old machine to stand on while they pay ditch taxes. Get to ditching, or get to hell out of there.

Loggerheads.

The giant turtles which are found along the Atlantic coast and frequently in southern waters in great numbers are known as loggerheads. They commonly attain a weight of 1,000 pounds, are rapid swimmers and are often seen far from land, floating asleep on the waves. Carnivorous by nature, these huge tortoises feed on crabs and fish, especially on a large species of conch, which their beaks open with their massive jaws. The flesh of this terrapin is leathery and oily, with a strong smell of musk. Young specimens are more palatable and are often on sale in the markets.

A duck as large as our goose, which is native of the shores of Tierra del Fuego and the Falkland Isles, is also called loggerhead, from its seeming stupidity and helplessness.

In the West Indies this game is also given to one large sorts of fir catch-ers.

The Professor—No, sir, dere is no animal living what I cannot subdue by simply looking him steadily in de eye bull. I will bet one thousand dollars.

Painfully Explicit.

The proprietor of a certain hotel in Europe has posted up the following warning to his clients:

"Gentlemen who come in this hotel not say anything about their meals they will be charged for, and if they should say beforehand that they are going out to breakfast or dinner, and if they say that they not have anything to eat they will be charged, or unless they bring it to the notice of the manager, and should they want not to say anything, they must order the manager for, and not any one else, and unless they not bring it to the notice of the manager, they will be charged for the least things not, according to hotel rate. And no fuss will be allowed afterward about it, and nothing will be allowed to deduct anything out of it."

After this explicit information there surely could be no excuse for misunderstanding.—Boston Globe.

Chinese Educational Puzzle.

It is generally recognized that China has set to work at the wrong end of her education problem. . . . "Ever since boyhood I have been especially fond of meats, and I am convinced I ate them rapidly, and failed to masticate my food properly.

"The result was that I found myself, a few years ago, afflicted with ailments of the stomach, and kidneys, which interfered seriously with my business.

"At last I took the advice of friends and began to eat Grape-Nuts instead of the heavy meats, etc., that had constituted my former diet.

"I found that I was at once benefited by the change, that I was soon relieved from the heartburn and indigestion that used to follow my meals, that the pains in my back from my kidney affection had ceased.

"My nerves, which used to be unsteady, and my brain, which was slow and lethargic from a heavy diet of meats and greasy foods, had, not in a moment, but gradually, and none the less surely, been restored to normal efficiency.

"Now every nerve is steady and my brain and thinking faculties are quicker and more sensitive than for years past.

MEMORIAL DAY AT GETTYSBURG BATTLEFIELD

THERE is perhaps no other spot in the country where the observance of Memorial day is characterized by the significance of Gettysburg. No visitor can traverse, at any season of the year, the scene of the greatest struggle in the most momentous civil war of all history and not gain a new conception of the titanic forces which here enacted the climax of a five-year war drama, but at Memorial day the lessons and the significance of this immense battlefield seems to take on a yet deeper meaning.

And yet to see it clothed in the fresh green of a twentieth century spring can would never suspect, save for the reminders of the hundreds of memorials in marble and granite bronze, that this placid landscape was a scant half century ago the scene of one of the most decisive battles in the world's history. It seems today as though it might have merely been chosen as a site for Memorial day services because of its natural beauty. Similarly would the thousands of patriotic pilgrims who wend their way thither every Decoration day be well justified in believing were there no historic attractions whatever to draw them, for one might travel for days in this country or abroad without finding a more picturesque or more richly verdant rolling country than is contracted in the wonderful panorama which spreads out at the feet of the sightseer as he gazes from the summit of Little Round Top—the commanding position of this whole great battlefield.

VIEWING GETTYSBURG BATTLEFIELD FROM THE SUMMIT OF ROUND TOP

But for all its natural beauty it is the sentiment of its historic background that serves as the magnet which draws a great throng thither from all sections of the country on Memorial day. They come by train—although Gettysburg is not the most accessible of historic spots; they come by carriage and wagon from a wide radius of the rich Pennsylvania farming region that surrounds the battlefield; and finally they come by automobile, for, so it is explained, Gettysburg has become of late years a most popular objective with motor tourists who find in the great park or reservation which now perpetuates the battlefield a network of the finest roads in America—highways which it is a sheer delight to motor over even with no thought (if one could dismiss the subject) of the historic objects and localities to be viewed by the wayside.

The Memorial day pilgrims who journey to the average Civil war battlefield or national cemetery for the annual strewing of flowers are content if they arrive after dawn and depart before sunset. But this is not wholly the case at Gettysburg, although many heavy laden excursion trains do arrive during the Memorial day. In addition to this throng, however, there is one almost as numerous made up of persons who spend from five days to a week at Gettysburg and who have come at the Memorial day session because there is an added touch of realism to the scene at that time when veterans in blue are tramping over the roads where countless thousands of their fellows advanced and retreated during the memorable days of battle. These visitors overflow the hotels, of which Gettysburg has an unusual number for so small a town, and occupy all the available rooms in the private houses of the little city. The situation would swamp the liverymen did the conditions of a decade ago still prevail, but happily the advent of the automobile has helped matters in this respect. Many of the visitors ride over the battlefield in their own touring cars, whereas the cars for hire relieve the strain upon the four-horse and six-horse coaches which continue as of yore the regulation mode of touring the battlefield.

Incidentally it may be added that the introduction of the motor car has greatly facilitated things for the tourist who is desirous of seeing Gettysburg battlefield in the limited time for which Americans are famous in their sightseeing. Indeed by keeping continually on the road from morning until night, with only a brief stop for lunch, a party may obtain an excellent idea of Gettysburg battlefield in a single day. Of course on such a schedule he can not really study the geography with relation to the complex movements of the opposing forces and there will be some portions of the battlefield which he will pass entirely by, but on the whole he will obtained a mental moving picture of the various important localities marked by monuments and cannon. To do the battlefield as thoroughly as a horse-drawn vehicle would require at least three or four days and a pedestrian might spend weeks on the battlefield without ever traversing the same road twice except in going to or from the field and returning to his hotel.

As has been hinted above, it is the battlefield and not the Memorial day exercises which throng Gettysburg at the end of May each year. Some years the program incident to Decoration day is of a very simple character and there are not as many graves to be decorated as might be supposed by the person not conversant with the comparatively small number of marked graves on Gettysburg battlefield. Yet there are other occasions when the exercises at Gettysburg focus the eyes of the entire country. This is the case when the president of the United States delivers the address of the day at Gettysburg, as President Taft did a couple of years ago, as President Roosevelt did before him, and as almost all of our presidents have done in their day since that memorable occasion when President Lincoln dedicated the Gettysburg battlefield cemetery with an address which has gone down into history as the most perfect example of English prose and the most eloquent, the most impressive and the most enduring of the many tributes pronounced by the martyr president.

The audience which faces a president or other public man at Gettysburg invariably impresses the distinguished orator. It is an assemblage obviously made up largely of the farming class and it is apt to be less demonstrative than the applauding crowds that are encountered in factory towns, but it is a body of men and women who pay such close attention to the address of which they are auditors and who so manifestly express their approval or disapproval, intelligent sentiment of our entire community as to inspire the best efforts of the speakers. It is in the character of these audiences as well as in the inspiration Gettysburg associations that we may find the incentive to the eloquence of the notable addresses which have from time to time been given expression by our chief magistrates in Memorial day addresses at Gettysburg.

Gettysburg ranks as the most elaborately and accurately marked battlefield in the world, having more monuments and memorials than all other battlefields combined. The position of every body of troops in the union army and of most of those comprising the confederate forces have been clearly outlined by distinctive landmarks and the maneuvers of the wonderful battle may be traced by all who desire to study this masterpiece of strategy and military science. The work of preserving the battlefield was inaugurated by the association incorporated by the legislature of Pennsylvania and this patriotic organization had expended more than $100,000, had acquired 600 acres of land and erected more than three hundred monuments when in 1895 the congress of the United States provided for the establishment of Gettysburg National park and placed it under the direction of the secretary of war.

A magnificent park has now been constructed which encloses the widest limits of the battlefield and the erection of memorials and markers have been set up at a cost aggregating several million dollars. When the present scheme of roadways is completed there will be between 100 and 160 miles of fine macadamized highway extending to every part of the battlefield, while five iron observation towers on various parts of the field enable sightseers to enjoy the bird-eye views which are so helpful in enabling one to understand the movements of the opposing forces that made up the far-flung battle line.

The cemetery, in dedicating which Abraham Lincoln delivered the immortal address familiar to every American, originally contained the bodies of 3,555 soldiers removed from all parts of the field, where they had been hastily buried. The field, where they had been hastily buried. The number of graves has been greatly increased since that date and there is yet ample space for the veterans who may desire to rest at the scene of the supreme struggle between the Union and the Confederacy. One of the features of the national cemetery is the typical rostrum—a memorial shrine for the dead who sleep around it and which is used for the exercises held each Memorial day.

The battle of Gettysburg is of such comparatively recent date that vivid reminders of it are to be found on all sides. The little dwellings, occupied as headquarters by Generals Meade and Lee respectively are yet standing in an excellent state of preservation; the earthworks on Cemetery hill are yet intact; Culp's hill still holds the battle-scarred trees and the bullet-marked bowlders on one of which the Devil's Den. Plans have also been made for the certain restoration of those portions of the field rate restoration of those portions of the field rate such as the famous peach orchard which figured conspicuously in the battle, but were obliterated in the course of the old-field semblance in the days following the war and before the launching of the project for perpetuating the battlefield as one of the most interesting object lessons of American history.

A boon enjoyed by present-day visitors to Gettysburg that will be sadly missed by those sightseers who come a generation hence is the presence on the battlefield as guides of veterans who participated in the thick of the fighting. To hear these men recount their personal experiences and point out by the aid of undimmed memory every locality that figured in the crucial battle of the war is to gain an impression more vivid and thrilling than can be hoped for by those who must depend for their knowledge of this military drama upon what they may have read in the histories.

Join in War Against Tuberculosis.

From statistics published in the new tuberculosis directory of the National Association for the Study and Prevention of Tuberculosis it is ascertained that over 600 cities and towns of the United States, besides about 100 in Canada, are engaged in the war against consumption, and that on April 1st there were nearly 1,500 different agencies at work in the crusade, an increase of nearly 700 per cent. The new directory lists 421 tuberculosis sanatoria hospitals, and day camps; 511 associations and committees for the prevention of tuberculosis; 343 special dispensaries; 68 open air schools; 98 hospitals for the insane and penal institutions, making special provision for their tuberculosis inmates; besides giving an account of the anti-tuberculosis legislation in every state and in about 250 cities.

The new directory is sold by the National Association for the Study and Prevention of Tuberculosis, 105 East Twenty-second street, New York city, at cost price, 50 cents postpaid.

HALF-CENTURY FETE

ANNIVERSARY OF DEPARTURE OF FIRST MINNESOTA REGIMENT FOR THE FRONT.

INTERESTING PARADE AT ST. PAUL

Follow Famed Route June 22—As Many as Possible of Regiment's Fifty Survivors to Take Part in Procession.

St. Paul.—Fifty years ago June 22 next, the First Minnesota regiment marched from the old capitol down to the river bank and there boarded the stern-wheel steamers for the front. It was the State of Minnesota's first contribution to the armies that preserved the Union.

St. Paul will celebrate this event with a civic festival next month, when as many of the regiment's fifty survivors as can be gathered will take part in a procession over the route of that martial out of 1861, down Cedar street to Sixth and thence to Jackson and to the river.

The Sons of Veterans have the fete in charge, and hope to make it one of the largest celebrations the city has seen in some time. The Public Affairs committee of the Commercial club yesterday agreed to give the Sons of Veterans $300, and appointed Grant Van Sant, Martin T. Roache and W. E. Witherspoon a committee to assist in the project.

"The possibilities of such a celebration are immense," said a member of the committee yesterday afternoon. "It may be possible to gather a considerable number of the national guard with bands from various part of the state.

"The first man who volunteered in that regiment is still living here in St. Paul. That regiment made St. Paul and Minnesota famous in the Civil war and the celebration of their marching to the front ought to be a big civic affair."

TRAGEDY AT MINNEAPOLIS.

Negro Wife Murderer Shoots Policeman and Suicides.

Minneapolis. — Charles Anderson, a uniformed policeman, was shot through the abdomen and instantly fatally wounded when James Russell, a negro, standing on the front steps of his boarding house fired three shots at the officer with a 38-calibre police Colt's, and then committed suicide by shooting himself through the head. The bullet that struck Anderson, the police surgeon says, entered the middle of the abdomen, coming out on the right side and passing through his liver.

Russell came from the house, according to witnesses, carried his right hand in a peculiar fashion. Frederick Tonander, the only white man who saw the shooting, says Anderson approached the negro and seemed to address him, whereupon the negro fired quickly. The policeman staggered back and the negro fired twice more. Then he put the pistol to his own head and shot himself. The policeman did not return the fire.

Investigation showed the negro to be a veteran of the Spanish war and a member of the famous negro regiment that joined the charge up San Juan hill. After hearing innumerable rumors about anecdotes, the police were informed that Russel's real name is William Bowen, who, twelve years ago, was wanted in Kansas City in connection with the murder of his wife. Other negroes had heard of the assailant's Kansas City experience. It is supposed that Bowen, escaping from Kansas City, changed his name and enlisted, and probably shot Anderson in fear that he was about to be arrested on the old charge.

Anderson, who is 37 years old, has a wife and baby. Mrs. Anderson was prostrated at the tidings. Anderson has been a member of the Minneapolis police force since Oct. 1, 1907.

Crashing nine stories to the street, plunging through the top of a freight shed, wrecking one freight car filled with agricultural implements, demolishing two more and sending hundreds of gallons of water through the windows of adjoining buildings, the big 100,000 gallon tank on the roof of the new building of the Great Northern Improvement Company tumbled over at 10 a. m. and created an almost unparalleled scene of spectacular debris.

Almost by a miracle eighteen men escaped injury and perhaps death. Some were working on the tank itself; others were at work under the freight canopy. The shooting of Patrolmen Charles Anderson by a negro across the street attracted their attention. All the men ran out from the freight shed, and those on the tank climbed down to see the excitement.

ANOTHER INTERURBAN LINE

Mankato to St. Peter is the Latest Electric Route.

Mankato.—The proposed electric interurban railway from this city to St. Peter, via Kasota, will be 10.87 miles long and will cost in the neighborhood of $250,000, according to the survey recently made, the report of which has just been announced. It is proposed that the local street car line take the project up and make the bond issue, and the charter authorizes it to issue $400,000 worth of bonds.

MISSIONARY SESSION ENDS.

Successful Convention at Long Prairie Comes to a Close.

Sauk Center.—The second annual convention of the Woman's Home Missionary society adjourned after a most successful meeting at Long Prairie.

Mrs. Cotton Mather of Fort Collins, Colo., was the chief speaker on patriotism. She made a deep impression and the offerings were large for the woman's work. Ten new members joined the society.

Rev. J. F. Ryan of Long Prairie and Mrs. S. J. Weeks, Minneapolis, made addresses.

The officers for the Fergus Falls district are as follows: President, Mrs. Annie Brahner Smith, Sauk Center; vice presidents, Mrs. A. H. McKee, Fergus Falls; recording secretary, Mrs. A. B. Church; corresponding secretary, Mrs. Wilbur Anderson, Long Prairie; treasurer, Mrs. L. L. Baxter, Fergus Falls; secretary of home guards, Mrs. F. S. Ulland; secretary of mite boxes, Mrs. George Carpenter.

WOLF CROP STILL GOOD.

State Pays $16,456 in Bounties on 23,523 Pelts.

St. Paul.—For bounties on wolves, the state is seeding out warrants amounting to $16,456.50. This represents sums paid for inflicting the death penalty on 1,976 full grown wolves and 548 cubs. For a full grown wolf, the state pays a bounty of $7.50, and for cubs $2.

The record show that Beltrami county produced the greatest number of wolf pelts. The same disbursed there was $1,924.50. Aitkin county was second with $957.50. St. Louis was third with $945; Polk, fourth, with $849; Otter Tail, fifth with $832.50 and Crow Wing, sixth with $795. In Becker, Grant, Hubbard and Watonwan, bounty was claimed on only one wolf each.

This disbursement compares equally with disbursements of others period, indicating that the supply of wolves is not materially decreasing.

COOLEY INDORSES ROAD.

State Engineer Favors Winona's Proposed State Highway Link.

Winona.—The Winona board of county commissioners drove over the stretch of road upon the mecadamizing of which it is proposed to expend $80,000 this summer starting from beyond Sugar Loaf and going down through Homer to Minneiska and then through Pickwick valley to Nodine on the ridge, a distance of nearly fifteen miles.

On returning from viewing the road State Engineer Cooley said that he saw in the country through which designate this a state road he would appoint O. B. Leland deputy state engineer here, and would begin a survey to estimate the cost of the improvement and that if the road is built he will appoint a man to devote his whole time to the position. Frederick

Part of this highway would be on the proposed highway from Duluth to the southeastern corner of the state.

SELLS ABOVE APPRAISAL.

Nearly Four Thousand Acres of State Land Realizes About $40,000.

Grand Rapids.—Almost 4,000 acres of state land were sold at considerable above the appraised value. All the land offered in section 4, town 56, range 22, was sold at from $45 to $60 an acre. Other tracts sold for $20 to $35.

The land in section 4, town 56, range 22, was appraised by Joseph Selwood and others, and is to be used as a site for an ore concentrating plant at Nashwauk by the International Harvester company, owner of the Crosby mine at Nashwauk.

Much of the land sold is to be used for agricultural purposes, men from Iowa, South Dakota and Wisconsin being among the buyers. The sales amounted to nearly $40,000. Theo. Nelson of Red Lake and E. P. Waldon of the state auditor's office conducted the sale.

TO HAVE DOUBLE RECITATIONS.

Plan of Summer Session at Moorhead Normal School.

Moorhead.—Arrangements practically completed for the opening of the summer session of the Moorhead normal school, which begins immediately after the closing of the spring term of the regular school year. Double recitations will be conducted in all courses this year, making it possible for all to complete both courses in the six weeks. Twenty-two instructors will be engaged in the summer school, and no unusually large attendance is expected.

Both Comstock and Wheeler halls will be kept open for the first six weeks, the repairing and remodeling to be done on Wheeler hall being deferred until later in the summer.

GOVERNOR'S WIFE ARRESTED.

Mrs. Eberhart, in Auto, Runs Down Minneapolis Boy.

Minneapolis. — After running down C. A. Thibideau, and eighteen-year-old boy, the wife of Governor Eberhart and the governor's father-in-law, Fred Koke, and their party were arrested by Patrolman Lyon and taken to the Central police station. The boy was taken to the City hospital, where it was found that he was in a serious condition. His skull is fractured and he is severely bruised.

NEW BUILDINGS AT MORRIS

EXTENSIVE IMPROVEMENTS ARE BEING PLANNED.

New structures Planned, Arranged in Order and Fronting On Campus.

Minneapolis.—The inspection trip to the agricultural school at Morris, was made last week. The tour of President Vincent of the state university and Dean Woods of the agricultural college was anything but pleasure trip. It was time-filling and important.

The Morris members of the Minnesota University Alumni gave a dinner at the La Grand hotel in the evening in honor of President Vincent and Dean Woods. Afterwards President Vincent addressed a large audience in the armory on "Education and Efficiency."

The visit to Morris was only the beginning of a general inspection tour, designed to find the best way to use the money appropriated by the recent legislature.

New Buildings Planned.

So far as the school at Morris is concerned it is practically settled, by reason of this visit, what will be done. The site of the farm was declined ideal. It was used for years by the federal government as an Indian school. Most of its buildings are antiquated. Four years ago the tract of 200 acres was turned over by the federal government to the state to be used as an experimental station or model farm. The state took action to establish such a school until last September. Supt. Higgle, who is in charge, is given much credit for the success of the school.

The enrollment during the past term was 167. There are other model farms and formley schools in the state which are much older and which have had few more attendance. The outlook for the coming term promises a substantial increase in attendance over last term.

Supt. Higgle impressee one as a man who does things. In showing the party over the ground he displayed the fact that he has been giving the matter of improvement of the farm much thought for he had very definite ideas as to what should be done, and in almost every instance the members of the party found his decisions good and adopted them.

It was decided to erect the new buildings around a campus. Some of the buildings on the ground will be removed and others will be differently placed. At present they are arranged in a haphazard fashion.

The first new building will be a $35,000 central heating plant. The contract probably will be let about July 1. A $50,000 dormitory for girls, also is planned this year, and next year a dormitory for boys at a like cost will be erected. A horse barn costing $2,000, machine and wagon shede $2,000, hoheses for hogs, sheep and poultry costing $1,500 and cow barn to cost $700 are among the building activities planned this year.

VINCENT ON INSPECTION TOUR.

"U" Head Says He Has Learned Much on Trip to Upper Minnesota.

Minneapolis.—Dr. George E. Vincent, president of the Minnesota State university, and party, who have been visiting the agricultural schools at Morris and Crookston and the experimental station at Grand Rapids, are home again.

The party had intended to inspect sites for the Duluth demonstration farm, but this will be done some other time.

"This visit to the agricultural schools and experimental farms has interested and benefited me much," said President Vincent.

"I cannot speak of upper Minnesota agriculture by, for I am just learning things relating to that industry, but I am much impressed with the people of the section and the fine type of school children in the several districts that we have visited."

TO FIGHT TEARING UP OF ROAD.

Duluth Commercial Club Will Oppose Logging Road Proposition.

Duluth.—The Duluth Commercial club will fight the tearing up of the Minnesota & North Wisconsin a logging road owned by the Rose Sheldon Lumber company, running for about sixty miles along north of the city and crossing the city railroad. The road is only eleven miles from Duluth in places, running parallel to the lake. It runs through a rapidly developing farming district.

A company may be organized to buy the road, which is owned for an extension of the suburban electric system planned for the district about Duluth. The Commercial club has taken a census of the farmers served by the road, and there are said to be 2,500 persons along the line, the number growing rapidly.

CURED ITCHING AND BURNING

"I was taken with the itch in April, 1904, and used most everything. I had a friend pay me a visit from Cumberland, and she advised me to use Cuticura Remedies which I did. The cure was certainly quick, and I owe them to this day. I had it terribly under my knees. I only used one box of pills, but two boxes of Cuticura Ointment, and it was the Cuticura Soap all the time. I hope this will benefit others, as it has me, after Dr. —— and others could do nothing for me." (Signed) Miss Lu Johnson, 1628 Ninth St., N. W., Washington, D. C., April 2, 1910.

In a later letter Miss Johnson adds: "The trouble began with an eruption under my knees, and extended upwards toward my waist, until I was afraid to sit down. It kept a constant itching and burning all the time, night and day. I went to my doctor, but he could do me no good and I do not know how many medicines he gave me, and then told me I would have to submit to go to a skin specialist, which I positively refused to do. I cried all the time. Finally I made up my mind to try Cuticura Remedies, and tried Cuticura Pills, Ointment and Soap, and was entirely cured of the itching three days after I started using them. The healing took about eight days. I consider Cuticura Remedies marvelous, and would recommend them everywhere." Cuticura Remedies are sold throughout the world. Send to Potter Drug & Chem. Corp., Boston, for free book on skin affections.

To Pray for the Fish.

Two women prominent in St. Louis have started a movement to induce 200,000 of their friends in the south to pray every day for the rain. They explain they hope by organized prayer especially groups of women, who will pray often and well for the more affluent, wealthy persons will be led to contribute to a fund for the evangelization of the world. Belle H. Bennett, president of the women's missionary council of the Methodist Episcopal church south, and Mrs. R. W. McDonnell are the originators of the plan.

REPATRIATED.

HE HAD $400.00 IN CASH IN 1903; NOW WORTH $8,000.00.

My parents were originally Canadians from Essex County, Ontario. I was born in Monroe County, Michigan, from which place I moved to Red Lake Falls, Minnesota, where I farmed for 22 years. I sold my farm there in the summer of 1903 and in September of that year came to Canada with my wife and eight children. I had about $400 in cash, team of horses, 6 cow, a few sheep and some chickens. I took up a quarter section of land near Jack Fish Lake, Meota P. O., and later on purchased for $2,000.00 an adjoining quarter section. I have now 48 head of cattle, a number of horses, good buildings and consider my holding is worth at least $8,000.00. My children have raised from $300 to $600 worth of garden truck each year since we have been here. I have never had a poor crop and have never had one frosted. My wheat has averaged from 25 to 30 bushels per acre with one or two years considerably more. My oats here have yielded well up to 90 bushels per acre and once or twice as high as 80. My cattle have never been stabled in winter, and do not need it. I consider that this country offers better opportunities for settlement than anywhere I have ever been. I am sure that almost any person can come here and buy land at say $15.00 per acre and pay for it in one crop. My experience is that if a man farms his land in the right way he is not likely to have his crop frosted.

Most of the settlers in my district are Americans and Canadians and I know lots of them who came here with little or no capital who are now doing well, but I do not know of any who have left through disappointment, or becoming discouraged, have returned to their former homes.

Shouldn't He?

A very good natured smoker, who is very much larger than his wife, and who likes his little joke at someone else's expense, was sitting in the theater. A man behind him, not knowing who he was, leaned forward and whispered, "Will you please ask your wife to remove her hat?"

"You'd better do it yourself. I'm afraid."

Whereupon the man behind become angry, arose, protested and left the theater.

SHE SUFFERED FIVE YEARS

Finally Cured by Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

Erie, Pa.—"I suffered for five years from female troubles and at last was entirely helpless. I went to three doctors and they did me no good, so my sister advised me to try Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, and when I had taken only two bottles I could see a change, so I took six bottles and am now strong and well again. I don't know how to express my thanks for the good it has done me and I hope all suffering women will give Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound a trial. It was worth its weight in gold."—Mrs. J. Ferrucci, R. F. D. No. 9, Erie, Pa.

Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, made from native roots and herbs, contains no narcotic or harmful drugs, and to-day holds the record for the largest number of actual cures of female diseases we know of, and thousands of voluntary testimonials are on file in the Pinkham laboratory at Lynn, Mass., from women who have been cured from almost every form of female complaints, such as inflammation, ulceration, displacements, fibroid tumors, irregularities, periodic pains, backache, indigestion and nervous prostration. Every suffering woman owes it to herself to give Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound a trial.

If you want special advice write Mrs. Pinkham, Lynn, Mass., for it. It is free and always helpful.

IF YOU HAVE A SICKLY YOUNGSTER TRY THIS FREE

The family with young children that is without sickness in the house now and then has very good reason to congratulate itself. The next thing for you to do in the little emergencies that arise, is to keep Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin on hand. Your druggist sells it, or any doctor, it is true, but in the majority of instances, as any doctor knows, the child suffers from some intestinal trouble, usually constipation.

There is no sense in giving it a pill or a remedy containing an opiate, nor in washing of the bowels. It is always done something to the child. Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin, which, by cleaning out the bowels and straightening the little stomach muscles, will immediately correct the trouble.

This is not alone our opinion but that of Mrs. W. B. Mead of Prospect, Kans., who says: "I have used Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin in my family for the croup and it never fails. Mrs. Wise of Lena, Wis., who gives it to her children and takes it herself. It is sold in fifty cent and one dollar bottles at every drug store, but if you want to test it in your family before you buy it send your address to Dr. Caldwell and he will forward a supply free of charge.

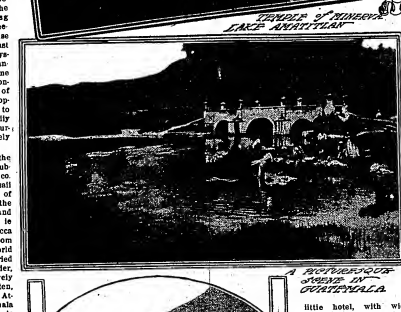
RIVALS GRANDEUR of SWISS LAKES

By Edine Francis Tisdel

BORED by the loveliness of Norway's fiords and grown weary of the soft beauty of the Italian and the rugged grandeur of the Swiss lakes, the blase globe trotter turns in search of some new enchanted spot where the realization that it is seen for the first time lends again some zest to life.

The world is fast grasping the fact that in the comparatively small space between Mexico and the isthmus of Panama lies, as it were, the land of Promise—a promise of wealth invisible to the realm of commerce, through the cultivation and development of marvelously rich and fertile countries which are being opened up with wonderful rapidity by the network of railroads that are spreading throughout the five beautiful republics of Central America. More than a land of promise to the archaeologist, who sees here a vast field for research wherein to unravel the mystery which surrounds the history of the ancient American civilization and throw some light upon the origin of the people whose wonderful works are evidenced in the ruins of prehistoric cities found hidden in dense tropical forests. A land of beautiful realities to even the ordinary tourist, who finds easily accessible a wealth of scenic beauty unsurpassed and a perfection of climate rarely equaled.

This is particularly true of Guatemala, the most northern of the Central American republics and our nearest neighbor after Mexico. It is reached by a three days' delightful sail on the Gulf of Mexico and along the coast of British Honduras. The fine new ships of the United Fruit company give every luxury and comfort of ocean travel, and Guatemala, is the very next future, will become the Mecca of those desiring to escape the cold and gloom of a northern winter. Nowhere in the world can be found more magnificent and varied scenery than that which greets the traveler, especially in the lake regions of this lovely republic. Of the four larger lakes—Peten, lying far to the north; Yzabal, near the Atlantic coast; Amatitlan, on the Guatemala Central railroad not far from Guatemala City, and Atitlan, tucked away in the mountains near the Pacific coast—there is small choice. Differing so widely, each in its way is perfect, characteristic of its location and climate.



Upon our arrival at Puerto Barrios we concluded to visit Lake Yzabal before going up to the City of Guatemala. After one night of rest, therefore, we boarded the little mail boat which carried us out from the landlocked bay, a short distance across the Gulf of Amatique and along the shore line, where graceful palms stirred lazily in the perfumed breeze, to Livingston. This town is picturesquely situated on a bluff at the mouth of the Rio Dulce, or Sweet river. A new hotel, with comfortable rooms and excellent cuisine, has lately been opened here, and a day or two may be well spent enjoying the many unusual scenes in this quaint little town.

From the porch of the hotel the Rio Dulce we look down through a maze of palm trees, across the thatched roofs of the town, to the sparkling waters of the bay, where the Carib dart back and forth in graceful canoes. In a kneeling posture and with only the use of a paddle, they skim across the water with incredible speed. The air is heavy with the scent of jasmine and gardenias; the gleam of oranges and the tiny golden balls of the cumquat mast the eye at every turn, and towering above all the great spreading branches of the wonderful breadfruit trees.

Lake Yzabal lies about 50 miles inland and a regular line of steamers ply between Livingston and Panzos, in the interior on the Polochic river. We did not, however, avail ourselves of this usual means of transportation, having had a launch placed at our disposal.

For the first ten miles we followed the winding course of the Rio Dulce, the beauty of which is only comparable to that of the fairyland Saguenay. So dense is the tropic confusion of nature, the mountains have been rent asunder and through picturesque canyons and gorges this lovely river wends its majestic course to the sea. The shores gradually draw nearer together and we soon find ourselves shut in between towering walls of green, rising to a height of 400 to 500 feet, with dense tropical vegetation and graceful overhanging vines lazily swaying in the breeze. Here the water seems to be motionless, its glassy surface reflecting in absolute perfection all detail each leaf and flower, and not a sound breaks the silence. The only signs of life are the hundreds of beautiful white Garzas, the birds which furnish Dame Fashion with the much-desired and ever-expensive aigrette. We passed occasionally a native drifting downstream in his dugout, or pitpan, as these canoes are called—his cargo a bunch of bananas or a string of fish.

The shores again receded and we entered the Gulf of Golfete, a pretty body of water some ten miles in length and dotted with numerous islands. Another narrow channel and we finally entered the lake proper. A beautiful picture is before us—the lovely expanse of water with its wooded shores rising gradually to the rugged Sierras de las Minas, to the south, and the Santacruz mountains, to the north. Here stand the picturesque ruins of the old Spanish fort of San Felipe, built in 1825 by Hernando Cortez during his march from Mexico to Honduras and erected to protect the approach to the town of Yzabal, which at that time was the principal port of entry. It is now of small importance, a sandbar having formed across the mouth of the Rio Dulce, which prevents vessels drawing over 16 feet of water from reaching this inland sea. Large brass cannon, bearing the date 1496, have been found scattered among the ruins of this old fortification.

Neither pen nor brush can do justice to the wild beauty of the Polochic river, and those in search of new sensations can enjoy the unique experience of traveling in perfect safety through a tropical wilderness, where gayly colored parrots and inquisitive monkeys chatter at the intruder from overhanging branches, and crocodiles, with wide open mouths, lie basking in the sun.

This is the main route to the coast for the natives of the Coban and Peten districts, who bring their products in canoes down the river to Lake Yzabal and thus to the markets of Livingston.

On the Polochic, near Panzos, is situated the great rubber plantation of "Tinajas," which covers 156,000 acres of land. It is owned by the Guatemala Central railroad and is one of the most important and richest estates of its kind in Central America.

In the northern part of the country lies the great lake of Peten, or San Andres, of which comparatively little is known, except to antiquarians. Situated in a wild, almost uninhabited part of the country, perhaps the richest in all Guatemala, it is difficult of access. This immense body of fresh water, 27 miles long and having a shore line of 70 miles, is dotted with numerous islands. On the largest of these is the town of Flores, with about 15,000 inhabitants. Near Flores are the ruins of a buried city, with stone images and monoliths covered with hieroglyphics, showing the unread history of a people which dwelt in the midst of this primeval forest ages ago.

At Lake Amatitlan we find ourselves on a much visited lake. The borders of this lovely body of water, lying only 13 miles to the south of Guatemala City, are the playgrounds of the capital. For 16 miles along its curved shore line run the tracks of the Guatemala central railroad, which, particularly on Sundays and holidays, carries many excursionists to the town of Amatitlan, the favorite resort of picnickers.

Situated at an altitude of nearly 2,000 feet above the level of the sea, 12 miles long and 3 miles wide, it is very deep and gives rise to a river, the Guastoya, which has its outlet in the Pacific ocean, 12 miles south of the port of San Jose, where it is 12 miles wide.

At the station of Laguna we find a nice little hotel, with wide porches which overlook the rippling blue waters and from where we can look across to the rich green slope of the giant volcano, Agua, which rises in one magnificent, unbroken sweep to the height of 13,000 feet. Behind it one catches a glimpse of the jagged crest of Fuego.

Amatitlan presents much to interest the scientist. The waters are strongly impregnated with sulphur and iron, and many people come here for the baths. In cases of rheumatism some remarkable cures have been made.

A curious phenomenon, which is a yearly occurrence, generally during the month of March, is an eruption which takes place at the bottom of the lake, and great quantities of small pan fish rise to the surface of the water. This sulphur rise to the death knell of the fish. At for a time, in the death knell of the fish. At all other times, however, the sportsman can indulge in his favorite pastime to his heart's content. The markets of Guatemala City are daily supplied from this lake, the Mojarra, a delicious fish of the perch family, being very plentiful. Fried to a crisp brown and piping hot, they are a most attractive and fascinating dish.

There is also a novelty about a picnic, when eggs can be cooked without trouble by merely dropping them into one of Mother Nature's ever-boiling pots.

It has been my good fortune to see many lakes in different parts of the world, but never have I seen one more exquisitely beautiful than the curious crater lake of Atitlan, incomparable for grandeur of scenery and perfection of climate.

In the southwestern part of Guatemala, some 35 miles from the railroad and at an altitude of 5,000 feet, nature seems, on the borders of this silent body of water, to have reached the culmination of her handiwork.

Discovered first by the Spaniards in 1524, Alvarado was here victorious in a desperate battle with the natives, and, exploring the surrounding country, took possession in the name of Spain.

In the very heart of the mountains we find this lake, 30 miles in length and 10 miles in breadth. Although many streams empty their waters into it, there is no visible outlet and its depth is unknown, no soundings having been made with a line of more than 300 fathoms.

It is impossible to describe the charm and witchery of this country, bathed in moonlight, the scenery at each step becoming more impressive. We forded rushing, tumbling mountain streams, looking like cascades of silver, and we rode through silent Indian villages, where the inhabitants were sleeping in front of their strange little bamboo huts. The only sound to break the silence was the plaintive call of the whippoorwill.

We reached the village of San Lucas, on the borders of the lake, and there we found in readiness the little steamer which was to take us across to the hotel on the opposite shore, a trip of an hour and a half.

Words are inadequate to portray the scene which was before us. The great expanse of water lay like molten silver in the moonlight, the mountains, solemn and awe-inspiring, standing in serried ranks like giant sentinels to guard this treasure. A soft, pearly mist hung over all, but not so dense as to hide the perfect outline of the three great volcanoes—the two Atitlans and San Pedro. These stupendous giants rise to the height of nearly 12,000 feet and fall in one unbroken sweep to the water's edge.

In this peaceful spot the days slip by unheeded. The world and its busy life beyond the towering mountains is forgotten and we drift out upon a sea of romance and poetry.

There are many delightful excursions to be made in the vicinity, eleven quaint Indian villages, named after the apostles, dotting the shores; considerable commerce is carried on between these towns by means of canoes, and the steam launch makes the round of the lake regularly twice a week. The town of Atitlan is very picturesquely situated on a bay cutting inland between the two volcanoes—San Pedro and Atitlan. Not far away, snuggled close to the water's edge at the foot of Atitlan, is the "Cerro del Oro"—Mountain of Gold—where a great treasure is believed by the natives to lie buried, and the ruins of an old fort can be vaguely discerned.

Two thousand feet above the lake is the lergh town of Solola, capital of the province of the same name and a center of commerce. Here is obtained a fine view of the surrounding country, but by far the most beautiful is that from the height of Godinez. We find ourselves at an altitude of 8,000 feet and the whole world appears to lie before us. It is here that not the snow peaks of Switzerland, but instead is the unusual spectacle of range after range of mountains, as far as the eye can see, dominated by the majestic heads of great volcanoes, seven in all, magnificent in their imposing grandeur and jealously guarding the beautiful lake, which, like a great sapphire, lies 3,000 feet below.

The climate of the mist which is characteristic of this region during the greater part of the year occasionally melts away, and as we stood on this spot, speechless before the wonder of this panorama, it seemed for our benefit alone to have crept silently away in the night, and earth and sky and water were perfectly revealed, outvying each other in deepest tones of blue.

But even as we gazed soft clouds formed in the valleys below and crept stealthily up, writhing and twisting like great white snakes, until once more they had encircled the mountains like giant serpents whose power even the great hills could not withstand.

Nature seemed to say that we had looked already too long upon her secret treasures, and softly but swiftly she again drew around us the gauzy mantle in which, except at rare intervals, she keeps them wrapped.

The Starling and the Organ

New York's big new Cathedral of St. John the Divine, on Morningside Heights, already has a permanent tenant. This is a starling, which apparently has settled in a shadowy hole high up above the great organ, built a nest there and designs to rear a family.

The starling lends a decidedly English touch to the massive structure. From its lofty perch it looks down curiously on the assembled worshippers, as though they, not it, were the interlopers, as no doubt it feels they are. But when the organ is being played the starling forgets intruder to join in the music. It swells its throat and starts out bravely to drown the thunder of the mighty instrument. Presently a look of perplexity steals across its countenance. It has found something against which its own shrill tones beat themselves into silence. And then it ceases its attempt at rivalry and surrenders itself to the pleasure of listening. It is a good listener. As long as the organ continues it remains attentive, confessing by its attitude that here is something superior even to bird song.

PRINT WITHOUT INK

Englishman Makes Remarkable Discovery by Accident.

By Means of Electricity Invantor Can Print a Newspaper in All Hues of the Rainbow With One Contact.

London—About two years ego a fugitive paragraph drifting in the English press hed for its subject a possible "printing without ink."

Just now a semi-technical London publication hes succeeded in running down the author of the discovery and from him it hes the story of the experiment up to dets. The man is Cecil Benbridge, London address not given.

It was en accidentel leed which Mr. Benbridge picked up in his discovery of inless printing. It was shout 12 years ego that, working in his laboratory with an electric battery, he had spread a sheet of tin on the table and on the tin plate he had laid a piece of moist paper. The bare ends of the copper wires from his battery trelled over this sheet of wet paper which had stuck feet to the plate of tin.

His experiment originelly was to discover a certain electro-metallurgical action in coenection with gold and for the purpose of the experiment he reached into his pocket for a gold coin. As he brought a handful of miscellaneous coins from his pocket, a gold piece slipped through his fingers, rolled upon the table and in catching et the coin, he olemped the sovereign upon one of the connecting battery wires and in firm contact with the moist peper. In the effort at stopping the coin, too, the other wire was pushed over until it ley in contact with the sheet of tin. Then cemo the accidental discovery.

His reached for the coin and in picking it up was surprised to fied upon the moist peper en ehsolutely clear imprint of the coin in a brownish black. He describes the print es even clearer then if he had inked the coin and applied the inked surfece to the peper by cereful pressure.

Following his questionings he procured a few fimsy sheets of print, assembled them, and placed the type, face down, on e like sheet of moist peper resting upon the sheet of tin. When the battery wires were connected with the type matel end with the tin sheet end current supplied, every letter showed from the typs lines without blur or blemish.

Taking a sheet of zinc in lieu of the tin, egain the electricel influences brought the seme generel effect; though the crudest of hand methods were used in epplying the type to the peper. Dry paper was not effected; moisture was required for the proper conductivity

After proving to his satisfection that, regerdless of the pressure upon the peper in contact, the clearness of the lettering was satisfactory, Mr. Benbridge sought to discover a chemical moistener for the peper which would give the let black effect of ordinery printers' ink and at the seme time preserve the whiteness of the peper.

The great trouble was to secure permenency in the electrical imprint.

For ten years Mr. Benbridge wrestled with the solution of his problem. Todey he announces that everything is accomplished and proved, not only in the matter of e let black print without ink, but esserts that he is able to print a newspaper in all hues of the rainbow and with the one contact.

As explained by Mr. Benbridge, his long searchings into chemical combinations ere producing jet black prints led him on into electro-pigmentary combinations productive of colorings more numerous than all of this, however, the assertion is made that in treating the white paper some of the chemicent of chemicel elements serve the purpose admirably and at a cost far below that of the costly printer's ink.

As for the presses for turning out the newspaper, they are greatly simplified, the ink troughs and rollers disappearing altogether. The stereotype plate is used and its position on the press is thoroughly insulated below, while the roller surface which guides the moist paper also is insulated. The paper rollers are connected with the positive magnetic pole, while the stereotype plate is linked with the negative and from the electric power that runs the press the electro-chemical action is set up, making the imprint as desired upon the paper.

TALES OF GOTHAM AND OTHER CITIES

Horse Stealing Reduced to Science

NEW YORK—Not the wild and woolly west, but New York city with its great police powers and its highly organized civilization is the most fruitful field for horse thieves in the country. The amount of property stolen by horse thieves in the country's metropolis in one year probably exceeds that stolen in Kansas, Nebraska, Colorado and Texas in ten years. This crime is so easy of execution and so hard of detection in a great city like New York that detectives have been able to make but little headway in checking it and recovering any of the stolen property. On an average five horses and wagons are stolen in the city every business day. In place the amount lost every year is difficult.

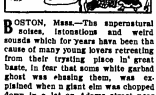
No man's horse is safe in the streets of the city. The horse of the big department store is as likely to disappear as the horse and wagon of the small grocer or butcher. Detectives say that the theft is easily covered up. Within six hours after the horse and wagon disappear a transformation is made, which is so complete that few owners can identify their property. The horse is shorn of his mane and tail, white legs are dyed a color corresponding with the body of the horse, and cases have been known where a stolen horse was described as having a bobbed tail, when the horse when finally recovered was found to have had a very beautiful tail, attached to the former stub.

The same with the wagon. A gayly painted wagon is soon transformed into a dilapidated peddler's wagon. The top is removed, dashboard knocked off, and a dirty drab or brown coat of paint reduces the wagon that cost from $150 to $200 to one that, when the thief sells it, will not bring more then $50.

Teaching Parents What Toys to Buy

CHICAGO. — "Parents of Chicago boys and girls do not know how to buy toys for their children."

It was upon this assumption that the committee on homes of the child welfare exhibit based an exhibition at the Coliseum a child's "play shop." In it there was on display an endless variety of toys, but foremost of all were the new "do-with" toys introduced for the first time in Chicago by Miss Caroline Pratt, who had charge of the toy exhibit. Miss Pratt was in charge of the same department of the exhibit in New York.



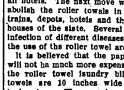
"Chicago parents are as deplorably ignorant in the matter of buying proper toys for their children as, parents the country over," she told a reporter. "They don't know the first thing about it. What they do in most cases when they go shopping in the toy department of a store is to buy toys that they like to play with themselves."

"That, of course, is the reason we have a 'toy shop' exhibit. The exhibit is planned for the education of all the parents of Chicago—but, by the way, it is the well-to-do fathers and mothers who are most ignorant of all along this line. When we expect to teach them is the real merit of a 'do with' toy.

"A 'do with' toy is one that will teach the child how to do things. With it a boy or girls can carry out definite play schemes. It should be simple. It teaches the child by stimulating its imaginative nature and inventive faculties. Such toys leave no less altogether in the elaborate mechanical toys that leave nothing for the child to do but press a button or release a catch and watch it go.

"What we are trying to do through the exhibit is to teach parents that their children have a normal play impulse which can be more easily gratified than it is now. We want to try and to inspire the child's imagination and inventive nature than by all the complicated and mechanical toys in the world."

Solve Mystery of an Ancient Ghost



BOSTON, Mass.—The supernatural noises, intonations and weird sounds which for years have been the cause of many young lovers retreating from their trysting place in great haste, in fear that some white garbed ghost was chasing them, was explained when a giant elm was chopped down in a lot on Adams street near the Cedar Grove cemetery in Dorchester. The explanation was an owl and family of chipmunks.

For twenty-five years strange noises have been heard at all hours of the night in that section, and the lot being so near the cemetery many people believed they were voices from the graves. The police have investigated slightly and some of the more curious neighbors have spent many long vigils in an attempt to solve the source of the weird noises. The solution of the strange thing came about when the giant elm in question, probably more than 100 years old, was felled at the instigation of the public grounds department.

When the big elm fell it was discovered that about thirty feet of its top was hollow, and inside was found an owl of the bald-headed variety sleeping as quietly as though nothing had happened. The inside of the tree was found to be filled with egg shells, corn cobs and various other refuse which the owl had from time to time taken there. While the owl occupied a conspicuous place in the tree, calmly sleeping in a heap in the bottom of the hole, there was a mother and father chipmunk with twenty-five little ones.

Kansas Pupils to Have Paper Towels

TOPEKA, Kan.—Paper towels for the use of every child in the Kansas public schools probably will be installed before the next school year begins. E. T. Fairchild, state superintendent of public instruction, and Dr. S. J. Crumbine, secretary of the state board of health, are watching with interest the experiments being carried on in several Kansas schools with the paper towels. If the experiments are successful an order may be issued abolishing the common roller towel in all public schools and this will mean that each pupil must furnish his own towel or the school board must supply the individual paper towels.

The state board of health abolished the common drinking cup two years ago and there has not been a single epidemic of diphtheria in the state since, and very few isolated cases. The board also prohibited the use of the common drinking cup in railroad trains and stations and the common drinking cups have been abolished in all hotels. The roller towels in railroad trains, depots, hotels and the school houses of the state. Several cases of infection of different diseases through the use of the roller towel are known.

It is believed that the paper towel will be much more expensive than the roller towel laundry bills. The towels are 10 inches wide and 18 inches long. They are heavy, sharp bent tissue paper. One will dry the face and hands easily. A set of fixtures and a roll of 1,000 towels costs from $8 to $2 and extra rolls cost 50 cents for each 1,000 towels. When used the towels are to be burned.

IN THE LIMELIGHT

NEW LEADER OF THE MINERS

John P. White of Oskaloosa, Iowa, has become president of the United Mine Workers of America. The attainment of this high position is a tribute to perseverance and integrity for John White, at the age of two was an orphan and at the age of thirteen was a mule boy in the mines of Lucas county, helping support his mother and brothers and sisters.

White was born at a stone's throw from the mouth of a coal mine in Coal Valley, Rock Island county, Ill., February 28, 1870. He was the youngest son of Joseph and Catherine White. After his father died the family, in 1883, moved to Lucas county, where John entered the mines. He has been actively identified with the United Mine Workers since 1899, when the movement was fragmentary. He was chosen secretary-treasurer of District No. 12, a position he held until April 1, 1904, when he was chosen president of the district. He served as such until 1908, when he was unanimously elected vice-president of the international union. He returned to Iowa, and, at the earnest request of the miners, he again accepted the district presidency, which he has just relinquished to assume the duties of the higher office. In 1890 White was married to Miss Ida Bethold of Burlington.

NOW AMBASSADOR TO RUSSIA

The post of ambassador to Russia is one of the most important in our diplomatic service, owing to the interplay of Russian and American interests in the far East and to the grave questions affecting trade and politics which are constantly arising in that far-off region of the Orient. Our new ambassador to Russia, former Governor Curtis Guild of Massachusetts, was selected for this difficult post because of his recognized ability and his broad comprehension of American interests.

Mr. Guild is a native of Boston, a graduate of Harvard and of Geneva university and is the wearer of several university degrees. As a young man he entered the office of the Boston Commercial Bulletin, founded by his father, worked himself upward into the editorial chair and in 1900 became sole owner of the paper.

Through his newspaper experiences he became interested in politics and in several campaigns toured the country in the interests of the Republican party. In 1900 he was the companion of Roosevelt in a stumping tour of the west. Two years later he was elected lieutenant governor of Massachusetts and served three years, which were followed by his election as governor, in which post he served three terms.

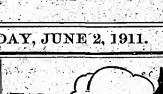
WOMAN WHO OWNS BALL CLUB

While not slighting the men fans, "ladies first" is practically to be the motto and slogan of baseball's newest and most novel figure, the "lady owner," who is personified by Mrs. Helen Hathaway Britton of Cleveland, owner of the St. Louis National league.

Mrs. Britton has taken charge of the affairs of the club. She is not entirely a novice in baseball, as she comes of a remarkable baseball family. Her father was the late Frank DeHass Robison, owner of the Cleveland Spiders and later the St. Louis club, and now she succeeds her brother, the late M. Stanley Robison, owner of the club, in assuming control of its destinies.

"The women, girls and children are to be catered to in League park," says Mrs. Britton, "and for that reason the elimination of the liquor bar from the park remains perpetual. My uncle established that rule for this reason, and it is my wish as strongly as it was his to do away with this feature of baseball, which has nothing to do with the game itself. In the absence of the bar we expect to have the presence of more women and children, a result we earnestly desire, and which we will do our utmost to maintain to the pleasure of all our patrons."

SENATOR TILLMAN NEAR END



Senator Ben Tillman, his pitchfork at rest, is back on his asparagus farm near Trenton, S. C. "I look in the glass and see the old Ben," he said the other day to one who had inquired about his health; "then I find I am not worth a d—n."

The senator is not far astray. The rugged form and face are apparently the same as ever. There is still a flickering of the old fire in his single eye. But his physique is a bodily shell. None of his family refers to his failing health, nor do visitors mention it.

Senator Tillman hates the idea of death. "Just when I'm getting ready to live I've got to die," he complained to a friend recently. And yet while apparently the hand of death is close to him he is planning for the future. The other day he directed the setting out of a new vineyard. It adjoins the kitchen garden, in which Mrs. Tillman, in sunbonnet and apron, was at work with a weeding hoe. She is a fine, motherly woman, and the plain truth is that she's a good deal prettier to look at than most of the women who, among her flowers and vegetables that she is raising, is a bed of lupines, palmetto purple and yellow asters of iris and hollyhocks, all of 'em setting out.

WASHINGTON GOSSIP

The White House Is Closely Guarded

WASHINGTON.—Probably no other building in America is so well policed as the White House. It takes 42 men to do it daily. If any mischievous stranger should seek entrance, he would not get far. Twenty-four men guard the outside of the building and 18 the inside. Eight are in the executive offices. Fourteen guard the White House within and without at night. The number of men enumerated does not include the secret service men who guard the person of the president and who are sometimes in service to guard the members of the president's family. Every door in the White House has its policeman constantly on guard.

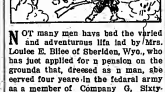
There are always two in the basement of the executive offices, where there is a large door leading from the street for the reception of supplies. There is always a policeman at the kitchen entrance. Two men in livery, not policemen, guard the main entrance into the White House at the north portico. In the daytime there is a policeman in the east room and one each at both entrances and one at the private apartments of the president and his family on the upper floor.

Outside there is constant vigilance in front and in the rear, if the White House may be conceived as having any rear. The south front is as beautiful as the north front and indeed more so.

That the White House should have to be thus carefully guarded may seem strange to Americans whose chief executive is after all only a democrat who is a citizen temporarily, holding a high public office. But it is necessary. Three Presidents have been assassinated, although none ever at the White House. It would seem none ever could be because of the vigilance kept there. But a deadly plays upon the White House and the occupants of it, especially the president. It attracts all kinds of people, and cranks are ever dangerous. Many is the one apprehended before he has gone far.

Bankers Quick to Detect Bad Money

THE exact chance of any one person having a bad piece of money to hand to determine, for the reason that no one, not even the secret service, knows at any one time just how much counterfeit currency is in circulation. But from years of experience the government agents at Washington have figured out that in paper money the proportion of bad to good is about $1 to $100,000, and in coin somewhere between $3 and $3 to $100,000.



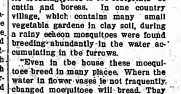
The larger the coin or bill to be counterfeited the greater the danger of detection and the need of a more expensive plant. The commonest way of making spurious money is the turning out of base metal coins—but the operation is expensive.

In the counterfeiting of paper money there are three methods used, copying by hand, photographic reproduction, and the raiding of genuine bills from lower to higher denominations. It takes a good man a whole day to change one bill. Hence to raid in this are the most frequent offenders of this sort. The workman thus makes $6 a day.

And yet in spite of all care and all precautions, counterfeiters are eventually run to earth. Why? Three reasons: Bank, secret service and system. In the long run the most money detection comes into the hands of some bank. And there the counterfeit, which is eventually certain to be, is detected. Tellers and cashiers handle so much currency that they seem to be gifted with second sight.

If he cannot tell at first glance whether the money is bad, he consults two monthly counterfeiting magazines and usually finds what he is after. The magazine people co-operate with the secret service. And the next teller or cashier who gets the mate of the note knows right off what the counterfeit is.

Woman Soldier Now Seeks a Pension



NOT many men have led the varied and adventurous life led by Mrs. Louise E. Bilse of Sheridan, Wyo., who has just applied for a pension on the grounds that, dressed as a man, she served four years in the federal army as a member of Company G, Sixty-third infantry, from Illinois, from 1861 to 1865. Mrs. Bilse is now an old woman, with white hair and wrinkled face, and is almost destitute. In her cheek she bears the scar left by a bullet fired at Vicksburg; a long gash across the upper left arm is a memento of Corinth and a Confederate saber.

According to the story told by Mrs. Bilse to the pension agent, and sworn to by her, she was living in Illinois at Jonesboro, when the war broke out. She was enthusiastic and patriotic and wanted to join the army, but of course could not do so in eldyrs. So she cut off her hair, donned a suit of men's clothing and applied for enlistment. In the excitement and hurry of the early days of enlistment, when there were thousands of applicants, the disguised girl was passed and found herself a member of Col. McCowan's regiment, the Sixty-third infantry.

Just before the war ended the true sex of the young soldier became known to a comrade, and immediately after being mustered out of the service because of the termination of hostilities, she married John Bilse, who had served in the same company and regiment with her throughout the war.

Uncle Sam Warns Against Mosquitoes

WAR on the mosquito as well as on the house fly has been declared by the department of agriculture. As a disseminator of diseases the mosquito is branded as being as great a menace to humanity as the fly. L. O. Howard, chief of the bureau of entomology, has issued a bulletin on the protection of communities from mosquitoes. He lays stress on the necessity of abolishing breeding places of the insect pest.

"Where the rain barrel and rain water tank are necessary they should be screened. The waste places in the immediate vicinity of a house should be carefully searched for tin cans, bottles and wooden or tin boxes in which water can accumulate, and all such receptacles should be destroyed or carried away. The roof gutters should be carefully examined to make sure that they are not clogged so as to allow the water to accumulate.

"The chicken pens in the poultry yard, the water in the troughs for domestic animals, the water cup of the grindstone are all places in which three pests of mosquitoes will breed.

"In slightly marshy ground a favorite breeding place is the footprints of cattle and horses. In one country village, which contains many small vegetable gardens in clay soil, during a rainy season mosquitoes were found breeding abundantly in the water accumulating in the furrows.

"Even in the house these mosquitoes breed in many places. Where the water in flower vases is not frequently changed mosquitoes will breed. They will breed in water pitchers in unused guest rooms. Public dumps are great breeding places, because here accumulate old bottles, cans, boxes, bits of tin, or iron, vessels, and other objects in which water may accumulate for a time.

VALUE OF IMAGINATION.

Life naturally must be more interesting to the person of vivid imagination than to one who lives only for the tangible things about him and who fears to dream as his fancy wills because really bears heavily upon him. We do not think that even the man of affairs would find the indulgence of a few day dreams detrimental to his interests, while to those who look only upon the serious side of life and share only its darker aspects, a few dreams of what perhaps may come to pass would act as a tonic upon tired nerves, says the Charleston News and Courier. Our dreams are often companions to us, and sometimes we find ourselves moving unconsciously with them in a world far removed from our real habitation, but one whose promises seem easy of fulfillment and whose delights compensate for some of the hardships we may, perhaps, be called upon to bear during our waking hours. The world which is our idea of happiness, with all its wonder of accomplishment and all its measure of appreciation—the world in which we reluctantly play an important part—who has not seen its shining sands, end lofty summits, and flowering paths, beckoning, telling us how good it is to live and defying us to resist its appealing call? We cannot all gain its shores ocd discover long-hidden secrets, but, at least, we can turn its promises to our advantage and make our doy dreams cases, as it were, in the desert spots of life.

James H. Collins, writing of "the Jerry German mind," notes that a generation ago the chief exports of Germany were philosophy, poetry, music and emigrants, while today she ships machinery, chemicals, textiles and other manufactured products, and the mere thought of her competition scares America ed has brought England to the verge of hysteria. How has this come about? You could put all Germany, and Pennsylvania in boot, in the state of Texas. Yet there are upward of 65,000,000 Germans. With scant natural resources, the Tenton had to think hard and make the best of it. Just as in scholarly and scientific research, his agricultural and industrial labors have been intense, methodical, plodding, thorough. He has taught the world how to farm. He is supreme in the economic use of chemicals.

It is rather comfortable to hear that the opinion of experts in the Lake Superior region is decidedly adverse to the view that the supplies of iron ore at the present rate of increased use will last only a short time. Those familiar with the region point out billions of tons in the Cascade range, besides millions proved up in the Negaunee, Iahpemig and other ranges to the west ward of the latter. Possibly a strict analysis of the prophecy of short life for our ore supply would disclose that it refers only to the exhaustion of the Mesaba deposits. Even then they are predicated on the maintenance of a rate of increase in mining equal to the exceptional one of the past two decades. Apart from the correctness of that calculation the fact is well known that there are vast deposits of ore ret practically untouched.

Look into the eyes of the oriental and you look into orbs that are opaque to Occidental discernment. A myriad and alien light hints an appalling gulf of sentiment. But somewhere behind the screen with which the patient Chinaman holds his dignity of solitude there heats a heart as ready to bleed at the story of suffering of his own people as that of the stranger all too prone to call him dovil. The "heathen Chinee" is perhaps not so peculiar as his reputation.

A zoo expert says that snakes must be protected. For obvious reasons, those who disagree with him will be afraid to do anything but give an apparent acquiescence, if they do not wish to subject themselves to serious suspicion.

The oldest woman in New York died the other day at the age of one hundred and seventeen. She did not advise the world to follow her mode of living. Blessings on her soul!

"Women always are and constitutionally ought to be tougher than men," says Prof. Tyler of Amherst college. Still, no man ought to learn it to his wife to bring up the kitchen coal.

"Woman is stronger than man," opines Professor Tyler. At any rate, a good many of us are led to believe that she is stronger in the vicinity of the swhone.

Finally, a good word has been said for the English sparrow. Somebody at last says he "could that it sets the native birds' nests do its birdie."

DIAZ RESIGNS AT LAST

ACCEPTANCE OF RESIGNATION BY CHAMBER OF DEPUTIES ALMOST UNANIMOUS.

CORRAL ALSO QUITS HIS OFFICE

Aged General Says He Is Unable to Discover Own Culpability.—De la Barra Chosen Provisional President.

Mexico City, Mexico. — President Porfirio Diaz, to a letter read by the president of the chamber of deputies resigned the presidency.

Everyone had expected an uproar and demonstration when the announcement should be made, but within the chamber the words announcing the event were followed by a dead silence. The deputies seemed awed by what had taken place.

In the packed streets, however, news that Diaz was at last no more the president was the signal for wild shouting and manifestations. There was no violence nor no destruction of property. It is the first time in 30 years that the people of Mexico have been given the opportunity to shout with impunity the name of their choice for the presidency.

Provisional President de la Barra acknowledged his elevation to that high office in an open letter to the Mexican people. In it he declares he will not be a candidate for either presidency or vice president when the general election is called.

On the motion to accept the president's resignation, 167 deputies voted aye, while two of them did not express themselves.

In similar fashion the resignation of Vice President Ramon Corral, now in France, was unanimously accepted, and similarly accepted was de la Barra, late ambassador to Washington, was chosen provisional president.

Of scarcely less interest to the popular mind was the practical assumption of military control of the federal district by Alfredo Robles Domingues, Madero's personal representative. Senor Domingues stated that he can bring 5,000 organized rebel troops into the city within three hours.

President Diaz' Letter.

President Diaz in his letter of resignation, addressed to the chamber of deputies, says: "I do not know of any fact imputable to which could have caused this social phenomenon, but, permitting thought not admitting that I may be unwittingly culpable, such a possibility makes me the least able to reason out and decide my own culpability."

Diaz is Eulogized.

The one dramatic speech of the day was made by Deputy Jose Lupe. In introducing the president's letter of resignation, Deputy Lupe made one of the most brilliant oratorical efforts with which the chamber has ever rung. His voice was repeatedly drowned by applause and the floor fairly shook with the dmonstration which followed his peroration.

The speaker admitted that General Diaz had been called to account for his errors by a people who had progressed faster than the author of their progress had realized, but he declared the good that General Diaz had done his country would live forever in history and outweigh his mistakes.

DILLINGHAM INTRODUCES RESOLUTION FOR FULL INQUIRY INTO BRIBERY CHARGE.

BASED ON ILLINOIS REQUEST

La Follette in Address Reviews Case, Declares Delay of Accused Colleague in Defending Himself Brought Opprobrium on Senate.

Washington.—A resolution calling for a prompt inquiry into the charges against Senator Lorimer of Illinois, was totrodnced to the senate by Senator Dillingham, chairman of the committee on privileges and elections. The Democratic senators will support the resolution.

The resolution was offered by Mr. Dillingham in recognition of the resolution adopted by the state senate of Illinois calling upon the federal senate to take action. After quoting the request of the Illinois upper house in full the Dillingham resolution provides for a full investigation by the committee on privileges and elections or a subcommittee, with special instructions to ascertain whether corrupt practices or methods were adopted hy any person, firm or corporation with reference to the election.

Senator La Follette first discussed representative government. He said the government was representative as long as senators obeyed the popular will and were elected without the interposition of any outside power. He asked senators to conceive a man holding such a trust sitting silently by with his title tainted. He said the delay by Senator Lorimer had brought great opprobrium on the senate itself. Senator La Follette attacked the senate system of tourney as helping to veil and undermine representative government. He said the system excused and palliated violations of the high principles which asnotore brought from home. He said there was some purpose behind it, and that, moreover, he could not understand how Senator Lorimer could rest under the charges against him.

KIDNAPERS SENT TO PRISON

Man Who Stole Rogers Baby in Las Vegas, N. M., Are Given Heavy Penalties.

Las Vegas, N. M.—Judge J. C. Roberts of the district court pronounced sentence upon Will Rogers and Joe Wiggins, confessed kidnapers of Baby Waldo Rogers on March 29 last. Rogers received five to twelve years in the penitentiary and Wiggins seven to twelve years.

Submits New Trust Bill.

Paris.—The will of George Eugene Berlin, who died at Tunis December 23 last, bequeaths $100,000 to the children's Seashore home of New Jersey.

WAR MINISTER DEAD

MAURICE BERTEAUX, MEMBER FRENCH CABINET, IS KILLED.

Premier and Son Injured—Several Others Are Hurt When Aviator Loses Control of Airship.

Paris.—Henri Maurice Berteaux, minister of war, was killed, Antoine E. Monis, premier of France and minister of the interior, and his son, Antoine, Jr., were severely injured, and Henri de la Mourthe, an aged aeronautic expert, and several others painfully hurt when a monoplane, driven by Aviator Train, became unmanageable and plunged into a crowd of spectators at lasy Les Molineaux.

The accident occurred at the start of what may still be the most ambitions aviation event Europe has ever known—a race from Paris to Madrid.

The distance is 900 miles, divided into three stages, each capopies to carry a driver and one passenger.

So great was the interest in this event that the premier, the members of his cabinet and 150,000 spectators were gathered at lasy, which field bears the same relation to Paris that Belmont park bears to New York.

To prevent the spectators from crowding around the hangars and upon the starting green, troops of cavalry were stationed in the field.

Train had made one circle and, hopping still quite close to the ground, appeared to he to complete control. As he swung around he passed in rising, a troop of cavalry moving across the field appeared directly in his path.

Train moved his planes desperately, hoping in the strong winds to rise sufficiently to sail over the soldiers and their mounts. He succeeded in rising, but lost control of his machine, which swung in the direction of a group containing the most distinguished spectators on the field, and then crashed heavily upon them.

Premier Monis, his son Antoine, Jr., Minister Berteaux, Henri de la Mourthe, the latter famous throughout France as an expert on aeronautics, were scattered right and left as though they were ten-pins struck by a ball. Berteaux, struck by the whirling propeller, was dead when taken from the ground. The injuries to Monis were at first believed to be fatal, but the doctors state that he will probably survive.

Senate After Oil Heads.

Washington—Information as to what steps had been taken for the criminal prosecution of the officers of the Standard Oil company under the recent decision of the Supreme court was demanded of the attorney general by the senate, which adopted without debate a resolution of inquiry offered by Senator Pomerene.

NEW HEAD IN MEXICO

DE LA BARRA SUCCEEDS DIAZ AS PRESIDENT OF THE RE PUBLIC.

CABINET HAS BEEN NAMED

Victory of Insurgents Led by Madero Ends One-Man Rule—Minister Resigns Office He Has Held for Thirty Years.

Mexico City, Mexico.—Mexico has a new president in the person of Minister of Foreign Relations De la Barra. Porfirio Diaz, long president of the republic, laid down the scepter of office and Vice-President Corral's resignation is already in. All the members of the present cabinet will quit.

Official announcement was made last night that, with the exception of the Department of Justice, the new cabinet had been agreed upon as follows:

Finance—Ernesto Madero.

Interior—Emilio Vasquez Gomez.

Instruction—Dr. Francisco Vasquez Gomez.

Fomento—Manuel Calero.

War—Gen. Ynigonis Rascon.

Rafael Hernandez Madero will probably be agreed upon as the minister of justice. He was suggested by Madero.

Ernesto Madero is the youngest man in the new cabinet, being only thirty-five years old. He is president of the Bank of Nuevo Leon, in Monterey. He is an uncle of Francisco I. Madero, Jr., and probably the wealthiest of the Madero family.

The announcement of the resignation of Porfirio Diaz as president of Mexico, not only marks his political death, but through the strange irony of fate, colors the close of thirty years of virtual sovereignty with the same blood red stain that marked his accession to the "throne" of Mexico in 1877, when as a popular idol, flushed with the romance of brave deeds and bearing the standard of political purity, he marched into the same town where he now lies, burdened with years, bereft with pain and surrounded by enemies, at the head of 12,000 yelling peons, and took possession of the place vacated by President Lerdo, whom he charged with practically the same misdeeds that have been his own undoing.

Diaz, the hero of the peons, put himself at the head of a rebel army, defeated the federal forces with terrible slaughter and entered Mexico City with the triumphant force. An election was held and Diaz took the field against Juarez, was defeated, and retired to private life. His restless spirit, however, could not remain long at peace and soon he was again at the head of a band of rebels operating against his successor, President Juarez. Juarez died and was succeeded by Senor Lerdo, who put the rebel leader to flight by concentrating a large army and movement toward his stronghold. Diaz escaped to the United States, secreted himself aboard a small boiund for Brownsville, was discovered, made prisoner, and, on the eve of sailing, pleaded overboard.

In the meantime the vessel continued on its way to Vera Cruz, with Diaz secreted in a narrow closet, where he suffered agonies in lieu of his cramped quarters. At Vera Cruz he bribed some boatmen to take him ashore, and he turned up in the very midst of Lerdo's country, with only $2.50 in his pocket—a penniless outcast and naught in his hands but a sailor's dirk. Like Napoleon returning from Elba, he landed secretly in the country of his birth was the signal for a great uprising. The people rallied to the republic, proudly flying over a sea of flashing bayonets to be elected president a few weeks later.

This position he has held ever since, with the exception of four years, 1880 to 1884, spending the time between his two terms of office because Mexico's constitution later amended forbade the re-election of a president.

Under a president of Mexico, Diaz had laid himself open to the criticism of the world. He had come to be called a republican oligarchic despotism. He has been called, in fact, the czar of the country's destiny and a tyrant; he has been loved at home and hated abroad; his policies have been lauded and derided, and he himself has been the object of both the hero worship and the anathemas of the populace. Beyond a doubt both opinions are correct, to a certain extent, but only a Higher Power can divine the balance that will tell whether he was a hurt or a hindrance to his country.

Although from time to time minor insurrections against this great Mexican American oligarchy were in evidence, all were quelled with little difficulty till in the fall of last year, Senor Francesco I. Madero, Jr., of Northern Mexico, backed by the immense wealth of his family, commenced the revolution that has led to the downfall of Diaz. This movement, starting with a small uprising in the northern state of Mexico, speedily developed till it earried everything before it. Juarez fell, then after town was taken. Battle after battle in the north, Southern Mexico revolted and at last with the fall of Juarez, Diaz's cabinet, foreseeing the end, resigned in a body, her bloodshed staring them in the face, brought enough pressure to bear upon the old and feeble ruler that he consented to his resignation with its promise of peace.

Gussie Indictment Gone.

Cincinnati.—The indictments charging George B. Cox with perjury in his testimony regarding the payment of county treasury "gratuities" were quashed before Judge Dickson. The county prosecutor at once moved to take the case to the higher courts on the allegation of error in the finding of Judge Dickson. If the upper courts find that there was no error then Cox stands free for all time on the charge.

House Summons Gates.

Washington.—John W. Gates has been summoned to appear before the house "steel trust" investigating committee to tell what he knows of the taking over of the Tennessee Coal and Iron Company by the United States Steel corporation.

Millionaire is Found Dead.

Denver, Colo.—Frederick A. Wight, millionaire cattle and sheep raiser, was found dead in bed, the result of apoplexy. He was seventy-four years old and has seven children.

DENY PARDON PLEAS

TAFT REFUSES TO FREE WALSH AND MORSE FROM PRISON.

Declares Men Guilty of Breach of Trust Must Be Punished Under the National Banking Act.

Washington.—The petitions for pardons of John R. Walsh and Charles V. Morse of New York, both serving sentences in the federal prison for violating the banking laws, were denied by President Taft.

Walsh is now confined in the penitentiary at Leavenworth, Kan. On January 19, 1910, he began serving a five-year sentence and, under the provisions of the new parole law, he will be eligible for freedom in the middle of September of this year.

The decisions were handed down by the president and followed a lengthy conference with Attorney General Wickersham. In both cases he followed the recommendations of the attorney general.

President Taft's action in the Walsh case was based strictly on a close analysis of the facts contained in the records. Declaring that a man who uses the funds of a bank to promote his private interests in such a manner that he is guilty of a fraudulent breach of trust and is punished under the national banking act, the president swept aside the reasons advanced by Walsh and his friends who petitioned for his pardon.

In denying the application of Charles V. Morse, who is now serving a sentence of 15 years in the penitentiary at Atlanta, Ga., where he was sent on January 3, 1910, the president characterized his request as premature, and accordingly he gives the New York banker the privilege of renewing it after January 1, 1913.

The president denies Morse's application for the same reason given in the Walsh case, after declaring that "the methods taken by Morse tend to show that more keenly than Walsh did he realize the evil of what he was doing."

BIG LINER GOES ON ROCK

Ivernia, With 1,000 Passengers, Meets With Disaster Off Irish Coast—All Are Saved.

Queenstown.—The Cunard liner Ivernia, with more than 1,000 passengers aboard, a majority of them Americans, went on the rocks in the eastern bank of Kinloch channel.

After several hours of work the captain brought his damaged vessel safely into the inner harbor, where it was anchored and beached on the northern bank. The passengers were landed safely.

The passengers were at luncheon at the time of the accident and rushed on deck. Captain Potter and his officers were prompt to allow the hubbub and succeeded in reassuring the passengers that there was no immediate danger. There was no sign of panic on board.

Tenders stood by to render whatever aid is possible to the big vessel.

The big ship passed into Queenstown harbor with a heavy list to starboard and to the bow.

On reaching the toner harbor, the vessel heeled perceptibly. Soon it began to take on water in the forward compartments.

The ship struck Daunt rock in a fog. There soon was 25 feet of water in her fore compartments.

HINES IN GENERAL DENIAL

Tells Lumbermen's Association He Is Not Candidate for Senator.

Chicago.—A absolutely and unqualifiedly flat denial of charges. I have no epology to make for my conduct. At the proper time and in the proper procedure I shall vindicate myself and confound my traducers."

In those words Edward Hines, millionaire lumberman, made a voluntary defense against the charges that he "put Lorimer over" at a cost of $100,000. He spoke as he opened the ninth annual convention of the National Lumber Manufacturers' association in Congress hotel.

Of the 200 or more lumbermen present more than half applauded vigorously when the president made his statement, which was not a part of the annual address he had prepared.

Mr. Hines said that at some time in the future he would make on full and thorough investigation before a tribunal that "will not be a mere tool of politics and a grotesque travesty on justice and on law."

26 Poisoned at Luncheon.

Peabody, Kan.—At a luncheon of the Pleasant Hill Missionary society at the home of Mrs. Barker a dozen years ago 26 persons were poisoned by eating pressed chicken in which ptomaines had developed. Two which ptomaines had developed. Two of them have died since and the others are now in a serious condition. Mrs. A. R. Nielson and Juanita Clarson are dead.

Big Rail Strike is Voted.

Greensboro, N. C.—A strike of firemen on all lines of the Southern railway is threatened. The local union way is threatened. The local union voted on a ten per cent. wage increase and other considerations. A general strike may be called in all the 15 divisions except two a ballot resulted in favor of a strike.

Truth at Last

BY M. DIBBELL

(Copyright, 1911, by Associated Literary Press.)

"That's a pretty girl just turning the corner," said Robert Sterling.

David Belding looked to the spot indicated, but behold only the back of a big hat, which completely hid the face of its wearer.

"Have to take your word for it, Bob," he answered. "I missed the right instant for judging. After the present day hat turns its back on you there is no seeing what is under it."

Robert Sterling smiled. "That is so," he said, "but she really was more than pretty, and her hat isn't in it for size with some of the monsters I have seen."

David laughed. "Taking up the cudgels in her behalf already, old fellow?" he asked. "Know who she is?"

"Yes," replied Robert, "I am almost sure it must be the new school teacher; so few strangers come to this staple place that we can generally guess who they are. Dot has been high in her praises of the new assistant teacher, and this young woman fits the description."

"Then get an introduction through that bright little niece of yours," suggested David encouragingly. "Great Scott, what has struck you now?" as his friend seized his arm and began to hasten him along at a rapid pace.

Robert explained. "Allie is giving Dot a lawn party this afternoon for her birthday, and I just remembered that Dot insisted that the new teacher should be invited. Very likely that is where she is going—at any rate I mean to find out. Hurry up."

"All right, but don't you think we might get there before the affair is ended, even if we did not do this race horse gait?" queried David.

Robert did not even hear him, for as they turned the corner the wearer of the black hat again came into view. "It is the new teacher for a fact," he announced. "She is going through Allie's gate."

Robert's little niece ran down the path to welcome the pretty stranger, and catching sight of her uncle and his friend just entering the gate, called out at once:

"You Are Free to Choose," He Said.

"Oh, Uncle Robert, come and see Miss Harland."

David Belding started as he heard the name, and when the young teacher turned toward them, his face assumed a look of mingled astonishment and delight. He reached her even before the hastening Robert, and exclaimed:

"I had begun to fear my search for you might be hopeless. My good angel must have sent me here—how more than glad I am to see you."

He held out his hand to her.

Miss Harland's look was anything but friendly and the outstretched hand apparently invitable to her, as she answered:

"Really, you surprise me, Mr. Belding, for I cannot understand why you should not expect to see me in Royceton, when you have been aware of my whereabouts. She turned away from the discomfited David to smile sweetly at Robert, as eager little Dot presented him.

Robert's sister Alice now joined them, while Dot's school friends began to arrive. The lawn party was proving to be a marked success.

But David Belding's face had assumed a decidedly glum expression and instead of mingling with the youngsters he only watched them. His gaze often sought their pretty teacher, who seemed to be having the very best time of them all. The big hat had been laid aside and the flushed cheeks and rumpled hair showed how fully she was doing her share toward making the little ones happy.

Robert Sterling kept near Miss Harland all the afternoon. Not once did the young teacher look in David's direction, but that young man had decided upon his next step and waited patiently until the festivities were ended. When the guests were taking leave of their small hostess he stepped to Miss Harland's side and said quietly:

"I shall walk home with you, Florence; there is something I must say to you."

Florence Harland's dark eyes flashed a resentful look at him. "Very well," she said and turned again to her entertainers.

As Robert Sterling had been a witness of the greeting bestowed by Miss Harland upon his friend, he felt no surprise when David said to him:

"I wish to speak to Miss Harland about something important, so excuse me for the present."

"All right, you'll find me waiting here for you."

As soon as the pair was outside the gate David began. "I do not know why you should say I was aware of your whereabouts. I have been trying my best for nearly three months to find you. When I got back to the city I went at once to your father's house and found it occupied by strangers. Then I went to the firm from whom they had purchased the house; but they could tell me only that after Mr. Harland's sudden decease his affairs were found to be in hopeless confusion and all property was sold. Of you they could tell me nothing. Then I called on Miss Brandon, who was the only friend of yours I had met. She told me that you had left the city immediately after your father's death, but she had no idea where you were. Then I spent three weeks in unsuccessful attempts to trace you and finally began to believe you had purposely concealed yourself from me, and when Robert—"

Miss Harland's scornful voice interrupted him. "Why should you tell this elaborate falsehood?" she asked. "Martha Brandon told me of your call in the first letter she wrote me, and said she gave you an account of my obtaining this position in the Royceton school through the efforts of the cousin with whom I stayed until coming here."

"And why should I lie to you?" cried David wrathfully. "I have told you only the truth. It is Miss Brandon's word against mine."

"Then I choose Martha's" said Miss Harland firmly.

David was in a white heat of anger and pain. "You are free to choose," he said.

Not another word was spoken between them until David left her at the door of her lodging house.

Florence Harland ran upstairs to her own room, prepared to indulge in a good cry, but a letter on her dresser caught her eye, and recognizing her friend Martha Brandon's writing, she at once opened it.

"Dearest Florence: Can you ever forgive me for deceiving you so terribly? After Jack and I quarreled I felt as if I wanted everybody to be as miserable as I was; and when Mr. Belding called I told him I had no idea of where you were. I do not know how I could have been so wicked, after all your trouble, too; and he was so anxious to find you. I told you a lie, but please forgive me, Florence, or I can never be happy again, even though Jack and I have made up. Please, please forgive your miserable friend, Martha Brandon."

After she read this letter poor Florence Harland did indeed have her "good cry," and it was hours before she could bring herself to forgive the repentant Martha; but when at last she sobbed herself to sleep all anger had been cast out of her heart.

In the early morning a small boy brought a tiny note to David Belding. He caught his breath in starting for the first train leaving Royceton. He had informed Robert Sterling the night before that his visit must end at once.

But this little note made a new man of David Belding.

"Will you forgive me? Martha has written that she told a lie both to you and to me. Florence Harland," was all the note said.

It was more than forgiveness that Florence received, for a very eager young man sought her the instant her school duties for the day were over, anxious to hear both the old story of love. And with David's arm around her and his cheek pressed close to her own, the lonely young school teacher felt that she could freely forgive all wrongs, and bravely face life's coming years with him.

Roast Eggs in Ashes.

Every boy and girl down on the farm in Lenox James he used to roast eggs, pieces of meat and potatoes in embers in the old wood cook stove or in the big, open fireplace. Some were searched for hens' nests, and the fine, fresh eggs were wrapped in heavy paper. The paper was dampened and several thicknesses of it protected the eggs from scorching; you know wet paper in a ball is hard to burn. Well, the wrapped-up eggs were put on the live coals and partially covered by them. In from five to fifteen minutes the egg was roasting hot and ready to eat with salt, pepper and butter. A pin hole was made in the big end of the egg so as to let the steam escape and keep it from bursting the shell and the meats from running out. If you have never as a small boy roasted an egg you have missed childhood's greatest joys. Then boys would trap birds, and there not being enough for a mess for the family table such birds were roasted in paper after the manner of eggs, and they certainly were delicious titbits as ever the tip of the tongue touched.

Dainty and Modish Hood

THIS new, pretty and modish hood is made of white chiffon mull, shirred as shown in the photograph. The borders of the ties are of Persian liberty silk. The hood is a becoming means of protecting the hair from the dampness of the seashore or lakeside. It is particularly charming when worn with a lingerie frock.

FLOWERS TO MATCH THE EYES

New Freak of Fashion Altogether Charming When Carried Out With Due Consideration.

The touch of velvet near the face, matching the color of the eyes, has long been popular with the women who study their own good points, and this has been easy to manage in these days of quaint little bows and pipings.

Of late, however, the women of the smart set have taken to wearing flowers which carry out the color, too.

There are pansies that are for the brown eyed girl, forget-me-nots for blue eyes and orchids for the maid with hazel eyes.

The girl with gray eyes is the only one who has any trouble, for all she can find to match her eyes is the humble dusty miller leaf.

Sometimes she fancies her eyes, however, are "gray blue" or "green gray," so she varies her color scheme with orchids, mignonette or a dull blue blossom. If she is quite convinced that her eyes are really "matchless" she contents herself with the feeling of superiority arising therefrom and lets the jewels of her face sparkle unrivaled or wears the modest violet, which would never presume to resemble the eyes above them.

When natural blooms are not procurable the woman with an eye for flowers buys artificial ones of the required tint.

Parisian ingenuity has gone one step further in this art and provides for its leaders of fashion real flowers dyed with chemical dyes in any desired color or shade.

Hardy flowers, such as camelias, carnations and all varieties whose stems are good absorbers, are placed in the liquid and allowed to stay there until exactly the right amount of color has been absorbed.

To Keep Furs.

Every housewife knows what great worry furs and woolen garments are during the summer months, when moths are so ready to destroy any within their reach. Take a five gallon crock and after sunning and brushing the furs place them in a the crock, then cover with a heavy piece of wrapping paper which is glued fast to the crock, making it absolutely air tight and there are no cracks or crevices for moths to enter. This can be kept in a dry cellar all summer, or if you have no cellar or clothes press get a large tin lid to fit the crock and make a cover of cretonne and use for a corner seat in any room, and save all worry over moths for the summer.

Novel Breakfast Cap.

The new nets, dotted in colors, are being turned into fetching breakfast caps for the girl who loves the picturesque. One of the new models has a deep Tam O'Shanter crown fitted into a crinoline band an inch and a half wide covered with folds of gold tissue ribbon.

Over each ear is draped a pointed jabot effect of lace, to match the net that fell to the shoulders and framed the face on each side like a sixteenth century headgear. Over each of these points was a single pink rose or a bunch of pink apple blossoms.

Popular Trimming.

Lace is one of the most popular trimmings on the new spring styles, being used on hats, frocks for any time of the day and even the suit of cloth, and of all the laces Irish is perhaps the favorite.

Irish lace coped from Venetian designs is a new factor in the fashions, and has been widely taken up for the collar and cuff sets for either blouse or coat.

ELASTIC SIDE GUSSETS USED

Boon to Those of Stout Figure Are the New Corsets of Very Long Hip Cut.

Elastic side gussets are introduced on corsets of very long hip cut, as shown in our illustration, and stout figures especially can be assured of added slimness in those shapes, which particularly give flat hips.

A reduction in the circumference of the figure of from three to five inches is an important consideration to the smart woman, even if she does not exceed an average build; every garment, as she well knows, looks and wears so much more advantageously on a slim figure, provided that the rounded lines are preserved and the whole is well proportioned. There is no reason in these days why grace, increased support and comfort to the figure, extra slimness and consequent additional smartness should not all be achieved at the same time by the wearing of good though not necessarily expensive up-to-date corsets.

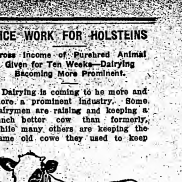
The big, heavy woman, however, will do well to wear the special belt corsets which have reached such perfection this season. These are most comfortable to wear, besides making the figure inches smaller; therefore they will be found invaluable to those of corpulent or inclined to that build. The particular feature of this season's corsets, however, for ordinary figures is, as our illustrations show, their straight fit over the hips and abdomen, but their construction and style of cutting make them "sit" most comfortably, while affording extra abdominal compression and support.

Pins Handy.

Many dressmakers have a long, narrow pincushion fastened around the waist on a belt; but a better plan, says a Ladies' Home Journal, is to have a small round cushion and attach it to an elastic band from one side to the other, just large enough to slip comfortably over the head and hold on the left wrist. The pins are always in sight by this method and easy to take out.

Anthracite Beads.



New beads are made of porcelain, wood and even rubber, but latest of all is the black anthracite bead, which is the most beautiful of all save an exchange. As the light glints and dances one sees flashes of blue and red.

The DAIRY

NICE WORK FOR HOLSTEINS

Gross Income of Purebred Animal Given for Ten Weeks—Dairying Becoming More Prominent.

Dairying is coming to be more and more a prominent industry. Some fairymen are raising and keeping a much better cow than formerly, while many others are keeping the same old cows they used to keep and wonder why dairying doesn't pay, and in most of these cases they think they can't afford to take a good agricultural paper and find out.

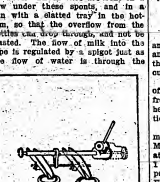
Below we give gross income of one of our own purebred Holstein cows from February 16, when the milk began going to the milk shipping station, to April 30:



February 16 to 28, 703¼ pounds milk at $1.90 per 100 pounds, $13.36. March 1 to 31, 1,062½ pounds milk at $1.70 per 100 pounds, $33.36; April 1 to 30, 1095½ pounds milk at $1.60 per 100 pounds, $35.05. Total for February 16 to April 30, $72.37.

Add to this estimated value of her half calf at birth, $25. Total income, $97.37.

FILLER FOR MILK BOTTLES

Device Invented by Massachusetts Man Provides for Filling Several of Them at Once.

A device for filling milk bottles, by which several of them can be filled at a time, has been invented by a Massachusetts man. Of course, the apparatus can be used for other liquids than milk, but was primarily designed for the latter. A lateral pipe running from the tank, in which the fluid is kept has openings at intervals along it. Under these openings are tubular spouts, removably attached. The bottles are sent in a row under these spouts, and in a pan with a slatted tray in the bottom, so that the overflow from the bottles can drain through, and not be wasted. The flow of milk into the pipe is regulated by a spigot just as the flow of water is through the pipes of a house. In large dairies, where thousands of bottles of milk are filled daily, the use of an apparatus of this nature will save a great deal of time.

FROM THE CALF TO THE COW

First Few Months' Care Will Largely Determine What the Grown Animal Will Ultimately Be.

In order to make a good dairy cow we must start with the calf of some good dairy type. The sire that the calf or any farm animal for that matter gets for the first few months will largely determine the quality of the adult animal. Giving the calf a good, strong, healthy start is one of the prime essentials of success in growing it.

The calf need not be kept rolling fat, but it should be kept thriftily growing from start to finish.

Except for teaching him with the feet type, it is best to raise the calf by hand method. When it is a day or two old take it away from its dam and teach it to drink milk.

For the first feed take some warm milk fresh from the cow and place some with the hand on the calf's mouth. It will lick this with its tongue and of course find that it is good. Then place the pail up to its mouth so that the warm milk will touch its lips.

Be patient for the first time. It will require several minutes and possibly nearly an hour, but when once it learns what is in the pail and how to take the food there will be no further trouble in urging it to eat.

It may be necessary the first few times for you to wet two fingers with milk and allow the calf to suck up the milk with the hand partly immersed in the liquid.

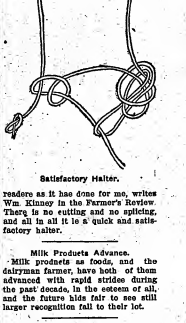
Feed whole milk warm from the cow about two weeks and then gradually substitute skimmilk for the whole till at the end of the fourth week nothing but skimmilk is given.

Always warm the milk, as it is most natural for the young animal and demands less energy from its digestive organs.

After the third month the calf will begin to wean somewhat, and at once may be mixed with the milk.

The calf at this age should be allowed access to drinking water every day. At the end of four months milk may be withheld and other feeds substituted, as the calf will then begin to nibble on hay and other feeds.

From this stage on place some fine well cured and properly cut hay where it can reach it. When it is six weeks old give it a handful of shelled corn or place corn meal in the milk feed.



Success With Dairying.

If we are to be successful dairymen we must have a love for our work and the animals we are working with.

The lack of love for a cow and lack of appreciation of what she is doing for us is noticed in the shy feeding cow, and in order to obtain good paying results proper care and attention must be given the cow which supplies the milk. Too much lack of interest among dairymen

Value of Dairy Cow.

The paying production of milk is what determines the value of the dairy cow, and in order to obtain good paying results proper care and attention must be given the cow which supplies the milk. Too much lack of interest among dairymen

Satisfactory Halter.

ROPE HALTER IS VERY HANDY

One Shown in Illustration Is Easily Made and Will Fit the Head of Almost Any Animal.

The accompanying illustration shows a rope halter that is easily made and which may be fitted to any size head. It is cheap and useful and I hope it will do as much good for readers as it has done for me, writes Wm. Kinney in the Farmer's Review. I live on a cutting and no spitting, and all in all it is a quick and satisfactory halter.

Milk Products Advance.

Milk products as foods, and the dairyman farmer have kept pace in advanced with rapid strides during the past decade, in the esteem of all, and the future bids fair to see still larger recognition fall to their lot.

DAIRY NOTES

Warmth should be supplied to all farm animals but not at the expense of fresh air.

Watch the pastures and give the cow feed of some kind to keep her milk flow normal.

Some pastures are so poor that the cow is forced to eat things she does not like in order to live.

The first great requisite in the care of stock is perfect cleanliness, pure air and abundant sunshine.

The proper test of any feed grain is not how it looks but what it will grow under good conditions.

It requires only about half as much grain to produce 100 pounds of gain when animals are young as when old.

A few poor cows may do little personal harm to the dairy herd, but a poor sire will do untold damage.

The best dairyman is the one who is clean because he must be cleanly or he otherwise and not because he is afraid of the law.

Select some standard dairy breed, provide all the essential conditions for scientific dairying and get your head to the game.

A good dairy cow is a home builder, soil preserver, the poor man's friend and the rich man's hunny. You should treat her like a queen.

Every day of the year, whether she is fresh or dry, whether she is in the pasture or the stable, see to it that she is provided for properly.

It is the common experience of all dairymen who have used a really good improved dairy sire that the investment has made them rural seniors.

Keep Off The Grass.

We wish at this time to serve notice on Mr. Alfred Swanson, alias "Fats," that he will not be allowed to make any final proof June 10th, on a published notice that conflicts with the title of Henry Arndt. Your land is the N.E. ¼ of section 19, and you have persistently advertised in that new discovery of yours, at Erie, that you were going to make final proof June 10, on the "S.E." ¼ of section 19. All the land on the S.E. ¼ of Section 19, in this town belongs to Hank Arndt, and you and your lawyer editor from Pennsylvania, nor anyone else are going before any U. S. Officer to make any final proof that conflicts with his title, for he is doing business with THE SUNBEAM, so get off the grass, on the S.E. ¼ section 19.

The break serves Swanson just right, and may learn him to come to his neighbors who can do his business right, instead of going to Erie to hunt up a man that has shown that he would do any kind of dirty work for a few dollars, and as Swanson's seven years will be out before he can now make proof, and as there are men with money looking for them chances, it might be a costly mistake for Swanson, and a profitable one for the other fellow.

A SAD INSTANCE. AN INNOCENT FARMER THE SUFFER.

Down in the town of Kratka, on section 17 lives Peat Lindelpa, a good citizin and a good farmer, but could not read his own name if he saw it in print. His application to make final proof, before J.M. Bishop on June 17, is being published in the Eleven Towns, but instead of publishing a discription of his land they are advertising him to make final proof on Lot 12, across Red Lake River, about three quaters a mile from him, belonging to a man by the name of McGinn. who undoubtly does to sleep at night, not knowing that Lattimore is to steal his lot 12 and move it across the river. Friends of Mr. Lidalja, in Kratka will explain the matter to him so he will not be put to the expense of taking witnesses to Thief River Falls to try to prove up on another piece land The above two cases is all we have had occasion, or time to notice, but dregum there will be lots of his published proofs turned down on account of errors.

PROFESSIONAL SWEARING.

We would not swere to an affidavit of legal publication on any of her notices, for, we donbt if there is one published correct in his paper, but we presume that John will try to work some innocent printer into doing the swearing, while he does the Notary act. but we warn him that if there is any attempt made to correct errors by lieing that we will be there with the copies of your publication to prove that you are lieing. Lattimore and his pal "Fats" went tramping around looking for business, and we will endeavor to give them plenty of it, so they will not have to go tramping to hunt it up.

The extream low price of butter this year is likely to make the farmer come to the conclusion that the creamery and cow are failures as money producers. But about the time you get the cows disposed of, up will go the price of butter.

THE LOCAL NEWS.

Applications to make final proof written free at this office.

Call and see us, when you are ready to make your final proof.

James O'Brien had a picnic in his grove last Sunday.

John Asbrencr came up from Deer Park Wednesday to make final proof.

Mr. and Mrs. Knut Sonsdahl have a social party at their home Saturday evening.

Edward Singer made a business trip from Kratka to Rhoda Saturday, returning Monday.

A few dollars invested in tame grass seed is money well spent. Plenty of seed at Vaughn Bros.

We understand that George Singer has a lot of young apple trees that are well loaded with apples.

Stephen Singer is rushing farming operations on his new Kratka farm, and will get in a big crop of flax this season.

Walter McAndress has some apple trees that are loaded with small apples, which shows that apples can be successfuly raised in this locality.

Mail carrier Sigardson reports that a heavy hail storm passed over part of Deer Park yesterday afternoon, but we did not learn how much dammage done.

A number of the farmers are improveing the dry season by breaking up their low meadow lands, which will make them produce red top hay, instead of wire grass. A good idea.

It seems strange to live beside the Red Lake River and not see any boats or logs running, but drouth of last fall seems to stay by the river, although there has has been plenty of rain for the crops.

We do not think there is any occasion for the homesteader to be allarmed if he should not get his final proof heard before his seven years are out, if he has his application to make his proof filed before the land office and his notices of publication issued

If the country owes Lattimore anything they should chip in and pay him off, instead of bothering farmers who want to make final proof. We will give him a good good big ham, which had ought to keep him in meat for some time if he don't invite "Taft" to take dinner with him.

We received some inquiries from parties in Goodhue county this week about land, and we wrote him that they could get as good land here for from ten to twenty dollars an acre as was selling down there for one hundred dollars an acre, the only difference being that this land would raise the biger crops.

Quite a number of local adds ran out this week, which will undoubtly please our readers, but it takes money to run a newspaper, and when you hear anyone kicking about space being used for advertising, he is most likely borrowing the paper to read, or has not paid his subscription. for years.

Miss Mildrid Hooper closes a very successful eight months term of school in this district today. We as clerk of the district, have not heard one comolaint by the parents of scholars attending the school, so we are firmly convinced that she must be a very good teacher, for if she did not fill the bill we would have got a "kick" from some direction.

We were making preparations to give the country a good write up, and publish cuts of the Kratka and Highbridge creamery's and of some farm buildings, but at about that time the Indians broke out and we have to use our ammunition on them, but we will soon be through with them, as they will return to their "wik iams and let us alone, for some time.

We Are Not Busy.

The farmers may be of the opinion that we are to busy to attend to their final proofs; bot we are not, and yoo may be sore, if you do business with this office, that your notices will be publish ed correct. We can handle from 75 to00 notices, so you can see we are not crowded, at present.

A Lost Man And Farm

A man living on the north side of the river, reports that he met a big fat fellow wandering around, in a demented condition, asking everybody he met, if they could tell him where his farm was. He said he told him that, "he could not tell him, but he thought John Lattimore could, after he saw the next weeks Sunbeam." By the way if this man Swanson had put in more of his time on his farm, and less of it at business college he might have know where it was himself, for anyone ought to know that business colleges do not furnish people with brains. But him and John make a good pair to draw to!

Falling Down.

The building in which the Kratka post office is located is likely to fall down and kill a few of the patrons of that office any day. They have it propped up with long poles, or it would have fell down long ago. Postmaster Singer has a petition from the patrons to remove the office to s new building a short distance north of the present location, but the post office department are unwinding long rools of red tape, while every wind is shaking the last remenent of life out of the old building. But we suppose the patrons and p.m. will have to stick to their posts, until they get orders to move. But be careful boys about staying near it in a strong wind, and if it does blow down and kill a lot of you, we will give you a good write up, after you are dead, telling the people what good fellows you used to be. So stick to it until your Uncle Samuel gets his red tape unwound.

ROLAND LOCALS.

Ed Rolandson visited at the bachelors hall Saturday night.

The Oklee base ball club did not show up Sunday.

Miss Anniebell Rolandson called on Mrs. G. G. Gunderson on Sunday.

Mrs. M. J. Lillo and Mrs. Fore spent Sunday at Mrs. Boes.

Mr. Ole Nesland and Knut Olson are breaking for Andrew Hanson.

Just set busy, then you will not get into mischief.

Nels Fore has been on the sick list for some time, but is recovering.

Lillo Bros. was down to Red Lake Falls after their new ditching outfit.

Miss Kate Arveson called on Roland friends Saturday.

Andrew Ludvig and butter maker Rindahl, made a trip to northern Pennington county on Monday.

Oscar Lindberg from Waseka county is up looking after his Pennington county farm.

Don't forget that the ladies aid will meet at Mrs. Otto Dahl's next Wednesday.

Mrs. Wm. Brotchaus left for Plummer Monday.

Her Sweeping Abilities.

Mrs. Newlish—Did you notice how grandly our daughter swept into the room at Mrs. Pumpson's reception last night?

Newlish—Sure I did. When it comes to sweeping into a room Minnie can do a walk, but when it comes to sweeping out a room she goes lame.

Wanted it Plain.

Mrs. Youngwife—I want to get some plain Dexter—Yes'm. How many pounds? Mrs. Youngwife—Oh, gosh dang! I thought you took the brook out. How much chicken and "I make it a rule never to lend anybody an umbrella," said Mr. Growcher.

"Good idea," replied Mr. Grump. "If you keep lending an umbrella about there's no telling when it may drift into the hands of the original owner."

Clean Sanitary Floors.

Varnish, which is commonly regarded only as a beautifier, is as efficient sanitary agent. Varnished surfaces can be cleaned by wiping, and the microbe-laden dust is thus kept out of the air. A varnished floor is therefore not only up to date, beautiful and easily cleaned, but is wholesome. The National Association of Varnish Manufacturers, 625 The Bourse, Philadelphia, Penn., are distributing free a booklet entitled "Modern Floors," which tells how floors may be made and kept wholesome and attractive. Seek for one. Varnish is cheaper than carpet and far more satisfactory.

Head on Crooked.

Little Paul had always been taught by his mother that God had made him and that he ought to be thankful that he had been made so perfect; eyes, ears, feet, hands and all complete. His mother had bought a new cook stove and Paulie was examining it. He lifted the reservoir lid and looked in. There was his picture, as natural as life, in the water, but he was sorely troubled, while looking at it. When asked, by his mother, what the trouble was, he said:

"God might o' made me perfect, but he put my head on crooked."

Looking Out for Number One.

Sydney had been given some discarded millinery with which to amuse herself. She trimmed a marvelous looking hat, and so arranged it that a long red ostrich plume hung straight down from the front of the brim, over her baby face.

"Come here, Sydney," said her mother. "Let me tack that feather back, out of your eyes."

"Oh, no mother. I want it that way, so I can see it myself. 'Most always only other people can see the feathers on my hats."—Judge.

MENTAL ACCURACY

Greatly Improved by Leaving Off Coffee

The manager of an extensive creamery in Wis. states that while a regular coffee drinker, he found it injurious to his health and a hindrance to the performance of his business duties.

"It impaired my digestion, gave me a distressing sense of fullness in the region of the stomach, causing a most painful and disquieting palpitation of the heart, and what is worse, it muddled my mental faculties so as to seriously injure my business efficiency.

"I finally concluded that something would have to be done. I quit the use of coffee, short off, and began to drink Postum. The cook didn't make it right at first. She didn't boil it long aeough, and I did not find it palatable and quit using it and went back to coffee sad to the stomach trouble again.

"Then my wife took the matter in hand, and by following the directions on the box, faithfully, she had me drinking Postum for several days before I knew it.

"When I happened to remark that I was feeling much better than I had for a long time, she told me that I had been drinking Postum, and that accounted for it. Now we have no coffee on our table.

"My digestion has been restored, and with this improvement has come relief from the oppressive sense of fullness and palpitation of the heart that used to bother me so. I note such a gain in mental strength and acuteness that I can attend to my office work with ease and pleasure and without making the mistakes that were so annoying to me while I was using coffee.

"Postum is the greatest table drink of the times, in my humble estimation." Name given by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich.

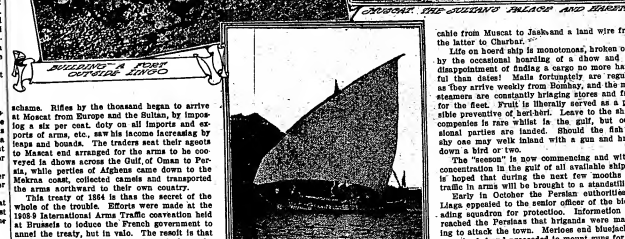
FIGHTING the GUN-RUNNERS

THE HISTORY of the traffic in arms which goes on between Europe and Afghanistan via Muscat dates from the year 1881, when England, in guaranteeing the independence of the amir, agreed to supply him with rifles and ammunition from India at a reasonable price, to assist him to maintain that independence. These privileges the amir soon began to abuse by establishing a cartridge factory at Kabul and by trading in arms with the border tribes, who eventually became a menace to the towns and villages on the Indian frontier and even to Afghanistan itself.

After a while the advent of smokeless powder and modern arms rendered the Kabul factory obsolete, and the Indian government about this time stopped the supply of arms to the amir. Hence arose an extraordinary demand for modern rifles and ammunition both for the amir and for the border tribes, the selling price at Kabul of a small box rifle rose to as much as £60.

"Ha! Ha!" said the Afghan traders, rubbing their hands, "there is money to be made here; we will get rifles from Europe and the sultan of Oman, who lives at Muscat, will no doubt help us." Now in 1864 the Sulten of Oman had made a treaty with France by which he was allowed to import and export arms without interference, to enable his forces to keep out the warlike Bedouins of the interior.



The usefulness of this treaty from a business point of view was pointed out to the sultan by the traders and he delightfully fell in with their schame. Rifles by the thousand began to arrive at Muscat from Europe and the Sultan, by imposing a six per cent. duty on all imports and exports of arms, etc., saw his income increasing by leaps and bounds. The traders sent their agents to Muscat and arranged for the arms to be conveyed in dhows across the Gulf, of Oman to Persia, while parties of Afghens came down to the Mekran coast, collected camels and transported the arms northward to their own country.

This treaty of 1864 is thus the secret of the whole of the trouble. Efforts were made at the 1908-9 International Arms Traffic convention held at Brussels to induce the French government to annul the treaty, but in vain. The result is that the British East Indies squadron had to be strengthened and a rigorous blockade of the Gulf of Oman established, involving great expense to both British and Indian governments. Could this fifty-year-old treaty be annulled, the British warships would prevent arms being landed at Muscat and the whole gun-running business would collapse.

Steamers of many nationalities land arms at Muscat, where they are stored until the gun-running "season" begins. This lasts from December to April, the best at other times being oppressive. Caravans can only travel when food and water is obtainable for the camels.

Some of the arms are conveyed to Matarah, a port about three miles from Muscat. At these two ports dhows are laden with arms under cover of night and leave whenever opportunity offers. By keeping within three miles of the Arabian coast a dhow is free from capture, but coatalds that limit the nakoda (captain) cannot say a word if his rifles are confiscated and his vessel sunk by a British man-of-war. Sohar is another depot for arms, and is supplied from Muscat. Three courses are open to dhows.

1. To make a bold dash from Muscat to Persia. This is dangerous, involving a long passage, part of which must necessarily be in daylight.

2. To hug the coast to the westward and with a favorable breeze to negotiate the thirty miles or so across on a dark night.

3. To creep along the coast to the sooth, using Karyat as a jomploq-off place. A dhow would then steer for Karachi, and at the approach of night would alter course and make straight for the vicinity of Givadar.

The blockading squadron consists of H. M. ships Fox, Philomel, Proserpine, Perseus, Alert, Odin, Sphinx, Redbreast and Espiegle and is called the Persian Gulf division. In addition there are seveo steam launches hired from the British India Steamship company by the India government and armed. These launches are officered and partly manned by the royal navy. Of course this squadron cannot be maintained in the gulf in full strength or cruising like it, as ships must periodically refit and the crews recuperate at Bombay or Colombo. The organization of the blockade is in the hands of Capt. A. T. Hunt of the Fox, whose ability in coping with the traffic has obtained a double reward—an admiralty extension of his appointment and the executions of the baffled trades of Kabul.

The system of intelligence which has been organised is nearly perfect. The wireless station at Jask transmits to the Fox news of the departure of dhows from Muscat and also any information regarding the presence of Afghan caravans or the landing of arms on the Persian coast. Captain Hunt disposes his available vessels along the Mekran coast according to the needs of the moment. Ships' cutters and pinnaces, armed with maxim guns, are sent away in charge of officers and lie in near likely landing places. They are provisioned for about a fortnight and must make the best of it until their ship comes round again to revictual them. The three-mile rule does not obtain on the Persian side and a dhow may be destroyed on the beach if she has carried arms and the arms may be followed up by a landing party if necessary. Few dhows succeed in getting across with arms, and the number which attempt the passage is growing heartily less. Still the blockade must not be relaxed.

The wireless station at Jask is of great interest, having been recently erected by the Indian government inside a concession obtained from Persia. It is the "bete noire" of the Afghans, as it betrays all their doings, and they have threatened it with destruction. It is guarded by a detachment of Indian troops and surrounded by wire entanglements and earthworks. There is a cable from Muscat to Jask and a land wire from the latter to Charbar.

Life on board ship is monotonous, broken only by the occasional hoarding of a dhow and the disappointment of finding a cargo no more harmful than dates! Mails fortunately are regular, as they arrive weekly from Bombay, and the mail steamers are constantly bringing stores and fruit for the fleet. Fruit is liberally served as a possible preventive of heat-heri. Leave to the ships' companies is rare whilst in the gulf, but occasional parties are landed. Should the fish be shy one may walk inland with a gun and bring down a bird or two.

The "season" is now commencing and with a concentration in the gulf of all available ships it is hoped that during the next few months the traffic in arms will be brought to a standstill.

Early in October the Persian authorities at Lingo reported to the senior officer of the blockading squadron for protection. Information had reached the Persians that brigands were marching to attack the town. Merioes and bluejackets were landed and proceeded to mount guns for the protection of the town. To make certain of their cash the customs officers brought their bags of gold on board H. M. S. Fox.

An incident with a distinctly humorous side enlivened subsequent proceedings, and something of the kind was badly needed because the enemy did not materialize. The pirate-hrigand Sheikh did not materialize. The pirate-brigand Sheikh Mesdour had heard of the Persians' difficulty and hurried to their "assistance." Seventy miles from Lings Mesdour landed, presumably to do a little raiding on his own account. Leaving his three dhows anchored, he plunged inland. While he was set H. M. S. Odin came along and seized the three dhows, which were towed to Lings. There it was discovered that Mazkur had, some time prior, taken one of the dhows from some Persians, to whom it was returned. The other two dhows were well saturated with kerosene and burned off the town as a warning to any persons who cootemplated following the example of the sheikh. Whoo the flames had attained a good hold a bag of powder on one of the dhows exploded, sending up a beautiful column of white smoke.

HIS BELOVED WIVES

"Ever hear of Bucklesberry?" said a man from North Carolina the other day. "Well, it is a district in Lenoir county about twenty miles from Goldsboro. Twenty years ago it used to abound in curious characters.

"Almost everybody in the neighborhood was named Sutton. At the time of which I speak about the most representative citizen of the community was Ben Sutton. Ben had one of the nicest, neatest little one story houses you ever saw, and when one day I met him on the road and was invited to partake of his hospitality at midday dinner I accepted with alacrity.

"We entered the house from the rear and almost immediately sat down at a table that literally groaned under the weight of ham and sweet potatoes, collards, corn pone, turnips and buckleberry pie. Ben's hospitality made him see that I got away with the whole of an enormous second helping.

"I strolled out upon the front porch after the meal and to my horror there stood in the yard, just in front of the house, a row of four handsome tombstones, each with a grave attached. My host had lingered inside, so I went out and inspected the stones. One bore the inscription, 'To my beloved wife, Alzula.' The second was, 'To my beloved wife, Kate.' The third read, 'To my beloved wife, Maggie,' and the fourth, 'To my beloved wife, Jennie.'

"'Good heavens, have I struck a Bluebeard?' I exclaimed.

"Then I looked at the dates of decease. They were from two to five years apart. I turned around, and there was the present Mrs. Sutton looking at me with a smile on her face.

"'Look pretty, don't they?' she said, 'You see, Ben likes to sit out here on the porch and look at the tombstones and tell me what a good wife Annie or Kate or Maggie or Jennie was to him. It doesn't hurt me, and he gets lots of fun out of it.

"But you can bet your sweet life there is no place there for me. In the first place I made him promise me before we were married that he wouldn't put me there if I died before him. In the second, I mean to outlive him. You see, Ben looks pretty husky, but he is nearly 60, and I am not yet 50.

"Oh, no, I don't mind the tombstones or the graves. For one thing, they keep negroes away from our place. You see there is the chicken coop on one side of the yard and the watermelon patch on the other, and you couldn't get a darky to go into either after sundown for any number of chickens or watermelons.

"The only thing I mind about it is that people try to tease me and tell me that Ben's already got my tombstone ready lettered and all, except as to the date of my death, but I guess I'll fool them all.'

"She did, too. Four Ben was gathered away to her numerous predecessors within a year or two after that. I have never been down in that part of the state since then, so I don't know what she did with the tombstones."

WOUNDS DEFENDER

MINNESOTA OFFICIALS MAKE SHORT WORK OF SETTLER IN DEVIL ROLE.

IS SHOT IN HIS HAND AND THIGH

Outlaw's Son, Who Might Have Turned Tables, Loses Nerve—Forsigner Sought Royalty on Floating Logs.

Duluth.—Peter Vorhanich, a settler on the Waterhen river, eighteen miles south of Bivabik, plugged the John Deitz role last four days and he is now in a hospital at Virginia dangerously wounded. He was shot through the hand by deputy sheriff George King, and in the right side by deputy sheriff Frank Magle. Vorhanich's 15-year-old son is being sought.

The deputy sheriffs displeyed much pluck in descending on the family after the latter had displayed an unmistakable determination to fight to the end. If the nerve of the boy had not deserted him, both of the deputies would have been killed. Vorhanich demanded $1,000 of the Northern Lumber company, a Weyerhaeuser corporation, for the privilege of running logs through the Mudhen river on his land, which the company refused, and for four days he held the drivers at bay.

Deputy Sheriffs George King and Frank Magle arriving in sight of the clearing, found Mr. and Mrs. Vorhanich at some distance from the house and their 15-year-old son was near the home. The deputies were not noticed as they approached. When they explained their mission, Mrs. Vorhanich called to her son and talked to him in Austrian, which the deputies could not understand, and thce told the lad in English, to get the gue.

Son Loses His Nerve.

The lad started after it and the deputies proceeded to arrest both men and women. Vorhanich could not up n pitch fork, sed some rocks, Maggio called to King to get the boy who had gone for the gun, but turned back agoie when looking over his shoulder, he saw that Nogle was going to heva his trouble with the man and wife. King fired at the foel of Vorhanich as the latter nproached threetening with rocks and pitch fork, but the man did not hostiote. He came right along and then King shot him in the hand. Still the settler, enraged by his hurt, came forward to give hottle, when Magle shot him in the side and he fell to the ground. By this time the boy appeared, running toward the group with his rifle. The deputies took on a bold front to the boy and ordered him to drop the rifle. The lad was anxious to help his parents, but after raising the gun two or three times his nerve failed him and he turned and ran and could not be found later.

The deputies made a stretcher and carried the wounded man three miles to their auto and delivered the man to the hospital. Mrs. Vorhanich was laft on the homesleed.

STATE SELLS 16,800 ACRES.

Big Demand and Good Prices at Sale in Roseau County.

Roseau.—What is said to be the largest land sale ever held in any one county in the state by state officials was held here when 16,800 acres of Northern Minnesota lands in Roseau county were disposed of at an average price of $7 per acre.

Several years ago the lands could not have been sold for a third of the amount received today, but the advent of drainage canals and state aid for the reclamation of the big swamp in that territory has opened the eyes of settlers throughout the Northwest.

Bidders were present from six states Minnesota, Iowa, Wisconsin, Illinois, and North and South Dakota, the state represented. Over 250 persons attended the sale.

Hendrum.—The state entomologist addressed a body of farmers here on methods of preventing the ravages of grasshoppers. The meeting was held in the new park and was fairly well attended in spite of the cold weather. grasshoppers. The meeting was held in localities in Polk county, and citizens of Hendrydi progbee to hold a series of lectures here during the summer. This was the first of the series. Hoppers are fairly numerous in fields about here.

To Demonstrate Cut-Over Land.

In connection with the coming convention it is of interest that on June 6th the State Reclamation Board, consisting of Wm. J. Brown of Warren end A. J. McGuire of Crookston Rapids and W. R. Mackenzie of Bemidji will start ont to select ten 20's of state land, which is to be cleared for the purpose of showing the next legislature what tha average northern Minnesota cutover land can be cleared for. We will locate these different tracts in the following counties: Lake, St. Louis, Aitkin, Itnhard, Cass, Itasca, Koochiching, Beltrami, Marshall and Roseau.

Considerahla interest is helng taken in this demonstration, and the board expects to have the entira land cleered up this fall so that it can be sold to intending settlers early in next year. These settlers will he able to put in their frst crops.

GOVERNOR CAN'T FIRE WHITTIER

Attorney General Decides it is Case For the Courts.

St. Paul.—Attorney General Simpson has decided that the governor does not have the power to remova Superintendent Whittier from the superintendency of the state training school for boys at Red Wing, and accordingly the state supreme court will be asked to arbitrele the matter.

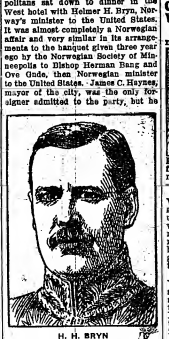
This is the plan which was erranged hy the governor, before leeving for the East and in anflication of a possible adverse opinion from the attorney general.

Attorney General Simpson holds that the governor has the power of removal only in tha case of officers specifically named. Ha had previously ruled that the board of control members did not have the power to remove tha anperintendent except in the event of a hearing before the board. Thie would necessitata a separate hearing other than the one before tha legislature which resulted in the finding that cruel and inhuman treatment had been exercised towards the inmates of the institution.

There were several objections to this plan. The members of the board had witnessea in the case, and it was felt that in view of the circumstances, the members of the board would ha on trial themselves and an unprajudiced verdict would he difficult to reach.

ALBRECHT IS FOUND GUILTY.

St. Cloud Murderer Gets Stillwatar Sentance.



St. Clond, May 25.—The jury in the case of Harry Albrecht, on trial for murder, brought in a verdict of manslaughter in the first degree and recommended leniency to the court. Judge D. L. Taylor passed sentence at once, giving Albrecht an indeterminate sentence at the state reformatory here. Albrecht killed Charles O'Brien of Duluth in this city, Dec. 20, 1910.

BRYN VISITS THE TWIN CITIES

NORWEGIANS HONOR MINISTER AT BANQUET.

Two Hundred Minneapolitans Celebrate Presence in City of Norway's Minister.

Minneapolis.—Two Hundred Minneapolitans sat down to dinner in the West hotel with Helmer H. Bryn, Norway's minister to the United States. It was almost completely a Norwegian affair and very similar in its arrangements to the banquet given three years ago by the Norwegian Society of Minneapolis to Bishop Herman Bang and Ove Gnde, then Norwegian minister to the United States. James C. Haynes, mayor of this city, was the only designer admitted to the party, but he affiliated with the descendants of the vikings in a heppy manner and listened intently to the long flow of Norse oretory, which did not halt until some time after midnight.

Mr. Bryn was shown all of Minneapolis that could he revealed in a four-hour automobile tour and on his return to the hotel, said that his highest anticipations of the beauties of Minneapolis had been realized. He went on to St. Paul as the guest of the Norden club of that city and E. H. Hobe, Norwegian consul in Minneapolis.

Songs by Chorus.

The function had a prelude by the Dovre and Normandeenne Singing Societies. As Mr. Bryn was meeting his hosts preparatory to entering the dining rooms the singers formed on the balcony floor and sang a group of songs, including "Ja, Vi Elsker Dette Landet," "Naar Fjordene Blaaner," and closing with "America." Mr. Bryn thanked the singers heartily for their attention to him.

The banquet was in charge of Charles A. Dahly, president of the Norwegian society. Mayor Haynes extended the freedom of the city to "his excellency," and reminded him that many of its beauties and advantages which had not been covered on the afternoon tour. Dr. Emil Hoegh, on behalf of the society extended an equally cordial greeting.

The reply by Mr. Bryn conveyed his gratitude for the many kindnesses shown him on his last visit to Minneapolis. He spoke of the big reunion of Norwegians in Norway, May 17, 1914, to commemorate the country's centennial as an independent nation, and closed with the wish of renewing acquaintance with everyone in Christiania on that occasion.

Tells of Institution.

Dr. M. O. Bockman, president of the United Norwegian Lutheran Church seminary, in St. Anthony Park, informed the guest of the great work of the Norwegian-Americans in establishing educational institutions and in philanthropy.

Lars O. Thorpe, Willmar, president of the Mindesgve-Komite, organized to collect funds for a Norwegian-American gift to the mother country in May, 1914, outlined at length the purpose and plans of the committee and urged those present to give it their hearty support. James A. Peterson closed the program with an expression of appreciation to Mr. Bryn and praise for the work accomplished by his people in America.

HONOR ROCHESTER PRIEST.

Rochester.—Elahorata preparations are well under way for the ceremonies that will be held at St. John's church in this city Wednesday morning, May 31, at which time Bishop Patrick Heron of the Winona diocese of the Catholic church will invest Father William Hinrken with the purple robes emblematic of his elevation to domestic prelate, carrying with it the title monsignor. It is expected that a large number of church dignitaries will be present, among whom will be Bishop Thomas O'Gorman of Sioux Falls, who was the pioneer priest of the St. John's parish here.

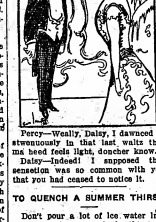
DROWNS IN BARREL.

Wife of Winona County Farmer Leaves Babies and Ended Life.

Winona.—While her husband and father had left the house temporarily, Mrs. Bertha Cravath, wife of a well-to-do Winona county farmer, stole away from her three babies and ended her life by drowning in a barrel of water in the barn. The tragedy occurred on the Cravath farm, 4 mile and a half west of Saratoga.

DOCTORS FAILED TO HELP HER

Cured by Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound



Pound, Wis.—"I am glad to announce that I have been cured of dysmenorrhea, polypoid tumor and female troubles by your medicine. I had been troubled with both for fourteen years and consulted different doctors, but failed to get any relief. After using Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and Blood Purifier I can say I am a well woman. I can't find words to express my thanks for the good your medicine has done me. You may publish this if you wish."—Mrs. Hermina Stark, Pound, Wis.

The success of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, made from roots and herbs, is unparalleled. It may be used with perfect confidence by women who suffer from displacements, inflammation, ulceration, fibroid tumors, irregularities, periodic pains, backache, bearing-down feeling, flatulency, indigestion, dizziness, or nervous prostration.

For thirty years Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound has been the standard remedy for female ills, and suffering women owe it to themselves to at least give this medicine a trial. There is abundant proof that it has cured thousands of others, and why should it not cure you?

If you want special advice write Mrs. Pinkham, Lynn, Mass., for it. It is free and always helpful.

The Passing of the Wife.

We have known for some time that the wife would have to go. We have held off as long as possible in the inevitable moment, but it might just as well be over with at once.

The wife was a very desirable article while she lasted. She tended the home and did the housework when necessary and sat up patiently and waited for hubby's return. A useful person certainly—one to love, to honor and obey.

Now the suffragette age is upon us and the wife is rapidly becoming extinct, says Life.

In a few more years she will be exhibited in museums.

Adieu, madam! We respect your memory!

WELCOMED BY MEN WHO SMOKE

Particular men who smoke realize how offensive to people of refinement is a strong tobacco breath, and how objectionable to themselves is that "dark brown taste" in the mouth after smoking.

Paxtine Toilet Antiseptic is worth its weight in gold for this purpose alone. Just a little in a glass of water—rinse the mouth and brush the teeth. The mouth is thoroughly deodorized, the breath becomes pure and sweet and a delightful sense of mouth cleanliness replaces that dark brown tobacco taste.

Paxtine is far superior to liquid antiseptics and Peroxide for all toilet and hygienic uses and may be obtained at any drug store 25 and 50c e hox or sent postpeid upon receipt of price by The Paxton Toilet Co., Boston, Mess. Send for a free sempio.

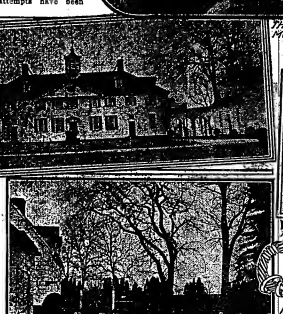
RECENT IMPROVEMENTS AT MOUNT VERNON



MOUNT VERNON MANSION AS IT APPEARS TODAY

AN EFFORT is to be made to have the new congress take up the proposal that seems to be forced elsewhere by the United States government may acquire title to and assume the management of Mount Vernon, on the Potomac, the home and tomb of George Washington. It was only because the last congress at the session which closed a few months ago took definite action in the matter that there was halted a project to profane the historic precincts of Mount Vernon by the location of a reformatory in the vicinity and it is being argued that if congress has to bestow such fostering care upon the famous mansion and estate why not have the whole management of the institution (which really belongs to the whole people) vested in the elective body closest to the people.

Several unsuccessful attempts have been made in the past to have our national legislature take some action in this matter. There is, however, constant agitation on the subject and a continual increase in the number of people who look upon it as a public shame that our greatest patriotic shrine should be in other hands than Uncle Sam's. This resentment is due in great measure to what the critics are pleased to dub the "time measure" methods which obtain in the conduct of this tourist mecca. The procedure complained of is the charging of an admission fee for entrance to the grounds and the sale of postal cards, guide books and other commodities. Unfavorable sentiment is attributable especially to the circumstance that most of the money making enterprises conducted at Mount Vernon are on the monopolistic order. Only an approved brand of guide book can be purchased on the grounds and so on through the whole list of articles for sale, even to the circumstance that a single line of steamers on the Potomac river has the exclusive privilege of landing tourists at Mount Vernon.

However, whatever may have been the mistakes of the association of women who have control of Mount Vernon, or of the superintendent who for twenty-five years has had the authority of general manager of Mount Vernon, there is no denying that they have accomplished much in the restoration and maintenance of the manor house and the most interesting part of the famous Virginia plantation. Only recently has there been completed an important undertaking in landscape architecture which is especially notable because it supplies the final feature needed to restore the actual conditions of George Washington's day at the country seat which the Father of His Country loved so well and where he lived and died. This final restoration has been the replacing of the lawn and garden walls which in colonial times played an important part in the surroundings of Mount Vernon, as they did in the case of almost every mansion of its type.

The original walls on the Mount Vernon estate, most of which were constructed under the supervision of Washington himself, were in an excellent state of preservation when he died, but successive heirs to the estate allowed them to fall into decay until there was naught left but the foundations. These walls, which add so much to the appearance of the Mount Vernon estate, would have been restored years ago had it been merely a matter of expense, for the whole work cost only about $1,500. However, a more serious stumbling block delayed operations—namely, a desire to secure brick that would be duplicates of those originally employed and which would consequently enable adherence to the policy of having everything historically correct to the most minute detail.

After a quest that had continued for more than a score of years the long-sought bricks were recently obtained when there was demolished an old colonial mansion known as Society Hill, located in King George county, Virginia. This structure, which was built by Colonel Thornton, a close friend of George Washington—and which by coincidence latter passed into the possession of a member of the Washington family—was constructed of bricks brought from England. The bricks in the Society Hill mansion, when cleaned, proved to be identical in size and color with the bricks found in the ruined foundations of the original garden walls at Mount Vernon. Accordingly the walls were restored in accordance with the original drawings and enough of the original Washington bricks were rescued from the old foundations to provide a coping for the walls, the bricks obtained from the King George county site furnishing the remainder of the material needed.

The most extensive of the restored walls are the "screen walls," the function of which was to hide from the sight of Washington's guests seated on the lawn the inevitable domestic activities that were carried on around such outbuildings as the kitchen, the smokehouse, the spinning house, etc.—adjuncts of the mansion which it was not desired to have obtrude themselves upon the notice of visitors. Almost as interesting as the screen walls, however, are the "Ha Ha" walls, which are depressed below the level of the sloping lawn and are consequently unobservable from the portico of the mansion, but which in Washington's day performed an important function by preventing the stock from wandering on the lawn in front of the house. The name "Ha Ha" as applied to such walls originated in England and is attributed to countryriders who were surprised into making the ejaculation when they suddenly and unexpectedly came upon such a hidden wall in their chase of a fox.

The restored walls, although the most important of recent improvements at Mount Vernon, are by no means the only ones that may be noted by the sightseers and tourists who now visit this historic spot in throngs that aggregate 100,000 a year. A new roof has been placed on the mansion house and the public probably has little conception of how much time and labor was required to obtain the desired material for this roof, just as it was no end of trouble to find the bricks for the walls above referred to. About 50,000 cypress shingles were needed for the new roof, but they must needs be "hived" shingles because Washington had that kind and it seemed impossible to find any hived shingles, because nowadays shingles are not made that way, sawing being much easier than splitting. Finally a lumber firm in South Carolina undertook to supply shingles that would duplicate those of Washington's day, but they charged almost a cent apiece for the singles, which made the roof a pretty expensive one.

Mount Vernon mansion now has one of the most perfect heating systems to be found in any American residence. It was designed especially to prevent danger from fire—and in this connection it may be mentioned that Washington's old home is not built of brick or stone, as many people suppose, but has a frame of oak, sheathed with pine, cut, painted and sanded to resemble stone. The new system enables the heating of all the rooms in the mansion by a hot water system and yet the boiler room, with the inevitable menace that comes from fire and stored fuel is located 400 feet from the mansion and wholly underground.

Another modern improvement at this replenished estate in old Virginia is found in the provision of a fine water supply obtained from a splendid artesian well. Powerful pumps, operated by electricity, supply water from this well for household purposes and keep filled at all times the emergency reservoirs which would be depended upon in case of fire. Incidentally it may be explained that the score of men including guards, gardeners, laborers, etc., who work and live on the Mount Vernon estate or close at hand, are organized into a well-drilled fire-fighting force and they have chemical and steam engines for fighting the flames, should this destructive agent ever menace the mension—o remote chence, it would seem, for all the rooms in the house and all the exterior walls have been treated with a fire-resisting paint.

For all that electricity is employed to pump water and perform certain other chores on the Mount Vernon estate, the magic curtate, as many people suppose, but has a frame of oak, sheathed with pine, cut, painted and sanded to resemble stone. The new system enables the heating of all the rooms in the mansion by a hot water system and yet the boiler room, with the inevitable menace that comes from fire and stored fuel is located 400 feet from the mansion and wholly underground.

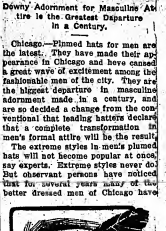
For all that electricity is employed to pump water and perform certain other chores on the Mount Vernon estate, the magic curtains, rugs and furniture are not illuminated by electricity, for the reason that the mansion is not wired for the current, but is lighted as it was in the days of yore, solely by candles.



There has been another notable undertaking at Mount Vernon in the form of the construction of drainage works which control forces of nature that threatened to play havoc on the famous estate. This new system of sanitary drainage has, first of all, served to reclaim the hogs and swamps which at one time gave the place a reputation for unhealthfulness. Equally serious in possible results were the threatened landslides near the mansion and in the vicinity of the tomb of Washington, from which, however, the body of Washington was removed some years ago to the new tomb. These slides have been averted for all time by the construction at considerable cost of a tunnel which pierces the hill on which the mension stands.

MEN'S PLUMED HATS APPEAR

Downy Adornment for Masculine Attire Is the Greatest Departure in a Century.

Chicago.—Plumed hats for men are the latest. They have made their appearance in Chicago and have caused a great wave of excitement among the fashionable men of the city. They are the biggest departure in masculine adornment made in a century, and are so decided a change from the conventional that leading hatters declare that a complete transformation in men's formal attire will be the result.

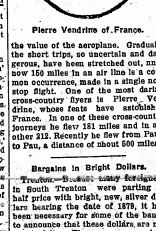
The extreme styles in men's plumed hats will not become popular at once, say experts. Extreme styles never do. But observant persons have noticed that for several years many of the better dressed men of Chicago have worn a ruffed feather just above the bow of their dress hats.

The Plumed Hat.

Recently this feather has been made a trifle larger until the leaders of fashion have accepted it as permanent feature of the thoroughly up-to-date hat.

The most striking of the new hats are in the shape of the foreign Alpine hat which comes in all colors and can be had with any style of trimming desired. One shown is of a light pearl grey and trimmed with a dark green plume, with a light border of rich yellow. A Paris milliner would call it striking.

The some style with a long green quille makes another combination becoming to many faces. The Alpine hat admits of almost unlimited changes and will permit well-dressed men to show as much individuality in the matter of hats as women do now.



The dent-crown imported soft hot shown, with a novelty wing, is of dark gray and comes in many pretty shades of brown, which will harmonize well with the newer fabrics which the tellors have been importing for spring suits. Wearers of the always formal silk hat will also be able to take adventage of fashion's latest caprice and will not be denied the privilege of ornamenting it.

Dignified white and gray algrettes and other more conservative feathery effects can be added to the latest French style with the flat brim without defying the mandates of Dame Fashion.

Aviators Gradually Turning Their Attention to More Important Phase of Sport.

the value of the aeroplane. Gradually the short trips, so uncertain and dangerous, have been stretched out, until now it is common for an air line a common occurrence, made in a single nonstop flight. One of the most daring cross-country flyers in air line is Pierre Vendrine, whose feats have astchished France. In one of these cross-country journeys he flew 181 miles and in another 212. Recently he flew from Paris to Pau, a distance of about 600 miles.

NO PLACE FOR FATHER

Bathroom Nook Only Place in Which Family Head May Find Privacy

The English home with its lack of "proper" heating and also its sad lack of ventilation and bathtubs is no more a marvel to the American woman than the American home is to the English woman. The latter freely admits that the conveniences of the American home are beyond compare, but there is one serious defect that is always commented on. This is set forth by Mary Mortimer Maxwell in the National Review (London). There is no place for father. Surely there must be some truth in this, for so many British women have called attention to the fact that we have no privacy in our homes, and have pointed to the shortcomings of pretty strands of heads serving as doors, and to the fact that the bathroom is the only sanctuary, the Indianapolis News remarks. This is borne out by observations in many cities. A former official in Indiana is well read in history. He also has a family. He freely admits that he absorbed his history lying with pillow in the bathtub, safe beyond the reach of the growing children. This is just what Mary Mortimer Maxwell is speaking about when she says:

"But the member of the American family to whom my thoughts turn in greatest sympathy in regard to the lack of privacy and the denial of the opportunity for the cultivation of individuality is the father—he who pays for everything, buys the house with his own earnings or hires it, and yet generally has not so much as a corner that is his very own. It is called 'his house.' It has many rooms. There are the drawing room, the living room, the library. There are numerous bedrooms and dressing rooms, but if he really desires solitude, there would seem to be nothing for him but to lock himself up in the bathroom. Sometimes you hear the members of an American family speak of 'father's den,' to be sure. Why, just before I left America a New York friend, when she was showing me through her new home, said to me, 'This is my husband's den,' showing me into the sunniest and brightest room in the house. My eyes rested upon smiling scenes and tea cozies, a copy of 'Poems of Passion,' an embroidery frame, a train of 'choo-choo cars,' and a box of such American confections as my soul delights in and which no manly man could possibly be seen eating. I looked about for rows of curious pipes, for a horribly dusty and disordered writing table, a lounging jacket—not at all. Bows, but, oh, so comfortable after the workaday coat—a copy or two of a sporting paper, but not a sign of such mute witnesses to masculine ownership of that room did I see.

"It's the sunniest room in the house,' went on that wickedly selfish little American woman, 'so the children and I spend a great deal of time here.'

"I have been shown through other American homes where the husbands and their own dressing rooms, their 'own' hanging cupboards, and have noted with surprise the complexion balms, bodkins with pink bobs ribbon ready for running through lace, bonnet whisks and cut glass powder boxes lying upon the chiffonier along with millitary brushes and safety razors. I do believe in separating dressing rooms and separate dressing tables, the fond wife would gush, and then she would show me her husband's own hanging cupboard, which, being fitted up with a new kind of fitted dressing sit-case, which was found exactly the thing for keeping her skirts in nicest order, she had taken possession of up to the farthest and darkest corner, where a pathetic and lonely greatcoat might hang on a solitary peg."

Does this thing affect all, make the path to the divorce courts popular? Our British critics sometimes think so. Men are brutish folk at the best, and sometimes do like to be alone.

HAPPENINGS IN THE CITIES

Whistle Takes Place of Curfew Bell

KANSAS CITY, Kan.—Curfew must ring in Kansas, and its sounding must be heeded. The W. C. T. U. has determined that too little attention is paid to the curfew law, particularly in Kansas City, Kan., and asked the city commissioners to see that it is enforced. In this city, where the sounding of a steam whistle on the packing plant takes the place of the old time bell, it is alleged that it is no longer "the curfew whistle," but is generally spoken of as "the nine o'clock whistle," from the fact that it sounds at that hour in the evening.

Ten years ago the W. C. T. U. took up the matter of the boys' remaining out late at night and determined to put a stop to it. They secured the adoption by most of the city councils of the Sunflower stats of ordinances similar to the New England curfew laws in this city, which was for too large for any bell to be heard in every section, a grave question arose as to how the boys were to know when to "make it home." After some discussion the packing houses solved the problem by agreeing to blow the whistle at nine o'clock.

All was well, and when the loud blast of the big steam siren, which can be heard forty miles on a clear day, sounded at nine o'clock the boys scampered home. If they did not the policeman took them to the station and they were warned "never again to be out after curfew." The women were satisfied and all went well.

But the boys grew up and neglected to impress on their younger brothers a dread of the curfew. The brothers did not scamper home at the sound, and the people began to think little of it.

Meantime the housewives had become accustomed to regulate their clocks by the sound, and at nine o'clock they went to see if the time-piece was behind. The habit spread, and one by one the men grew accustomed to regulate their watches by the whistle. Now every night the watch of each man who works in the city comes out of his pocket almost by force of habit at the first sound of the whistle.

City of Winnipeg Owns Its Utilities

WINNIPEG, Man.—Before the close of the present year this city will no looked upon as the greatest exponent of public ownership on the American continent. Its investment in public utilities is now more than $20,000,000.

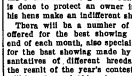
It is nearly a quarter of a century since the city council laid the foundation of municipal ownership by buying out the Winnipeg Water Works company and establishing a municipal plant. So successful did the venture prove that when the city decided to lay asphalt pavements some years later it was decided to install a municipal asphalt plant and the many miles of pavement in this city have been laid by it.

Trouble with the Winnipeg Electric company, which controls the street railway franchise, gas, electric light and power franchise, resulted in the city voting $3,000,000 for a municipal power plant. Out on the Winnipeg river, 65 miles from the city, a plant is now nearing completion. The near completion of this plant and the prospects that the city would build its own street railway system, led the Winnipeg Electric company to sell out to the city. The purchase price is $18,000,000.

Winnipeg's telephone system is also conducted under public ownership, for it is a portion of the system extending all over the province and owned by the Manitoba government. In this city there are over 17,000 telephones, the rates being $24 a year for residences and $48 for office phones.

Winnipeg owns its stone quarries in the vicinity of the city, and there, under a staff of civic employes, mines for paving purposes the macadam streets and the crushed stone for many purposes.

Seeking Wives for Titled Noblemen



NEW YORK.—American heiresses who may be plying for alliances with Austria's titled youth need plan no longer. The way is open to them, and the method of acquiring a prince or a count of either the Bohemian or Tyrolean variety is so simple that it is within reach of all. There is no mystery about it. Miss Yrma Bleyer of Vienna has arrived here to arrange it all.

"We in Vienna know," says the pratty matchmaker, "that in the United States there are many daughters of millionaires who have had every possible luxury showered upon them since their birth, but who long for what has always seemed to them unattainable, namely, pride of family and social position. I can give them both.

"I have on my list two princes, brothers, one twenty-three and the other twenty-five years. Both are officers in the Austrian army, and their regiment is stationed at Vienna. Their family is of ancient lineage and they own two castles in Bohemia. Each has a fortune of $2,000,000. A condition which must be met in the cases of both my princes, should I find wives for them, is that the American girls must bring them fortunes equal to their own.

"There is one of my clients of whom I can speak freely because he has returned to Austria after a visit to this country, during which he made journeys to several American cities, including St. Louis, Chicago and Cleveland. I refer to Count Hans Christalaigg. His family estate is at Ystarein, Austria, and he has a fine castle there.

State Is to Have Egg-Laying Contest

MOUNTAIN GROVE, Mo.—An egg-laying contest to begin September 1 and last one year is being arranged by the Missouri Agricultural college and will be held at the state poultry experiment station here. It will be the first contest of its kind held in America and will no doubt attract much attention among breeders of fine poultry.

Australia and New Zealand have similar contests and plans for something of this sort are under way both in Philadelphia and in San Francisco, but the first in the field with a definite arrangement is Missouri.

Entries will be limited to fifty, and the first 50 breeders to make entries will furnish the hens. Each owner is limited to six hens, with the privilege of substituting a hen for one that becomes sick or injured. Fifty pens will be built, exactly alike, and each pen of hens will have the same food and treatment.

Managers of the contest have made a rule so that each pen with its entries will be designated by number. The owner and the management will know who owns the hens, but no one else will have this information, unless the owner cares to give it out. This is done to protect an owner in case his hens make an indifferent showing.

There will be a number of prizes offered for the best showing at the end of each month, also special prizes for the best showing made by representatives of different breeds. For the result of the year's contest there will be other valuable prizes and owners who capture one of these will find it worth much to their business, for reports of the contest will be published in newspapers, magazines and poultry journals all over the country.

WHO'S WHO AND WHY

STIMSON NEW WAR SECRETARY

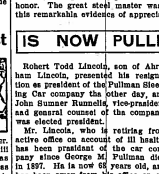
Last fall Roosevelt nominated him for governor of New York and Stimson and the colonel stumped the state, going down to defeat in the Democratic landslide, after a spectacular campaign.

In person, Stimson is tall, slender and impressive. He has dark hair and wears a small mustache. His diction is precise and his delivery much like that of an attorney reading a brief to a court.

Henry Lewis Stimson, the new secretary of war, is a progressive Republican of the Roosevelt stripe and has been considered as Roosevelt's right hand man in politics. Stimson is forty-three. He comes of a Knickerbocker family and was born in New York September 21, 1867. At Yale he was a member of Pel Upsilon and Skull of Bones. After he graduated from Yale in '88 he went to Harvard and received his master's degree in '89 and his law school diploma in '90.

In 1893 he became a member of the law firm of which Elihu Root was a member, and in 1906 President Roosevelt took him from a lucrative private practice to make him United States district attorney for the southern district of New York. During the three years that followed Stimson distinguished himself in the prosecutions of the sugar trust, Charles W. Morse and railroad rebaters.

THE ORIGINAL INSURGENT



Representative Henry Allen Cooper of Racine, Wis., is declared entitled to the distinction of being the first insurgent in congress. Mr. Cooper was an insurgent before the word "insurgent" come into use. He has been in congress 16 years, and he has been an insurgent 15 years.

Before the "stalwarts" in Wisconsin led Robert Marion La Follette to trouble them, Henry A. Cooper of the First Wisconsin district was inclined to muss up the program of the regulars. He was elected first to the Fifty-third congress. Once or twice an effort was made to defeat him for the nomination, and after that they tried to defeat him at the election, but he has been returned to each succeeding congress.

When Cooper went to congress for his first term he was placed upon the committee on Pacific railroads. The Pacific railroad funding bill was before the committee, and the young man from Racine proceeded to raise a row, which was an innovation for that committee on that particular bill. He was "sent for" a number of times, and some of the big lobbyists for the railroad labored with him to get him to "see the light," but Cooper refused to see it. He fought the claim of the railroad and spoiled the program.

CARNEGIE GETS GOLD MEDAL

What he called his greatest mark of honor was received the other day by Andrew Carnegie, when 21 American republics bestowed upon him a gold medal bearing on one side the words "Benefactor of Humanity," and on the other "The American Republics to Andrew Carnegie." It was the first time in history that such a tribute from so many nations had been paid to an individual, and the scene, which took place at Washington, was highly impressive.

Senor de Zamacone, the Mexican ambassador, made the presentation speech. Secretary of State Knox presided and President Taft spoke in eulogy of the gifts which Mr. Carnegie has made for the cause of peace on this hemisphere and throughout the world. Members of the diplomatic corps and men high in official life filled the hall of the Pan-American Union building, where the ceremonies were held and for the erection of which Mr. Carnegie gave $1,000,000.

In accepting the medal Mr. Carnegie told of his deep feelings on being informed last autumn of the honor conferred upon him by the Pan-American conference at Buenos Ayres, when 150,000,000 people, forming 21 sovereign nations, through their representatives voted to bestow upon him this signal honor. The great steel master was visibly moved by a powerful sense of this remarkable evidence of appreciation.

IS NOW PULLMAN PRESIDENT

Robert Todd Lincoln, son of Abraham Lincoln, presented his resignation as president of the Pullman Sleeping Car company the other day, and John Sumner Runnells, vice-president and general counsel of the company, was elected president.

Mr. Lincoln, who is retiring from active office on account of ill health, has been president of the car company since George M. Pullman died in 1897. His is now 68 years old, and has been away from his office on account of poor health much of the time for several months. Mr. Runnells meanwhile has administered the office duties.

Mr. Runnells has been general counsel of the $120,000,000 Pullman company since 1897, and has been vice-president since 1900. He was born in Effingham, N. H., July 30, 1844, graduated from Amherst college in 1865, and after studying law at Dover, N. H., removed to Iowa and became private secretary to the governor of the state. From 1881 to 1886 he was United States district attorney for Iowa.

NATIONAL CAPITAL AFFAIRS

Law Goes After Immigrant Swindlers

WASHINGTON.—Though the ways of graft are many, and many are the grafters, probably the most contemptible and most plentiful in this class are those who prey on ignorence and poverty. The Department of Justice has undertaken with notable success a war against those swindlers of our citizens, but it has not yet endeavored to protect the immigrant anxious to become a citizen. Perhaps our lawmakers are to blame. As an illustration of this misuse L. Glick takes the greeting steamship agent or petty banker.

A poor man who has come from the "old country" but a short time before will spend the savings of one or two years' labor to purchase transportation to the United States for some relative in a foreign land. The understanding is that he will go by direct route from the country he is leaving to his destination. Of course the agent may overcharge. The may he called legitimate graft, as he has to meet with competition, and the overcharge does not amount to much. But that is not all. The emigrent, whether he be Italian, Jew, Greek, or ecither, receives his ticket; sells what little belooggios he hes and presents himself with his family, hundls and ticket to the foreign agent. The agent scrutinizes the ticket with great care, apparently, and in a sed voice informs the emigrant there is required more money. Such a scene occurs et every stop-over. This hesides being robbed for food and lodgings for which the kind relotive across the seas hes already peid double.

After much delay he arrives et the seeport end here they take whet is left. They let him kssp his family. After more delay, he is set on board e ship bound for Canada, generally the port is Halifax. Perhaps the steamship companies know why the immigrant is sent to the United States via Conede, but they won't tell. He arrives at Halifax penniless and is deherred. Ths fact that he is bound for some town in the United States does not make things any dessester for him with the Canadian officials.

His relstiva is communicated with and while negotiations for his release from the immigrant stetion are pending the Canadian government charges him for board; if his relative cen horrow enough money it hecomes only a costly experience but often he must go hack home and our country loses another citizen.

New Naval Fighter Mighty Submarine

THE largest and most formidable submarine ever constructed for the United States government will hs given a trial trip soon. If the craft proves a success it will have a large bearing on the future of the navy, will tend to increase the importance of sub-surface wer vessels, and et the same time to lessen the importance of the great hettleship.

It is the intention to cruise to New York with the boat on her trial trip. Later it is expected the stronge craft will be sent across the Atlantic.

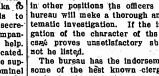
Among the features of the new submarine are hydroplanes. Thess correspond to the planes of an eeroplane. They are assigned for the purpose of steadying the boet and holding it even when under the water. Another feature is the drop keel, which weighs several tons, and can be released in cese of an accident, thus edding to the buoyancy of the vessel. On the bottom of the hoet are wheels calculated to protect the bottom when the vessel drops down to the hed of the ocesa. Verious other features are important in the construction of this type of submarine. Enough storage air is provided for 48 hours under water. The vessel is provided with powerful gasolins eagines, which propel her when running at the surface. But under the water the power is furnished by storage hetteries.

Its length is 161 feet and its displacement shout 636 tons. The government contract calls for 14 knots speed, but it is expected to make 16. This is when the submarine is traveling on the surface. The submerged speed called for by the contract is nine and a half knots.

Big Pay for Woman Committee Clerk

IT IS a "girl from the golden west" who drews the largest salary ever paid by the United States to a woman. Leona M. Wells of Wyoming has been eppointed assistant secretary of the committes on appropriations, and with that position goes a salary of $2,500. She hes another edvantage over nearly all the other women, for she can go home and vote just like any other citizen of Wyoming.

For several years she hes been rected as one of the most efficient of government employes and hes served on both the claims and the military affeirs committees, the routine of which she quickly mastered, making herself valuable to the members of the committes by elways having much desired information ready for their use.



She made such a hit with the claims committee that they included an item in the general deficiancy fund of last yeer allowing her $2,000 for extre work. Pending before the committee when Mrs. Wells did this extra work were 50,000 claims, some of them grave old and many since first presented.

She prepered a list of these 50,000 claims, giving a short history of each and showing what action hed been taken. This was printed, and is a valuable reference document.

Domestic Service Bureau Is Planned

SOCIETY women interested in philanthropic work carried on through the Gentlewomen's league, one of the social organizations of Washington, are deeply interested in a movement proposed and started by Mrs. Julia James that has for its object the establishment of an intelligence bureau to be operated as an auxiliary of the league.

The new branch of the organization is to be incorporated under the name of the National Co-operative Intelligence bureau. It will undertake to supply employers of all kinds to Washington homes, from social secretaries, linguists, readers and companions, to all manner of domestic help. It will have offices centrally located. There will be a fee charged those supplied with employes and a nominal fee charged the persons placed in positions. The bureau will undertake to give its indorsement to the moral character of the employes supplied as well as to their capabilities to perform their particular kind of work.

All applicants for positions will be required to file a brief statement of where they have filled positions, and before they are indorsed and placed in other positions the officers of the bureau will make a thorough and systematic investigation. If the investigation of the character of the applicant proves unsatisfactory she will not be listed.

The bureau has the indorsement of some of the best known clergymen, professional and business men of the city.

Neither the optimist nor the pessimist is ever quite as happy or as unhappy as he thinks he is.

ENCOURAGING BRIGHT PUPILS.

Parents and educators everywhere will be interested in the experiment now being tried in the Cincinnati public schools of establishing a class-room for especially bright pupils, which would appear to be the logical accompaniment of the classroom for backward pupils. The proposition that it is as unfair to hold back the apt or clever child in the ranks of the mediocre as it is to speed the dull pupil to a pace he cannot maintain, appeals as reasonable and common sense. It will be argued with much force that the system which makes provision for caring for the backward pupil cannot be justified without provision is made for accompanying the needs of those who can advance more rapidly than the average, says the St. Paul Pioneer Press. The proposition simply provides for the application to schooling of the plan, that is generally adopted and followed in the business world, where wage scales, chances of promotion and all the advantages are based on the ability of those employed to advance rapidly in one line or another. This has not been the rule in the school where the system has been adjusted to meet the requirements of the average pupil, with special provision made for those below the average. The net result of this system has been retardation, for which the pupils are not to blame. The Cincinnati educators have decided that the old system of trying to make all children fit the same educational pattern is unsatisfactory in general and particularly unfair to the bright pupil who are to be given special attention under a more sensible and equitable method.

In putting its ban on the "common drinking cup," the New York Board of Health is doing a good thing. The public drinking cup is a carrier of infection and the habit of using an individual drinking vessel under all circumstances might be good to acquire. There are folding cups of metal, rubber and even of paper, which one can keep about the person without discomfort and can get at trifling expense. Scarlet fever, diphtheria, influenza and even tuberculosis are transmissable, and are frequently transmitted, through promiscuously used water glasses and teacups.

The famous auto expert who broke his neck in an effort to establish new speed records might have given his life in a better cause. A man, it is true, can easily find out if human manufacture can stand the terrific strain put upon it by these speed experiments, but if he finds to the contrary the knowledge is seldom of any use to him, nor does the acquisition serve even the minor purpose of being a warning to others. The need of the age is to learn more how to save life, rather than the faster ways of rushing through it.

GARY MAKES DENIAL

DECLARES U. S. STEEL CORPORATION IS NOT PLANING WORLD-WIDE COMBINE.

OFFERS TO LAY BARE FACTS

Chairman of Board of Directors Appears Before Investigating Committee of House and Promises to Give Frank Statements.

Washington.—Offering to lay bare all the facts concerning the United States Steel corporation, denying that he is planning to form a monopoly to control steel products of the entire world, and flatly admitting that the steel corporation has absolute domination of subsidiary companies, Elbert H. Gary appeared as the second witness in the inquiry being conducted by the steel investigating committee of the house.

The disclaimer as to a worldwide combination was called out by a statement by Chairman Stanley that Mr. Gary was credited with being the directing genius of such a trust.

Examination of Mr. Gary brought out that the department of commerce and labor and its bureau of corporations were not co-operating with the Stanley committee. Mr. Stanley asked the witness if he knew whether a report of the bureau of corporations ob its investigation of the steel corporation had been submitted to President Taft or former President Roosevelt. Mr. Gary said he did not know.

Mr. Gary declared he would give the committee all the facts and figures it desired concerning the affairs of the United States Steel corporation and its subsidiary companies.

"There is not any doubt," Mr. Gary told the committee, "that the United States Steel corporation as the owner of most of the stocks of the subsidiary companies ultimately controls those subsidiary companies, including their management and conduct."

Asked if the Carnegie Steel company competed now with other subsidiary companies in the steel corporation, Mr. Gary said:

"I should say it does, putting my interpretation on the word. I came to be frank, and to give you the exact facts—that you may put your own construction on them.

"The subsidiary companies have their own directors and officers and have the right to act independently, but as the steel corporation owns the securities, if the conduct of a subsidiary company was antagonistic in any way it would only be a question of time when the administration of that subsidiary company would be changed."

SUNSTAR WINNER OF DERBY

Takes Famous Turf Event With Comparative Ease—King and Queen Witness Classic Race.

Epsom Downs.—Sunstar, J. B. Joel's magnificent horse, won the Coronation derby here. Favorita in the betting, he ran a sensational race, winning England's most famous turf event with comparative ease.

Sunstar was 3 to 1 and 4 choice in the betting, and a vast sum was laid on him by his admirers.

BIG STICK FOR TRUST

ATTORNEY GENERAL DECLARES ALL SHERMAN ACT VIOLATORS WILL BE PROSECUTED.

ADMITS STEEL CONNECTION

Cabinet Member Tells House Committee He Advised Corporation and Received $25,000 for His Services While With Law Firm.

Washington. — Attorney General Wickersham told the house committee on expenditures in the department of justice that as a result of the recent decisions of the supreme court in the Standard Oil and American Tobacco cases a sweeping attempt will be made to obtain criminal convictions of all violators of the Sherman anti-trust act.

Attorney General Wickersham testified that he had advised the United States Steel corporation on several occasions from 1901 to 1909, during his connection with the firm of Strong & Cadwalader and that he had received his share of the fee turned into the firm for services to the American Sugar Refining company, personally attended to by Henry W. Taft, brother of the president.

Mr. Wickersham said his share was about $25,000.

Mr. Wickersham was examined chiefly by Representative Beall of Texas, chairman of the committee, concerning the sale by the government of friar lands in the Philippines to the American Sugar Refining company. He said that Henry W. Taft in one time appeared as a special attorney for the government against the "sugar trust," a part of the American Tobacco company.

Mr. Wickersham declared that after he became attorney general John Henry Hammond represented Strong & Cadwalader as counsel for the so-called sugar trust in the purchase of the friar lands. He added that at the time he gave his opinion permitting the sale of the lands he did not know that Hammond represented the president of the American Sugar Refining company, Mr. Havemeyer.

When asked about the connection of the firm with steel affairs, Mr. Wickersham said:

"I personally have advised the United States Steel corporation in one or two issues."

"Did Strong & Cadwalader ever represent the New York Cotton exchange?" asked Chairman Beall.

Yes, Henry W. Taft was counsel for the exchange," Mr. Wickersham replied, "and I think he still continues in that capacity."

The chairman sought to learn from the attorney general why the department of justice and the treasury department accepted a $2,000,000 settlement from the American Sugar Refining company on the Lake Linden dock valuations at the port of New York, rather than enforce the severe penalties provided for by law. Mr. Wickersham replied that the department felt that the evidence at once was not sufficient to support a claim for penalties, though it was his belief that restitution was made because the penalization feared penalties would be imposed.

"Then it was your judgment," suggested Mr. Beall, "that, notwithstanding the fact that the government had access to a memorandum book showing the receipt of sugar imported and to books showing fraudulent weights, if the government had attempted to collect the penalties there was strong probability of failure?"

"Yes," Mr. Wickersham answered.

ORDER NEW LORIMER PROBE

Martin Resolution Providing for Investigation by Regular Committee Is Adopted by Senate.

Washington.—The senate of the United States passed the resolution offered by Senator Martin of Virginia, directing the standing committee on privileges and elections for the second time in a year to ascertain if corrupt methods were used in the election of William Lorimer as junior senator from Illinois.

The vote was 48 to 20. It marked the defeat of the resolution submitted by Senator La Follette of Wisconsin, providing for a special investigating committee of five new members of the senate, and for which a more significant fight has been waged for two weeks.

The Martin resolution was passed with the understanding that the actual work of investigating the Lorimer case shall be conducted by a sub-committee consisting of the following senators:

Dillingham and Gamble, Republicans, and Fletcher and Johnston, Democrats, representing the pro-Lorimer element.

Clapp and Sutherland, Republicans, and Kern and Lea, Democrats, on the anti-Lorimer side.

RAY HARROUN WINS

CAPTURES FIRST PRIZE OF $14,600 IN BIG 500-MILE AUTO RACE.

S. P. Dickson Is Killed, A. W. Greiner and Six Others Are Injured at Indianapolis.

Indianapolis, Ind.—The first 500-mile auto race on a speedway, the greatest test of skill and endurance in motor racing history, was won by Ray Harroun, in a Marmon car, in the time of 6:41:08.

Ralph Mulford in a Lozier was second. Forty cars started and ten finished.

Notwithstanding predictions of wholesale disaster in the race only one man was killed and seven injured. The victims were: Killed—S. P. Dickson, mechanician Amplex car No. 44.

Injured—Arthur Greiner, driver, Amplex car No. 44, seriously.

David Lewis, mechanician Lozier car No. 34, leg broken.

Teddy Tetzlaff, driver Lozier car No. 34, bruised and chiken up.

Harry Knight, driver Westcott car No. 7, severely.

John Glover, mechanician Westcott car No. 7, seriously injured.

L. Anderson, mechanician Case car No. 8, thrown out, not serious.

The most spectacular accident of the day was when four cars were wrecked almost directly in front of the grandstand. The only person who was seriously hurt was John Glover, mechanician for Westcott car No. 7, driven by Harry Knight, who also was hurt.

The other cars that were wrecked were Eddie Hearne's Fiat No. 17, Joe Jagersberger Case No. 8, and Lytles Apperson Jack Rabbit No. 25. That seven people were not killed was a mystery to the great crowd in the grandstands.

The prize winners were:

First—Ray Harroun, Marmon.
Second—Mulford, Lozier.
Third—Bruce Brown, Fiat.
Fourth—Wishart, Mercedes.
Fifth—DePalme, Simplex.
Sixth—Wilcox, National.
Seventh—Turner, Amplex.
Eighth—Cobb, Jackson.
Ninth—Belcher, Knox.
Tenth—Hughes, Mercer.

TEN PERISH IN BIG STORM

Seven Caught on Lake Erie Are Drowned—Property Loss in Northwestern Ohio $1,000,000.

Cleveland, O.—Ten dead, many missing, scores of injured and at least $1,000,000 property loss was the toll left by a five-minute storm that ripped and tore through the northern half of Ohio.

Cleveland lay helpless under the fall of a sixty-mile gale that scattered the shipping in the harbor, tore docks away with it in its fury and twisted giant trees from their roots.

Seven were drowned in Lake Erie, off the Cleveland shore, as the storm caught fisherman and perried the trees of a racehorse and other people on the water. Three were drowned at Lorain, while more are missing both there and at Cleveland.

Not one block of this city missed its mark of the wrecking gale. Shore fronts were torn, broken windows splintered on the sidewalks and thousands of trees were snapped.

Wires were tangled in deadly coils in the streets when the police fell in the storm, made many streets paths of peril.

Most of those who were drowned were fishing in small boats on the lake when the storm broke.

TO DRIVE OUT HERESY

PRESBYTERIANS WILL REORGANIZE THEOLOGICAL SEMINARY.

All Instructors Unable to Subscribe to Essential Doctrines of Church Must Go.

New York. — The Presbyterian general assembly, having practically secured control of Union Theological seminary, and not having surrendered in its 50-year fight against heresy, it is now proposed to reorganize that institution.

This is the real meaning of the "Overtures" to the seminary trustees made at the general assembly in Atlantic City last week.

The directors of the seminary have given substantial assurance that they will insist that all instructors in the divinity school shall be free from the taint of heresy. Those who are unable or unwilling to subscribe to the essential doctrines of the Presbyterian church will have to go.

The committee appointed by the assembly will insist that there is no room in the Presbyterian church for those who doubt the Deity of Jesus Christ, his miracles and the Atonement. New York presbytery will come in for its share of the purging in time, it is said on good authority. That the majority of its membership favors this is also said to be true.

Dr. David G. Wylie, one of the New York members of the committee, refused to say that changes in the faculty of the seminary were to be proposed by the committee. He said that it would be unwise to discuss action which might, or might not, be taken by the committee.

CAUCUS ADOPTS WOOL TAX

Proposed Democratic Revision of Tariff Unanimously Approved—Rates Slashed One-Half.

Washington.—The proposed Democratic revision of the wool tariff—the Underwood bill—was unanimously approved by a full Democratic caucus in the house of representatives after a rapid maneuvering by the Democratic house leaders, who devised a scheme which effectively silenced the opposition of the free wool advocates, backed by the open support of William Jennings Bryan.

Chairman Underwood gave the complete text of the proposed revision of the wool tariff to 200 Democrats who assembled in the party caucus. It proposes a duty of 20 per cent on raw wool, a reduction of more than 50 per cent from the Payne-Aldrich law, now in force.

Strange Children.

George Bancroft, the historian, used to relate with gusto a joke that he caught while trotting to school along a Massachusetts country road. It was shout old Levi Lincoln, says Percy H. Epler in "Master Minds at the Commencements' Head."

The old gentlemen was nearly blind. A flock of geese was being driven gabbling up Lincoln street. Leaning far out of the carriage, the one old aristocrat, thinking they were children, threw out a handful of pence, graciously exclaiming:

"God bless you, my children!"

BUSINESS WOMEN
A Lunch Fit for a King.

An active and successful young lady tells her food experience:

"Some years ago I was a victim from nervous prostration, induced by continuous brain strain and improper food, added to a great grief.

"I was ordered to give up my work, as there was great danger of my mind failing me altogether. My stomach was in bad condition (nervous dyspepsia, I think now) and when Grape-Nuts food was recommended to me, I had no faith in it. However, I tried it, and soon there was a marked improvement in my condition.

"I had been troubled with faint spells, and had used a stimulant to relieve me. I found that by eating Grape-Nute at each timee I was relieved and suffered no bad effects, which was a great gain. As to my other troubles—nervous prostration, dyspepsia, etc.—the Grape-Nuts diet has soon disappeared.

"I wish especially to call the attention of office girls to the great benefit I derived from the use of Grape-Nute as a noon luncheon. I was thoroughly tired of cheap restaurants and ordinary lunches, and so made the experiment of taking a package of Grape-Nuts food with me, and then slipping out at noon and getting a nickel's worth of sweet cream to add to it.

"I found this made a delicious dish, finished off with an epple, peach, orange, or a bunch of grapes made a lunch fit for a king, and one that agreed with me perfectly.

"I thrive on my Grape-Nute diet that I did not have to give up my work at all, and in the two years have had only four lost days charged up against me.

"Let me add that your suggestions in the little book, 'Road to Wellville,' are, in my opinion, invaluable, especially to women." Name given by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich.

TORNADO STRIKES; TWO DEAD

AND FIVE INJURED NEAR PINE CITY, MINN.

Two Farm Homes Torn to Pieces by a Funnel-Shaped Cloud on Decoration Day.

Pine City, Minn.—The lowering tail of a tornado struck the township of Pokegama seven and a half miles northwest of Pine City and four miles from Brook Park on the Great northern road Decoration Day. Two farm houses were wrecked and scattered over the ground a distance of forty rods. Two persons were killed and a child fatally injured.

The dead are Mrs. Ole Bergrich and Charles Cottrell. Mr. Cottrell's wife is not expected to survive the day. Four of their children were more or less injured, but all will recover.

Mrs. Bergrich was visiting over the holiday at the home of Charles Holmstrom. When the storm struck she clasped her two babies, one 14 months old and the other 3 months, in her arms. Neither of the babies was hurt.

The mother, when the storm struck the Holmstrom home and tore it to pieces, had shielded the babies with her body and even in her dying agony did not forget the precious charges in her care. That they escaped even then is regarded as miraculous.

Charles Cottrell died several hours later. His skull was crushed and his body horribly cut and bruised. His remains, as well as those of Mrs. Bergrich, were buried in the little cemetery of Brook Park. The tornado only swept a course about four rods wide and soon disappeared in higher altitudes. The only other damage reported was on the farm of Peter Hagen, whose house was moved from its foundations.

All the buildings on the Holmstrom and the Cottrell places were reduced to kindling wood and scattered for rods. The funnel-shaped cloud was plainly visible from Pine City and help was sent from this place at once.

SHORT FARM COURSE TO START.

Indications Point to Banner Attendance at School of Agriculture.

Minneapolis.—Indications at the school of agriculture point to a banner attendance at the short course to farming and allied sciences which will start shortly. The members of the faculty in charge of the summer school work are well satisfied with the promise of interest given by the registrations. The courses are open to anyone on payment of a nominal entrance fee. No examination or previous school attendance is necessary, the idea being to get hold of the man actually engaged in the work of farming and to enable him to bring his methods of tilling the soil, breeding stock and conserving the resources of his farm to the highest standard.

A. D. Wilson and O. M. Olson of the extension department of the school have just returned from a trip through the farming districts of the state and report conditions as being very favorable on a bumper crop, especially in regard to corn. The acreage sown to corn this year in Minnesota is away above the average and all indications at this time point to an immense crop although considerable damage has been done by cut worms. Small grains are in good condition although in the northern tier of counties the need of rain is beginning to be felt. Pastures in some places are too dry for a rapid growth of grass, according to the experts. The seeding operations on the farm will all be about completed this week, the last grain to go in the ground being flax, which is now nearly all in.

Begins Work on Barrows Mine.

Brainerd.—The M. A. Hanna Co. has commenced unloading cars of machinery to be used in its work of sinking the first shaft on its properties leased from the Brainerd Mining company near Barrows. A timbered shaft will be sunk and the shaft proper will measure 10 by 14 feet. It is not known what depth will be attained. Surveyors have been working on lines from Crosby to Barrows and it is believed the Soo line may run an extension to Barrows to tap the rich ore country of the south ranges and the agricultural regions of this part of Crow Wing county.

Mankato Firms to Pave Streets.

Mankato—Mankato contractors have procured contracts for laying nearly one blocks of pavement in the business and residence sections of the city. The North Star Concrete company was the lowest bidder on fifteen blocks of creosoted block and one block of brick pavement. Fowler & Fay were the lowest bidders on five blocks of bitulithic macadam with granite surfacing. The creosoted block pavement went at $2.38 a yard, the brick at $1.95 and the macadam at 82 cents.

PASS ENTRANCE EXAMS.

Minnesota Boys Want to Enter the Navy.

Washington, D. C. — John Joseph Lish, of Faribault, and John Ellsworth Beach, of Hutchinson, have passed the examinations necessary to enter the Annapolis naval academy. Lish, being the principal, will receive the appointment by Representative Davis, but Mr. Davis will write a letter of commendation to Mr. Beach, since both passed with excellent grades.

MILITIA TO ENCAMP.

Annual Gathering at Lakeview Begins June 12.

The First regiment of the Minnesota National guard will leave for Camp Lakeview, for the annual encampment, Sunday, June 12. The train will leave the Milwaukee depot in Minneapolis, at 7:30 a. m., carrying Companies A, B, F, I and M, and the First infantry band. At St. Paul five more companies and the St. Paul Battalion band will board the train, besides Company C, from Stillwater. The St. Paul companies are C, D, E, H, and L. At Red Wing Company G will board the train, completing the First regiment. The two bands will be consolidated, making 50 pieces in all, the largest military band in the Northwest.

Colonel C. M. Reeve will be in command and Major F. B. Rowley, First battalion; Maj. Erie D. Luce, second, and Maj. Oscar Seeback, of Red Wing, third. Lieutenant Colonel Corrigan will assist Colonel Reeve in addition to a large staff of officers.

Maj. A. E. Johnson of the Nineteenth United State infantry has been detailed by the war department at Washington to instruct the regiment during the encampment. Major Luce has been selected to instruct the guard and has offered a prize cup to the company making the best showing.

The new infantry drill regulations which will begin to be in the National Guard of all states Sept. 1, 1911, will be gone detailed to the Twenty-eighth United States infantry at San Antonio, Tex., over during the encampment. Capt. A. K. Schall and Major Luce, who both had the opportunity to become familiar with the regulations while detailed to the Twenty-eighth United had recently, probably will be detailed to instruction work.

Many improvements have been made on the camp ground this spring. The enlisted men's club building, the officers' club and the hospital have been rescreened and the mess halls repaired. Capt. C. Smith, former regimental quartermaster, has resigned that position and Capt. Arthur J. Stobbard of Company L, St. Paul, has been elected to fill the vacancy. Capt. Stobbard will be succeeded by First Lieutenant Clifton Smith, who will be succeeded by Second Lieut. Carl West, whose place is to be taken by First Sergeant Graves. The range at Camp Lakeview has been properly fixed up and some prize shooting is expected. The usual team shoot trophy will be awarded to the company making the best team. Prize cups will also be awarded for sanitation, attendance and best noncommissioned officers, besides several by Colonel Reeve.

WORK ON SHAFT NEAR BARROWS.

Soo Line May Build Extension to Tap South Ranges.

Brainerd.—M. A. Hanna & Co. have commenced unloading machinery to be used in sinking the first shaft on the properties leased from the Brainerd Mining company near Barrows. A timbered shaft 10x14 feet will be sunk.

Surveyors have been working on railroad lines from Crosby to Barrows and the Soo line may run an extension to tap the rich ore country of the south ranges and the agricultural regions of this part of Crow Wing county. Robert McMenemy of St. Paul, a Soo contractor who is maintaining a railway camp near Ironton, admitted there was to be some railway work done this year on the range, but refused to divulge where it was to be.

DENTIST IS BOUND OVER.

Preston Man Held in $1,000 Bail for Attempted Shooting.

Preston—Dr. Claude Kremer, a dentist, who is charged with having attempted to shoot Dr. J. H. Phillips, was arraigned and bound over to the grand jury under bail of $1,000, which he was unable to secure, and Kremer was lodged in jail.

Kremer went to Dr. Phillips' office and not finding the doctor present waited until his return. Later he was about to shoot Dr. Phillips when restrained by his son, who knocked the revolver from his hand in time to prevent a discharge of the weapon. Domestic trouble in the Kremer family is said to have been the cause of the dentist's action.

RATINGS OF NAVAL GRADUATES.

Minnesota Boy is Fifth in List of "Stars" With 884.83 Average.

Annapolis, Maryland — The ratings of the seven "star" members of the graduation class at the naval academy for their four years' course was announced as follows:

F. B. Hatch, New Hampshire, 706.16; H. S. Rosenau, South Carolina, 697.81; W. W. Webster, North Dakota, 691.38; H. S. Bullard, Wisconsin, 691.05; O. G. Hagen, Minnesota, 684.68; R. M. Griffen, Virginia, 683.29; R. H. Bolton, Wisconsin, 681.96.

STATE SELLS MUCH LAND.

Hallock and Warren Sales Total 11,500 Acres at $7.50 Per Acre.

Crookston.—According to S. G. Iverson 3,200 acres of state school land were sold at Hallock, Minn., and 8,300 acres were sold later at Warren at a price which will average $7.50 per acre on the total sales.

Land seekers from many states were at the sales and stimulated the bidding. The land selling tour this spring has been one of the most successful ever held by the state.

CHARGES AGAINST WHITTIER

GOVERNOR'S SECRETARY FILES THE COMPLAINT.

Boys' School Head Declared Incompetent and Guilty of Misconduct.

St. Paul. — A formal complaint against Frank A. Whittier, superintendent of the state training school at Red Wing, was filed with the state board of control. The complaint charges Mr. Whittier with incompetency and asks for his removal. It was signed by Ralph W. Wheelock, private secretary to Governor Eberhart.

The new complaint includes a charge against Mr. Whittier relative to his treatment of the girls during the time the training school for girls was under the control of the superintendent. Concerning the girls' school, the complaint charges against Superintendent Whittier:

Specific Charges Made.

"That during all said time, unlawfully and without authority, he has inflicted, caused to be inflicted and permitted to be inflicted by his assistants and employes upon inmates of said training schools for girls brutal, cruel and unusual punishment in like manner and with a similar implement as it is herein before stated the same was inflicted upon inmates of the school for boys and with like effect upon the bodies and flesh of such girls, and otherwise maltreated girls while inmates of said institution and caused and permitted the same to be done."

The complaint includes the matter brought out during the legislative investigation, giving details of the whipping machine used at the school. It charges that Superintendent Whittier is incompetent to perform the duties of the chief executive officer of the institution and that he is now guilty of misconduct as such officer and has neglected his official duty.

The complaint cites a number of individuals who were subjected to the whipping treatment. It also charges that inmates have been assaulted and hung up at the institution, among these being Patrick Larkin, Loren Van Buskirk, Oliver De Patti and others; also, that Mr. Whittier has not kept any record of the discharge of assistants and employes, as required to do by the statutes.

The complaint calls attention to the fact that Ernest F. Mastnold, Arthur Stopleman, Arthur C. Dodd, and W. C. Stuemeling or Stemmi have been employed by Mr. Whittier as assistants and have not been discharged. It states, giving specific instances, that these assistants have assaulted and beaten certain boys in the institution.

It is expected that an effort will be made by stipulation to introduce the shorthand notes of the legislative investigation as testimony before the board in order to lessen the expense to the state of hearing.

PLAN TO ABOLISH ROAD IS HIT.

Likely Minn. and North Wisconsin Will Net Go Out of Existence.

Duluth — The hearing of the petition of the Minnesota and North Wisconsin road, to abandon the line running 55 miles northeast from Scanlon, was concluded and o date for argument set. About 100 people, half of them settlers along the road, attended. Dr. Dwight F. Brooks, of St. Paul, says that the road was the investment of $350,000 and is now worth about $100,000. There are 2,000 people tributary to the road and 6,000 acres of land cleared. N. J. Upham, of Duluth, testified that he represents a syndicate that is willing to lease the property and build a spur direct to Duluth.

It is quite certain the road will not go out of existence. The settlers testified that the road would have had many times greater patronage if it had offered "real service."

MANY TAX CASES ARE BEGUN.

State Seeks to Recover by Suit from 35 Delinquents.

St. Paul—During the last two weeks 35 cases to collect money due the state have been started by Attorney General Simpson. Most of these are for the collection of the tax due to the state from cities and villages on liquor licenses. The most important of these was the collection of the 2 per cent tax from the city of Minneapolis.

About 50 answers have been filed in land suits in northern Minnesota, which C. L. Hilton, assistant attorney general, has been conducting. The entire force of the attorney general's office worked during the entire Memorial day in order to finish work which Mr. Simpson wishes completed before he left for the Pacific coast to take up positions in the Brooks-Scanlon timber cases.

HAMLINE STUDENTS DROWN.

Fred Kingsland and Louis Kemmer Victims of Capsized Canoe.

Minneapolis. — Through the capsizing of a canoe in which they were taking a pleasure trip, Fred Kingsland, 23, son of Mrs. Gertrude Kingsland, dean of women at Hamline university, and Louis Kemmer, of Long Prairie, Minn., both students at the midway school, were drowned in the Minnesota river about six miles above Fort Snelling.

Ribbon Designs

We seem to be developing more and more a fancy for flower forms made of ribbon, for all occasions where ribbon is an accessory of decoration. We may have borrowed the original idea from the French, but America boasts the most original and prolific designer of ribbon garnitures. Ora Lue, of New York, has recently discovered for the hostesses off that opulent city, a new world in the possibilities of ribbons and for decorative purposes. Dinner tables and drawing rooms of the coming season promise to blossom with unfading flower forms that charm both by their beauty and ingenuity. These forms, used in conjunction with asparagus ferns, smilax and other trailing foliage, make the hostess think twice, when choosing decorations for any social function. The same ribbon serves for many occasions and forms and it is sold even its color may be changed.

Four designs are given here to be used at a June wedding where the color scheme is white and green. The rosette, made of white measaline, is shown mounted with smilax and asparagus fern. The effect is delightful. Narrow ribbons are used as well as wide ones and innumerable graceful forms seem to lie asleep in the brain of this ingenious man. Let a whisper reach them that they are needed and they rush to his fingertips. Many professional women, milliners and others, are taking up this work of ribbon for decoration and find a very low profitable accomplishment for them. Ribbons will not supplant natural flowers entirely, but they will bring about a new order of things. Fewer blossoms will be used and greater effectiveness given to those that so appear.

We shall be spared the little hurt that lurks in the drooping fading flower because those that are used will be placed in vases while ribbons and foliage will make a marvelous background for them.

JULIA BOTTOMLEY.

GOOD IDEAS IN ETON SUIT

In Heavy Blue Serge, Costume for Young Girl Called Forth Much Admiration.

Such a pretty little Eton suit for a young girl was seen the other day. It was a heavy blue serge, in the dark regulation shade.

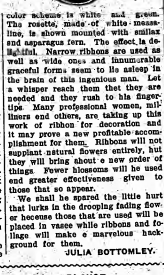
The skirt was made quite plain, coming slightly higher than the normal waist line to give the continuous line so becoming to the feminine figure.

It was the little jacket, however, which was novel and unusual. It had a deep sailor collar in back, in pointed revere in the front.

It was of natural colored pongee, edged first with a paint line of brilliant corel silk and below that with a wide black silk braid.

Two huge buttons fastened it at the side, while the sleeves long ones were finished with turn-back cuffs which carried out the same trimming idea expressed on the collar.

Tiniest Pearls Liked.



Ropes of pearls with tasseled ends were much seen a few seasons ago, but it was thought the fashion would be fleeting. It has, however, proved permanent so far, and has brought along with it the revival of an old plan for making use of the tiniest pearls. There is a fashionable demand for threaded pearl bracelets and other jewelry of strung pearls, decorative the fashion in which children thread beads. The effect is light and graceful and the ornaments are popular among young women. Annie Douglas Graham, fiancee of Jay Gould, has many of the trinkets in her wedding outfit for the hair, throat, wrist and corsage.

Immense Wrist Bags.

New wrist bags of black velvet carried at Nice, by smart women are of an immense size—really larger than anything of the sort ever seen before. Walking, they would seem a real burden; sitting in one's carriage, laid on the lap, they are highly ornamental and are mounted with velvet-covered fittings, they are suspended from a chain of fine cut steel; so slender, it seems quite inadequate to their size; cut steel is woven into the velvet in a deep border and old Gothic designs, trimming both sides alike.—Vogue.

Starching Linens.

For linen articles, table linen, dresser scarfs, or sheer linen waists add a tablespoonful of starch to two gallons water, and they will iron with a stiffness like new; remember always to iron linen on wrong side first. Wash starch vessel in hot suds, never cold water; use pieces old underwear with a few buttons on to save finger nails from bruises.

BLOUSE.

A dressy little blouse is this, that might be made in any soft material. Lace is used for the yoke, edged with a band of silk, to which the material is gathered, two tucks are taken over each shoulder. The sleeves are small puffs set to lace cuffs, headed by bands of silk.

Materials required: 1¾ yard 42 inches wide, ¼ yard silk 22 inches wide, ¾ yard lace, ½ dozen buttons.

Practical Novelties.

A most convenient collar box covered with cretonne is of octagonal shape and has a groove in a little inside flap for holding the silvery stiffening. Paris points and waits in white. These goods are an old novelty revived and are selling to some extent.

Silk gloves are beginning to occupy a prominent place in the fashions, the demand for silks opening up much earlier than usual. As with the leather goods, black and white form the bulk of the silk glove sales.

THREE CURED OF ECZEMA

"When a child, I suffered eight years with eczema. I could not sleep at night, and had sores all over my chest. We had doctors and none could do any good, until my mother saw the advertisement of the Cuticura Remedies in the paper. We used the Cuticura Soap, Ointment and Resolvent, and they cured me of eczema. I also used them on my five children. Two of them had eczema very badly. When my children had eczema, I was not worried at all, as I knew the Cuticura Remedies would do their work. They had sores all over their heads, their hair would fall out, and they would scratch all night and day. They had it on their heads, face, and in back of the ears so that I thought their ears would drop off. I washed their heads and bodies with Cuticura Soap and there are as clean as the driven snow. Cuticura Soap and Ointment also cured my children of ringworm. I would not be without the Cuticura Remedies. They are wonderful." (Signed) Mrs. Violet Cole, 26 B. Redfield St., Philadelphia, Pa., Oct. 29, 1910.

Cuticura Soap and Ointment are sold throughout the world. Send to Potter Drug & Chem. Corp., sole props., Boston, for free book on skin and scalp diseases and their treatment.

THE SUNBEAM.

BY W. G. HUNT.

Published every Friday, at Sunbeam, Pennington County, Minnesota.

Subscription price $1.00 per year in advance. If not paid in advance $1.50

Entered as Second-class matter August 30 1906, at the post office at Sunbeam Minn. under the Act of Congress of March 3, 1879

England has waited patiently since the war of 1812, for this country to elect a Taft president.

J. Adam Bead ex- Congressman from the 6th, district is in favor of Microproctty, but he is ant in Congress anymore, and he should reserve a position for Taft on the "Budget," for he will be out of a job, as soon as the people get a chance to vote.

Grover Cleveland dug a grave so deep for democracy that it took them several years to dig out, but if Taft gets that Reciprocity bill passed he can say "I buried the Republican party two feet deeper than Cleveland did the democrats."

The government seeds that was sent out this spring will not encourage gardening to any great extent, as it is not pleasent to put in a lot of time planting a garden only to find out that the seed was worthless. We suppose it was a lot of old seeds that had been laying around some seed houses for fifty years that was expected to grow, but to satisfy a political pull. That garden seed business is nothing but a damage to the people, and the sooner it is abolished the better it will be for those that it was intended to benefit.

Our Congressman o. k.

Congressman Steenerron made a powerful argument in congress April 20th, against the Canada treaty. As usal he gave the facts straight from the shoulder in such plain language that they could not deny it. In speaking of the removel of the tariff on hides Mr. Steenerson said. "We have had experience on the point that it is not every revison downward that benefits the people. Did free hides lower the price of shoes? No not at all. What did it do? It lowerd the farm price of hides all over the country, and every farmer in the laud can tell you so. What else did it do? It deprived the United States treasury of two or three million dollars a year it had therefore collected on imported cattle hides and turned it into the pockets of the shoe and leather trust, just exactly as this reciprocity arrangement will first reduce the farm price of all the farmer produces and deprive the Treasurey of the five or six million dollars a year heretofore received from duties on Canadian imports and turn it all over to the combinations and trusts in this Country."

All our Congressmen and Senators from Minnesota are making a fight against the treaty that will make them famous, but it is a hard proposition to go up against the trusts in this country and the gould of Great Britey. But we will have a vote comming next year and will show them whether the farmers of America will not hoist that treaty and all who favor it out of business.

Pyramid of the Sun.

The most colossal structure of prehistoric man in America, known as the pyramid of the sun, is at Teotihuacan, Mexico, not far from the capital. Close to the great pyramid stands the pyramid of the moon, which the builders regarded as the wife of the sun, and surrounding these are nearly 200 mounds of greater or lesser magnitude, which tradition says were crowned by temples and public buildings. Four hundred and sixty-eight steps lead to the summit of the pyramid of the sun, which is 216 feet high. It is 721 feet square at the base, and the summit is 59 by 205 feet.—National Geographic Magazine.

Wm. Bruckman was transacting business here Monday.

The wild strawberries will be a heavy crop this year.

Crookston and Fosston will will celebrate July Fourth.

The heavy rain Wednesday night put a stop to breaking for a few days.

A few dollars invested in tame grass seed is money well spent. Plenty of seed at Vaughn Bros.

WANTED- From 50 to 70 acres of breaking done. Good land to break. Wm. Buckman, sec. 11, town of Deer Park, Roland p. o.

County surveyor C. H. Maritz is up near Hilda estimating the the road work done on the grades made by the county ditches.

Rolv Hofstad, Ole O. Legvold, and Gunder O. Hofstad came up from Radell Wednesday to make application to make final proof on their homesteads.

The heavy rain Wednesday night will make the roads bad, but it will open navigation on the river, so the merchants can get goods up from Thief River by boat.

We understand that Swanson would undoubtly have noticed the error in the publication of his final proof notice, but just as he started to read it, someone called; dinner.

The Ladies Aid Society of the Town of Mayfield, will have an auction sale, and free dinner, in the grove of Ole Reiersgaard, on section 22 town of Mayfield, on Saturday June 24th. All are invited. All are welcome.

$27, insurance against a loss of five hundred dollars by hail. Of course we don't want to advise you to pay out money for hail insurance, but if you should happen to loose your crop by hail five hundred would come handy.

There had ought to be plenty of water to start the floating dredges now, but make it is to wet now. There seems to be a lion in the way with about all the timber men in this part of the country, that is likely to get a poke with a sharp stick.

We received word from Superintendent Mostue last night that our school reports were o. k., so our school district will draw the special state aid for eight months the school, so they will not be much out for the difference between five and eight months school. and the country school boys and girls reap the benefit.

We have the agency of the State Farmer Mutual Hail Insurance Co. of Wasseca, and will insure crops against loss by hail at the rate of $5, a hundred, or to make it plain we bet you one hundred dollars to five dollars, that there will not be any hail. Call and see us, as it safer to let a rich company share your risk.

On Wednesday night we had good old fashioned heavy rain storm something like we used to have before last years dry season. It filled the shallow wells and some cellers with water, and raised the Red Lake River three feet, so the boats can start. We have had plenty of rain for the crops this spring, but this is the first one to soak the ground up since the drouth of last summer.

Mr. and Mrs. G. W. Hooper, from St Hilaire and Miss Esther Johnson from Red Lake Falls drove up last Friday to visit Miss Mildred Hooper and attend her school picnic Saturday. Miss Johnson formerly taught school here, and received a warm welcome from her former scholars. She is attending the State Normal, at St. Cloud and will graduate next year.

"SANGERFEST"

The Red River Vally Scandinavian Singers Association, will give their Second Biennial "Sangerfest," at the Auditorium, Thief River Falls June 23, 4, and 5th. A grand Chorus of two hundred voices, composed of Singers, of Fargo, Moorhead, Grand Forks, Fergus Falls, Crookston, Devils Lake, Warren, Thief River Falls, and other cities. Five Prominent Soloists, including the Famous Tenor Rolf Hommer, of Chicago, and Professor J. Shefstad, Violinist.

What About Ditches?

Hello There! You Powers That Be! Was it the intention to get just far enough with them county ditches, so the farmers could get bonded for taxes? Have you let them contracts and taken STRAW bonds? Or did you give the contractors until the day of judgement, and as that will be a busy day, until the day after to dig them ditches? Are you farmer County Commissioners representing the interests of the farmers, who must pay these ditch taxes, to allow some ditch contractor to set an old ditching rig at the head of a ditch, and let it set there by the season? If one contractor can't dig the ditch, move him out and get one that can. If you have a contract, and bonds for duging them ditches, use them like men, and not be fooling around with them ditch contractors like a pack of "kids." Represent the farmers, who pay the taxes, and not a gang of outside ditch contractors comming in here making contracts to dig ditches to get room to store old machinery on.

ROLAND LOCALS.

Miss Signe Gunderson is helping Mrs. John Raducelci do her spring house cleaning.

In the good old summer time I go strolling down to that ball game with that girlof mine. Say; why not have some seats near the ball ground, so people can sit down who are not playing?

Mrs. A. Rolandsen spent Sunday with Mrs. Otto Dahl.

Stener Brakke is in the employ of Con Short.

Annichell Rolandson is staying with Mr. and Mrs. John Peterson this week.

There is plenty of water standing around in puddels now, and it looks rather natural.

There will be some June weddings. Guess who the happy couple will be.

Mr. Sorenson, representing the J. I. Case threshing machine company was out to Roland Wednesday Mr Rice was with him and they stopped overnight at the Clearwater camp.

Form Yourself to Be Well.

"Plant your feet firmly and squarely on the ground, throw back your shoulders, hold your arms and chest in most emphatic terms that you are strong, healthy and well. Do this for a few minutes every evening, and, even if this is not how you actually feel, maintain by your physical and mental attitude that it is your condition, and you will soon find that it becomes so and that you are not really telling lies." This was the advice given by Dr. J. Stenson Hooker in a lecture on "Posturing and Posing For Health" at the Steinway Hall conference and exhibition in London. "It is wonderful to what extent our state of health can be altered in this way," Dr. Hooker added. "It stirs up the currents of feeling which act on the nerves. These act on the blood vessels, and thus the whole system is improved, and we become different beings."

He Was Well Off.

If Clay Calhoun, testifying in an assault case, spoke of one Washington White as "well off."

"How, Squire," said the cross-examining lawyer, "when you declare White to be well off, what do you mean? Is he worth $10,000?"

"No, sah." Oh, no, sah," said Calhoun.

"Is he worth $5,000?"

"No, sah." Mah, gracious, no!"

"Is he worth $1,000?"

"No, sah; he ain't worf 17 cents."

"How then is he well off?"

"Reason sah, his wife am an A No. 1 washlady and keeps de hull family in plenty grub."—Harper's.

WESTERN CANADA BEYOND THE PIONEER STAGE

Liberty-Loving People Have All the Liberty the Heart Can Desire ... Under Canadian Laws.

The New York Commercial of April 19th contained an interesting article on conditions in Western Canada. The following extracts will prove instructive reading to those who contemplate moving to Canada. The writer speaks of land at $8 to $18 an acre. As a matter of fact, there is very little land that can be had now at less than $18 per acre, but when one considers the productive qualities of this land it is safe to say that in two years' time there will be little available land to be had at less than $50 an acre. Already the free grant lands in the open prairie districts are becoming exhausted and the homesteader has to go farther back to the partially wooded areas. This is no drawback, however. Some prefer land in the open prairie. A recent publication, issued by the Department of the Interior, Ottawa, Canada, and which is forwarded free to applicants by mail by any of the Canadian government agents throughout the United States, says of the newly-opened districts:

Water is always abundant, wood and fuel are plentiful and the soil that caso grow the poplar and the willow as well as the rich grasses that are to be found there can be relied upon to produce all the small varieties of grain with equal success. The New York Commercial article referred to deals more particularly with conditions along the line of the Grand Trunk Pacific, but what is said of one line of railway may with truth be said of the land the conditions along both the Canadian Northern and the Canadian Pacific. The article says:

"It would be no exaggeration to say that practically all the land along the entire distance traversed by the Grand Trunk Pacific system is capable of furnishing homes to those who accept in farming. The lands are of three classes. They may be designated, first, as having special adaptation to the production of grain; second, as having such adaptation to mixed farming, of which live stock will form an important feature, and third, as being mainly adapted to the production of live stock only. Over the third class of lands the area is not very large, of the second it is much larger and of the first it is by far the largest.

"As soon as mixed farming shall be generally adopted, land that may now be obtained for from $8 to $18 per acre, and even lands open now to free homesteads, will sell for $50 to $100 per acre. This is not an extravagant statement. In natural fertility these lands fully equal those of the American corn belt. In variety of production they excel them, and, yet the latter sell for $100 to $200 per acre. In addition to the grain crops now grown, of wheat, oats, barley and rye, much of the land will grow winter wheat when properly prepared. Eighty per cent of the land will grow clover and alfalfa. A still larger percentage will grow field peas, and the timothy lands will also grow good crops of the cultivated grasses, timothy, brome grass and western rye grass. Experiments what can prevent this region from becoming the main source of food supply of the Empire and Imperial dominions?"

Special stress is laid upon the educational conditions. The writer says:

"The foundation of the social fabric of the agricultural country may be said to rest on the efficiency of the school system. Liberty-loving people have all the liberty the heart can desire under Canadian laws. In this regard Western Canada has a system of education based upon the best that can be obtained from the United States or Eastern Canada. Its school system and regulations are second to none. Every boy or girl of a school house brought to his or her doorway. The government is most liberal in its support of higher education. In Winnipeg, Saskatoon and Edmonton are to be found excellent colleges and universities, so that the problem of higher education is solved. The provincial agricultural schools, located at Winnipeg, Saskatoon, give practical courses in scientific farming, preparing graduates to take up the responsibilities of farm life.

"The newcomer settling in this favored section will find the social conditions far from primitive. Everywhere, He will find helps on every hand. Instead of his going to the 'jumping-off place,' as is often supposed when thinking of Western Canada, he will find himself surrounded by wonderful opportunities for social advancement in a new country fraught with promise."

But few novels are written for thinking people; most of them are written for the entertainment of women.

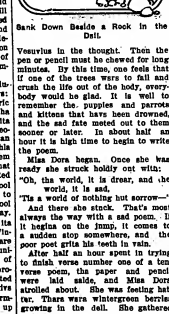
TWO POETS

BY DONALD ALLEN

(Copyright, 1911, by Associated Literary Press.)

Miss Dora Harlan was out of sorts with the world. When a girl feels that way she sheds a few tears; she feels herself neglected; she thinks of drowning; she snaps back at the family cook; she would poison the family parrot—if the family had one. There is but one thing to console her, and that is to make for a dell in the woods and write some sad poetry.



Fortunately for Miss Dora, there was a bit of woods back of the manor house. There was a dell. The afternoon was fine, and she took pencil and paper along—enough to write a dozen sad poems.

Miss Dora was not in love, sad a stern father and an ambitious mother had not been filling objections. None of her girl friends had been crowing over her. She hadn't discovered a freckle on her face or a mole on her elbow. She was sad because she was sad. There are times when seven men and women 80 years old get sad streaks on and turn to poetry as the panacea. Poetry is an escape valve. There are hundreds of persons in prison who wouldn't have been there had they been provided with a dell and pencil and paper.

Miss Dora sank down beside a rock in the dell with a sigh of relief. She could shed the silent tear now without the perior maid respectfully and sympathetically asking her if she had got pepper in her eyes. There are perior maids and others who will not understand when souls are a-weary.

A rabbit ran across the dell, and was scarcely observed. A squirrel chattered, and was voted a nuisance. A quail sounded his "Bob White," and a stick was thrown at him.

There was a program to go through with to write a sad poem. Pencil and paper must be made ready, and then all the sad things of life must be called to mind. One may even include the various eruptions of Sank Down Beside a Rock in the Dell.

Vesuvius in the thought. Then the pen or pencil must be chewed for long minutes. By this time, one feels that if one of the trees were to fall and crush the life out of the body, everybody would be glad. It is well to remember the puppies and parrots and kittens that have been drowned, and there can be no end to them sooner or later. In about half an hour it is high time to begin to write the poem.

Miss Dora began. Once she was ready she struck boldly out with:

"Oh, the world, it is drear, and the world, it is sad,
'Tis a world of nothing but sorrow—"

And there she stuck. That's most always the way with a sad poem. If it begins on the jump, it comes to a sudden stop somewhere, and the poor poet grits his teeth in vain.

After half an hour spent in trying to finish verse number one of a ten-verse poem, the paper and pencil were laid aside, and Miss Dora strolled about. She was feeling better. There were wintergreen berries growing in the dell. She gathered and ate some.

Then she went down to the creek to watch the little fish, and finally went back to the house feeling a great deal better. Not until evening did she remember the two lines of poetry left on a flat stone in the dell. She would recover them next day. Perhaps she would build on—perhaps not.

Something took place up in that dell within an hour after Miss Dora left it, and she was in ignorance of it until the next afternoon. She strolled that way again, humming to herself instead of sighing, and when she picked up her two lines of poetry—behold! In a neat, but masculine hand some one had added the two lines:

"And it fills me with grief and makes me so mad
That I'll hie me for home on the morrow."

Was it a masculine hand? Had she finished the verse without realizing it? Had she written that she was mad when she was only sad? Here was a mystery. The girl looked all around, but Sherlock Holmes was not there. She sat down and thought, and stood up and cogitated, but it was a quarter of an hour before any bright thought came. Then she sat down and wrote two more lines:

"Tis a struggle to live—'tis easy to die—
A sigh and a gasp, and 'tis over."

Then she laid the paper down and weighted it with a pebble, and laid the pencil across. If a ghost had come after her the day before and written those additional lines, she wanted to make sure of it. If it was a man, then he had trespassed on private grounds and done an impudent thing, and she would lay a trap and catch him and tell him what she thought of him.

Just the minute she had bolted her noonday lunch the next day, Miss Dora set off for the dell. She was two hours ahead of time. She approached the spot on tiptoes. No one there! She sat down behind a bush to wait and watch. Half an hour passed, and then—ha! A young man appeared on the scene. He is trim of figure and rather good-looking, but a smile like a villain. He advances to the stone and picks up the paper and reads and chuckles. Then he sits down and adds two lines to complete verse number two! "And how yourself up come forty rods high,
And land in the thistles and clover."

He replaces the paper on the stone, smiles and chuckles, and is about to take his departure when he feels the presence of a grizzly bear or tiger—or a good-looking girl—near him, and turns.

For a moment he and Miss Dora look into each other's eyes. Then she steps forward and picks up the sheet and reads what he has written, and turns on him with:

"Sir, how dare you do such a thing!"

"I—I—beg your—your pardon."

"But you are a trespasser here."

"I—I didn't know it."

"And you are impudent, sir—very impudent!"

"I didn't mean to be, you know, Miss—Miss—"

"Don't say you didn't know. You know you were adding those lines. You didn't you! Impudent? Why, it's far worse. I don't know how you can excuse yourself."

"The only excuse I have is that I'm also a poet."

"It's same out here to write a poem on grief," said Miss Dora, as she stepped back a pace, "and you come along and make fun of it."

"But I didn't think I did so very badly," he defended, as he reached for the sheet in her hand. "Let me read the verses aloud and see if the rhymes and the sentiment are not maintained."

In a well toned voice he started out and finished the first verse, but before he could begin the second the girl stopped him with the ingenuous query:

"Do you really and truly think that is poetry?"

"No, I really and truly don't," he laughed.

"I was and when I wrote my part."

"And I was in a hurry to get away when I wrote mine. I think you are Miss Herbon. I am Mr. Arthur Weyne. The family lives on the hill a mile away, and I have been traveling and just got home. As for poetry—"

"Yes?"

"I think we are both poets, but we can't write poetry!"

But they both proved to be good talkers, which is the next best thing, and young Mr. Weyne called, and they talked and talked, and the more they talked the more interested they became, and at the present juncture they are happily looking forward to a trip that may extend around the world before they settle down.

Clarke Griffith Fancies Laporte.

Clarke Griffith of the Cincinnati Reds was inclined to get sarcastic about his park players, those same Browns, at Hot Springs, but he did loosen up enough to pay a compliment to Austin and Laporte.

"They are singing the praises of Jimmy Austin, the third baseman, who went to St. Louis with Laporte," says Griff. "That's all right. Austin is a nice player, and I look for him to help Wallace a great deal.

"But don't overlook this Laporte fellow. He's a great player and a great hitter. He's going to win a whole lot of ball games for the Browns. I had him several years and know what he can do."

Motor Cycle Circuit.

The Federation of American Motorcyclists has launched a proposition for a national racing circuit for motorcycles. Riders are enthusiastic in favor of the plan, and hope that it means a revival of interest which will make motorcycle racing as popular as horse racing was during the period of the L. A. W.'s greatest activity.

FARM AND ROAD IMPROVEMENT

HOW TO MAKE DRIVEWAY

Telford's Method Was to Use Large Stones for Foundation With Smaller Ones on Top.

Fig. 1—What MacAdam Advocated.

is not macadamising at all, but "telfordising," for what is commonly thought to be a macadam road is built after the method advocated by Telford, save the Country Gentleman. MacAdam advocated the use of stones of uniform size all the way through the roadway (see Fig. 1), while Telford advocated the use of larger stones at the bottom of the roadbed with smaller ones on top of the foundation, still smaller ones above that and finally pulverized stone, or breaker dust, as a top dressing (see Fig. 2), and it is this Telford practice that is usually followed in constructing what are commonly called macadam roads.

Now to build a good driveway one must begin with a dry, hard bed on which to lay the foundation. Should the ground be marshy or damp, some means of drainage must be installed and a solid, dry subgrade established. Having secured a proper sub-grade, the next step is to select proper materials for the foundation course. The stone used must be a hard stone that will break angularly and not have rounded edges. The best for the purpose has been found to be what is commonly called trap rock. This trap rock is very hard and tough and breaks angularly. Such a stone begins in tightly between its neighbors, and if properly wedged will not work loose. A round stone would be of no use. A round stone will rock like a cradle if pressure is brought to bear on either end and this will soon disintegrate the driveway. Rocking stones will also occur if any soft material is used in building up the driveway. For the best results, and this is following Macadam's teachings, stones of about one-half the size should be used all the way from the foundation to the bed. These should be put down in layers and each layer rolled with a light roller. No sand, breaker dust or soft material whatever should be used in building up the driveway.

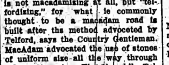

Fig. 2—Telford's Idea.

In the rolling, one of the most serious mistakes in roadway building is usually made. To get a good driveway made quickly a heavy roller is need and, apparently, this method produces a good driveway for the appearance only are considered. But it is penny wise and pound foolish. Light rolling, as a general rule, is the best practice of the time than heavy rolling and therefore those who are having driveways built should insist upon the light roller of the heavy roller. No greater mistake could be made. No matter how well a driveway has been built, a heavy roller is almost sure to crush the stone and spoil it, thus nullifying the benefit of any good practice that may have been followed up to this stage. Light rolling, on the other hand, will gradually pack the whole mass into a solid concrete structure with each stone set wedged in so he practically immune against displacement.

Pleplant Easy to Grow.

Pleplant is easily produced in a commercial way, yields immensely, is easily propagated and put into shape for the market. It can be shipped almost any distance. Then, as a rule, early in the season the market makes it one of the two best vegetables for commercial use. Pleplant is usually set in rows four feet and two and one-half feet in the rows. Like asparagus, it should be carefully tended and heavily manured. It should be fertilized every winter. The pleplant should be pulled for the market for the first year, no matter how healthy and vigorous it may seem. After the first year it may be pulled for the market at any time as soon as frost is gone.

Pumpkins for Fattening.

Pumpkins will soon be close rivals of silage crops as a ration for fattening purposes. They contain a large amount of protein and albumen and a fair amount of ash and potash. Their composition is so well balanced in comparison with other foods for young animals, that strength is imparted by the ash and potash to the bones of the stock, and the protein builds the flesh. Eighty per cent of the mature pumpkin can be utilized for feeding purposes.

USE CARE WITH FERTILIZERS

Excellent Method Given for Utilizing Two Familiar Farm Products—Apply Separately.

Both wood ashes and hen manure are farm products, and one applies what the other lacks. The ashes contain potash, phosphoric acid and lime, while the hen manure is strong in nitrogen. It is the worst practice, however, to mix the two together before using. The lime in the ashes will act to set the ammonia in the hen manure free. If this is done before the mixture is put in the soil the ammonia will be lost.

If, on the other hand, the hen manure is worked into the ground several inches deep, and then the wood ashes spread and raked or harrowed in there will be no loss. The lime will still act to set the ammonia free, but, being in the soil, it will be safely held there for the crops. Thus the way to use hen manure and ashes is to apply them separately and work both into the soil.

Endive Not Hard to Grow.

Endive may be sown early in cold frames or in the open ground the let tuce. Sowings may also be made at a later date in summer, although plants grown in the heat of midsummer here not the best quality. Fall sowings may be taken up with a good supply of adhering earth and stored in a dry cellar for winter use. There are several distinct varieties of endive, those having smooth leaves being the larger and coarser. The finely cut and curled varieties and more particularly those with naturally whitened hearts are most attractive and usually most tender.

Market Hogs Much Lighter.

The average weight of hogs marketed in recent years is much lighter then in former years; in the decade 1870-1879 the average weight of hogs killed during the winter months in western packing centers was about 275 pounds; in the decade 1880-1889 about 257 pounds; in the decade 1890-1899 about 239 pounds, and in the past decade 1900-1909 about 219 pounds. In other words, hogs marketed between 30 and 40 years ago averaged one-fourth heavier than those marketed in recent years.

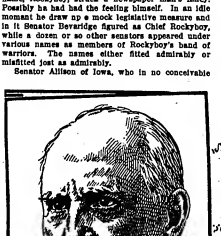
JOKE STARTS LEGISLATIVE WHEELS

By EDWARD B. CLARK

A WHIMSICAL bit of humor for which a Washington correspondent once was responsible had the result of setting some of the senators talking and had the further result of securing legislative action in the interest of humanity.



It was Senator Beveridge of Indiana who took the initiative in the matter of the passing of a bill which brought joy to Chief Rockyboy and his band of Shoshone Indians. Rockyboy and his reds needed the nation's help badly, and between the humorously inclined newspaper correspondent, the Hoosier senator and half a dozen of his colleagues it came to them at a time when years of disappointment had rendered them pretty nearly hopeless.

If Rockyboy hadn't been so poverty stricken he doubtless would have worn the leggings, the beaded moccasin, the antelope shirt and the eagle feather war bonnet of chieftainship to newspaper man and senator as a mark of thankfulness for services rendered.

Rockyboy and his following of warriors and women and children had been wandering through Montana for years and never had been able to get a home. For some reason which history declareth not, Rockyboy and his people were spurned alike by reds and whites. When the hunting and fishing were poor Rockyboy's bands came to the edge of starvation.

Bill after bill had been introduced into congress to give relief to these roving reds, but no bill ever came within sight of the passing stage. Finally the name, Rockyboy, struck a newspaper man's fancy. Possibly he had had the feeling himself. In an idle moment he drew up a mock legislative measure and in it Senator Beveridge figured as Chief Rockyboy, while a dozen or so other senators appeared under various names as members of Rockyboy's band of warriors. The names either fitted admirably or misfitted just as admirably.

Senator Allison of Iowa, who is no conceivable circumstances would commit himself by word of mouth, appeared as Chief Talks-Too-Much. Senator Aldrich of Rhode Island, who, for reasons which may be perfectly apparent to everybody that knows anything about him, was called in the newspaper man's Rockyboy relief measure Chief Smooth-Medicine.

SEN. NELSON ALDRICH

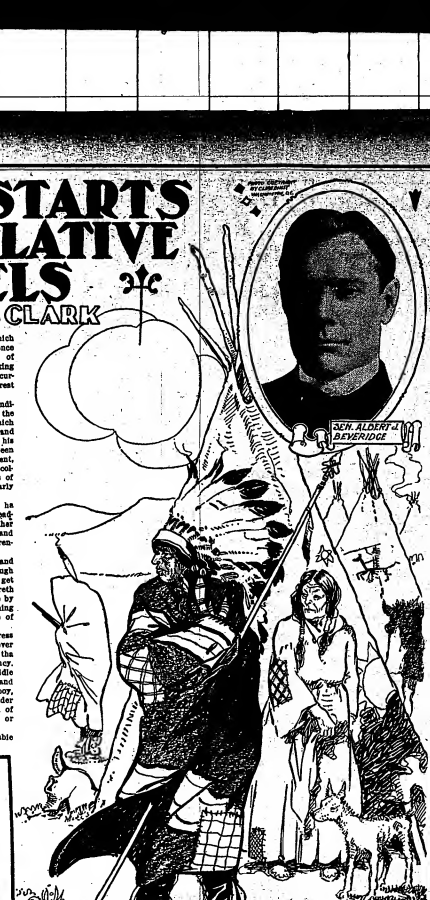
A copy of the skit fell under Senator Beveridge's eye. It amused him immensely. He hung it on the wall of his room and showed it to callers. Finally one day it occurred to him that Rockyboy and his band had done him a service of amusement and he concluded that turn about was only fair play, and so he thought he would look into Rockyboy's case and find out how it was that for years congress had refused to go to the aid of some of its wards who were at the point of starvation at least six months of the year. The senator apparently thought that it wouldn't hurt the members of the Rockyboy band to have a few square meals, even though they were not the most deserving reds in the land.

The senator did look into the case, and found that Rockyboy and his wandering Montana band were worthy of consideration. He made Rockyboy's cause his own from that hour, and it was not long before a bill "For the relief of the wandering American-born Indians of Rockyboy's band in Montana," was passed by the senate of the United States.



A few years ago Robert Baker of Brooklyn represented the Sixth New York district in congress. Mr. Baker's career was somewhat stormy. He was known as a Socialist, but he was elected on the Democratic ticket. Mr. Baker's fellow members said of him that he was "erratic, effervescent, somewhat noisy, but always sincere."

There were scores of men who sat in the lower house of congress during Mr. Baker's term who hoped, perhaps for sheer curiosity's sake, that he would be sent to congress again in order that he might finish a speech which he once began but was not allowed to bring to an end.

The blocking of the ending of the Brooklyn member's address fell in this wise: Mr. Baker had spoken on the single tax system and on the iniquities of all other kinds of taxation. He had been given 30 minutes to unburden himself on a bill "To amend the law relating to taxation in the District of Columbia." When the 30 minutes were up the chairman's gavel hit the desk with a thump that drowned out Baker's best sentences.

The Brooklynite begged for ten minutes more, but the member who was in charge of the debate on behalf of the Democratic minority crisply cut him off, but, relenting, allowed him one minute in which to continue. This gratuity made Baker look as if he felt insulted, but for the good of his cause he grasped the fleeting moment, and did what he could with it.

He told Mr. Sabath, Chicago, of Columbia committee, that when he proposed to tax a man for the privilege of doing business he made a criminal of every man who thought he had a right to work at his trade without being taxed for the working, and who for conscience sake kept at his work and refused to pay the government levy.

SEN. ALBERT J. BEVERIDGE

This view that Baker took of the inherent right of a man to work at peddling or anything else without paying for the privilege was not new. It had been advanced occasionally in congress, and frequently elsewhere, by men of a certain bent of mind. Mr. Baker, however, took the last 30 seconds of the minute allotted to him to spring something novel and it was for the finishing of that half-minute speech that certain of the congressmen whose curiosity was pigued are anxious.

The Brooklyn member told his fellow members pointblank and without any explanatory reasons that they were guilty of causing the deaths of 460 out of every 1,000 babies that were born. Naturally, after being arraigned for wholesale murder in this way, the members were anxious to know along what lines their guilt lay. Baker, however, pensed after he had accused his fellows of being modern Herods in the matter of the slaughter of the innocents, and before he had a chance to show e willingness to let the members know whether they were sending infants to the grave by fire, steel or the rope, his time was up and he was shut off by the chairman of the committee of the whole, and as a result a great murder mystery still hangs over the house of representatives.

When the Grand Duke Sergius was killed Mr. Baker made a speech in the house which indirectly attempted to justify the throwing of the bomb the explosion of which brought death to the duke. There is a good deal of conservatism in the south. The southern members didn't like Mr. Baker's remarks on the assassination of Sergius.

Representative John W. Maddox of Georgia when given a chance to think even momentarily, is something of a purist in the matter of language. He became so angry at Baker's remarks, however, that he forgot there was such a thing as grammar on the face of the earth. Before Mr. Baker was half-way down into his seat, Maddox was on his feet shouting in trumpet tones:

"The Democratic party don't stand for this assassination business, now nor never," a echo if enigmatic utterance which brought forth rapturous applause alike from Democrats and Republicans.

To Robert Baker is due a large part of the credit for the legislation which prevents members of congress from accepting passes from railroad companies. Baker was known in congress as Anti-pass Baker, and while the name was given him as a joke he carried it proudly and unquestionably he made campaign material out of it. He attacked the pass accepting propensities of his fellows, constantly asking the pointed question how they could be consistent advocates of the people's rights as against the railroads while holding out their hands to the railroads for favors.

The Brooklyn man received a pass from a railroad company. He sent it back by the next mail and the letter he sent with it was of the kind called vitriolic. If Baker of Representative Baker's egitation was discussed in the public press more than it ever had been discussed before, and the way was paved for the anti-pass provision in the railroad rate bill.

Robert Baker was not re-elected. He was given a position, however, which paid him $4,500 a year. He deliberately resigned from this well-paying position because he believed that while holding it he could not consistently preach certain of his beliefs concerning the methods of government.

Henry M. Goldfogle, representative in congress from New York city, in a speech in the house gave those of his colleagues whose knowledge of history does not extend to details an interesting chapter concerning a Jewish patriot of the revolutionary period who gave up his money to help the government out of financial straits. Mr. Goldfogle, like the generous one of a past generation, is a Jew, and he took a proper pride in the deed of the man of his faith.

In some respects this story of the giving of money to the government by Hyman Salomon, the Jewish citizen, is one of the most remarkable which ever has been called to the attention of congress. The country does not know much about it. It ought to know all about it and it ought to appreciate not only the generosity of the patriot but the action of the patriot's descendants who gave congress one of the biggest surprises it has ever received.

Hyman Salomon, like Robert Morris, helped the government out liberally when it was in financial straits and when there seemed little likelihood that any of his money would be returned. Robert Morris has a place in every school history, and the boy who doesn't know about the friend of liberty who impoverished himself for the government stands below the foot of his history class.

Neither the school books nor the encyclopedias seem to have given much attention to Hyman Salomon, who parted with his shekels for the benefit of Uncle Sam. In his speech in congress Mr. Goldfogle did something for the memory of the financier and even more for the fame of the financier's descendants. The house learned that in the years that had gone four different congresses expressed a willingness to pay to the heirs of Mr. Salomon the money which he advanced to the government without security. The part of the New York representative's statement that fairly astounded his colleagues was his declaration that every time that congress had expressed its desire to give Hyman Salomon's heirs the money their ancestor had advanced they refused to take one cent of the debt, saying that if their forerunner's loan was inspired by patriotism they desired to show that his descendants held his patriotism as a heritage.

It is said that the records of congress show practically no cases which may run in parallel to this refusal to take money in the ownership of which there was ever legal and moral right.

SHE KNEW ALL ABOUT SILAS

Mrs. Hopkins Well Understood the Frugality of Her Esteemed Fellow Townsman.

Mrs. Wiggins had "run in" for a minute to talk over the latest news of the village with her friend, Mrs. Hopkins.

"Do you know," she said, "they tell me that Mr. Magoo didn't subscribe but 50 cents to the minister's salary. That doesn't seem possible, does it?"

"To anybody that knows Silas Magee real well, it does," replied Mrs. Hopkins. "You haven't lived in this town all your life, Mis' Wiggins, and you don't know what Silas is capable of. Why, I remember once when he was a young fellow, going to singing school with the rest of us, we got up a picnic.

"One of the girls spoke up and said she'd bring some chicken sandwiches, another.

"'I'll bring some sliced ham,' says another.

"'I'll fetch some jelly and cookies,' says somebody else, and so it went on till we had most everything we could eat, promised. Then one of the boys who had no means said he would bring the coffee. That gave Silas his chance. He'd been sitting by, listening to it all, and now he spoke up real brisk, and says he:

"'I'll bring the water for the coffee!'

"No, Mis' Wiggins, I sh'n't surprised a mite at his subscribing only 50 cents. The only surprising thing is that it wasn't a quarter."—Youth's Companion.

SHE GOT WHAT SHE WANTED

This Woman Had to Insist Strongly, but It Paid

Chicago, Ill.—"I suffered from a female weakness and stomach trouble, and I went to the store to get a bottle of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, but the clerk did not want to let me have it—he said it was no good and wanted me to try something else, but knowing all about it I insisted and finally got it, and I am so glad I did, for it has cured me.

"I know of so many cases where women have been cured by Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound that I can say to every suffering woman if that medicine does not help her, there is nothing that will."—Mrs. JANETZEL, 2068 Arch St., Chicago, Ill.

This is the age of substitution, and women who want a cure should insist upon Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound just as this woman did, and not accept something else on which the druggist can make a little more profit.

Women who are passing through this critical period or who are suffering from any of those distressing ills peculiar to their sex should not lose sight of the fact that for thirty years Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, which is made from roots and herbs, has been the standard remedy for female ills. In almost every community you will find women who have been restored to health by Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

The Farmer's Son's Great Opportunity

Why wait for the old farm to become your inheritance? Right now to secure 160 acres of rich, fertile Western Canada farm land. Free homestead of 160 acres to every settler. Pre-emptions at $3.00 per acre. Write for literature and particulars as to best districts for grain growing, stock raising, dairying, mixed farming, etc. Last but not least the climate is unsurpassed for health and comfort. Railway fares reduced to settlers. Descriptive pamphlet, "Last Best West," and other literature, sent free on application to Superintendent of Immigration, Ottawa, Canada, or to C. J. Broughton, 125 Ninth St., Minneapolis, Minn. Authorized Government Agent.

Now's the Time

Get a warm sun, moist soil, plenty of rain and you have the conditions that produce the abundant crops of Western Canada. Wheat, oats, barley and flax are the principal crops, the average yield per acre in 1910 being: wheat, 26 bushels; oats, 60 bushels; barley, 30 bushels; flax, 18 bushels. Ranchers who have been engaged in mixed farming for years, and who have had experience in other countries, say that the climate of Western Canada is unsurpassed for health and comfort. Many of the settlers are coming in large numbers from the United States, and are taking up the splendid farm lands which are to be had free, or can be purchased at reasonable prices from railway companies and land corporations. Railway fares have been reduced to settlers. Write for literature and particulars as to routes, etc., to Superintendent of Immigration, Ottawa, Canada, or to C. J. Woman's Power Over Man

Woman's most glorious endowment is the power to awaken and hold the pure and honest love of a worthy man. When she loses it and still lives on, no one in the wide world can know the heart agony she endures. The woman who suffers from weakness and derangement of her special womanly organism soon loses the power to sway the heart of a man. Her general health suffers and she loses her good looks, her attractiveness, her amiability and her power and prestige as a woman. Dr. R. V. Pierce, of Buffalo, N.Y., with the assistance of his staff of able physicians, has prescribed for and cured many thousands of women. He has created a successful remedy for women's ailments. It is known as Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription. It is a positive specific for the weaknesses and disorders peculiar to women. It purifies, regulates, strengthens and heals. "Outguessing" the BATTER

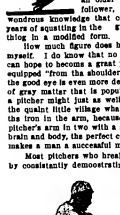
By CHRISTY MATHEWSON



IN PITCHING and winning your games, I have often been asked by devotees of the American game, "how much figure does brain work cut?"

Many an honest young fanatic has asked me that question during the ten years and more that I have been pitching major league baseball, peering at my head meanwhile as though he expected some such reply as "no headwork whatever." Many an older and wiser baseball follower, fortified by the wondrous knowledge that comes to man after years of squatting in the grand-stand, has asked me the same thing in a modified form.

How much figure does brainwork cut? I don't quite know myself. I do know that no pitcher, however powerful or agile, can hope to become a great performer without being thoroughly equipped "from the shoulders up." The steel arm is desirable, the good eye is even more desirable, but, without the little filing of gray matter that is popularly supposed to inhabit the skull, a pitcher might just as well pack his suit-case and go back to the quaint little village where he was first discovered. It isn't the iron in the arm, because lots of longsboremen could snap a pitcher's arm in two with a single twist, it's the combination of brain and body, the perfect co-operation of mind and muscle, that makes a man a successful major league twirler.

Most pitchers who break into fast company and stay there by constantly demonstrating their ability, are men that went through a long course of sprouts before they got anywhere. They, like hundreds of successful men in other walks of life, were forced to look, listen, and learn before they had anything like an even chance to win their spurs.

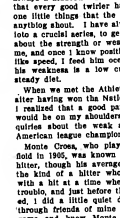
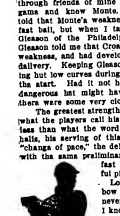
Many things have been said and written about pitchers' outguessing batters, and batters outguessing pitchers, and to tell the truth there has always been a question in my mind about the outguessing proposition. I have seen so many instances where guesses went wrong—so many hundreds of instances—that I am about the last human being in the world to pose as an oracle on the subject of pitching psychology. Nevertheless, there certainly is a lot of psychology about pitching a baseball. Granting that a pitcher needs something more than a clear head, it must be admitted that the successful pitcher is always a studeot. There are a hundred and one little things that every good twirler has in his repertoire. A hundred and one little things that the average baseball lover doesn't know anything about. I have always made it a practice, before going into a crucial series, to get some kind of outside information about the strength or weakness of every batter slated to face me, and once I know positively that a batter doesn't like a speed, I feed him excess of it. If I find that his weakness is a low curve, he gets that for a steady diet.



ARTHUR DEVLIN.

When we met the Athletics in the season of 1905, after having won the National league championship, I realized that a good part of the pitching burden would be on my shoulders, and I began making inquiries about the weak and strong points of the American league champions.



Monte Cross, who played on Connie Mack's infield in 1905, was known by me to be a dangerous hitter, though his average was not high. He was the kind of a hitter who was always hobbling up with a bit at a time when a hit meant trouble, and just before the series started, I did a little quiet detective work through friends of mine who knew the games and knew Monte. I had been told that Monte's weakness was a high, fast ball, but when I talked to "Kid" Gleason of the Philadelphia Nationals, Gleason told me that Cross had fought against and overcome his weakness, and had developed into a murderer of the high, fast delivery. Keeping Gleason's advice in mind, I gave Cross nothing but low curves during the series, and had him helpless from the start. Had it not been for Gleason's tip, Monte's always dangerous bat might have caused trouble in that series, for there were some very close games before it was all over.

The greatest strength of a pitcher, aside from his control, is what the players call his "mixture." That means no more nor less than what the word implies—his variety of fast and slow balls, his serving of this or that curve. What we call the "change of pace," the delivering of a fast and then a slow ball with the same preliminary motions, and the mixing of a high fast ball and a slow curve are the successful pitcher's best assets.

Lovers of baseball have often asked me how I deal with a batsman whom I have never faced and about whose batting ability I know nothing. Every seasoned pitcher has been called on often enough to meet batters he never saw before, and in such pinches he must rely largely oh luck. When I am facing a new batsman for the first time, I pay particular attention to two things—the position he assumes at the plate and the way he holds his bat. If, for instance, he holds his hat well up toward the middle there isn't much use of sending him speed. Batters of this type are always ready for speed and they can meet the fastest ball a man ever threw. A low curve on the inside will do for a starter, and if such a batter goes after it and fails to connect, you have his "number." The batter who stands back from the plate with a long bat and a grip near the end is the one who can send a low curve into the southeastern quarter of the adjoining section.

FRED CLARK, of Pittsburg.

While a batter may work hard and overcome a certain weakness, that does not necessarily mean that he becomes a great hitter. In centering his energies on overcoming his weakness for a high ball he may lose his strength on low balls because he has been continually fed high ones by opposing pitchers. In that case I would try him on a low ball and if it was found that he could still hit that the only thing left would be a curve ball or change of pace. It is often the case that a pitcher cannot deceive a batter's eyesight but he can deceive him mentally. For instance, most any batter can hit a slow ball if he knows it is coming. The same is true in regard to a fast ball, but if he is expecting a fast ball and gets a slow one, a strike out or a weak grounder to the infield will be his best effort.

JOE TINKER.

Some batters, a few of the chosen, have no weakness that the most studious pitcher can detect. Men like Heine Wagner and Lajoie don't care much what the opposing pitcher has to offer.

I have often been told by my friends that a pitcher is about 90 per cent. of the game, and have never failed to resent them that nothing could be further from the truth. A winning pitcher helps a baseball team a whole lot, of course, but there are right other boys on that team, and nobody knows it better than the winning pitcher. The recent series between the Giants and Yankees will prove my point.

In that series I got away with every game in which I participated, but I won because I received magnificent support, both in the field and at the bat. Hed George Wiltse knew right, or had McGraw sent in Ames or Crandall, the story would have been the same if the support had been of the same splendid caliber. The wonderful work of Devlin, Devore and Doyle—the wonderful work of the whole team, for the matter of that—made defeat practically impossible. With that great machine working behind me and with the greatest manager of them all backing me up, I simply couldn't lose. That's how much a pitcher is 90 per cent. of the game.

As a matter of fact, it would be impossible to establish the mathematical relation of the pitcher to a ball club. Figures in baseball are often misleading. One pitcher may work brilliantly for 15 innings and have a 1 to 0 defeat marked up against his record, while on the following day another pitcher may luckily win a 10 to 8 game. It is a matter of record that in the season of 1909, Leon Ames of the Giants, by finishing a 17 inning game and participating in two extra inning ties, pitched 30 consecutive innings without allowing a run and yet did not win one of the games.

From this it can be seen that the winning power of a team must depend largely upon its run-getting ability. To reach an estimate of value we will say that offensive play is half the game. I think that conservative. That would leave but 50 per cent., and the pitcher could not be all of that. I would say that about 30 per cent. of the strength of a ball club lies in the pitcher's box. No matter how effective a pitcher may be in the box he cannot win unless the team hits in runs behind him. It is true, however, that the work of a pitcher can have a very strong influence upon the work of the rest of the team. Disgruntled fans frequently make the assertion that infielders and outfielders will not support certain pitchers. That idea is erroneous. Ball players always want to win, no matter who is in the box. It is usually lack of control on the part of the pitcher that disconcerts or demoralizes the infield. Players lose confidence because they are uncertain as to what will happen next. The catcher may call for a "pitch-out"—that is, a ball thrown wide of the batter, so that the catcher can have a clear throw to second to catch a runner who is about to steal. The infielders all see this signal and hotch the shortstop and second baseman have their positions all set in making the play. If the pitcher does not pitch-out, as expected, the batter may hit the ball through the spot left vacant and upset the whole team. Once they lose confidence in a pitcher in a game, it is very difficult to regain it. It is not that they will not support the pitcher. On the contrary, it is the fault of the pitcher who will not give them a chance. If the pitcher has control everything works smoothly.

If it were true that pitching is 90 per cent. of the strength of a ball club, it would be logical to assume that the team having the best staff of pitchers would always win the pennant. That is not true. The baseball reader who pays attention to records will notice that the teame which win the pennants always have several players who lead in their respective departments. And the does not necessarily include the pitchers. For instance, the Baltimore club, back in the early nineties, won three successive pennants with pitchers whose names can scarcely be remembered.

The hackneyed cry of "What we need is pitchers" could well be changed to "What we need is hitters, base runners and fielders." Without them there can be no pennants.

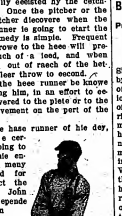
MATHEWSON.

Some of the best pitchers ever connected with professional baseball have received bumps from sources so humble that any false esteem they may have held for themselves has vanished like the snows of last season. Cy Young, the noblest old Roman of them all, has been beaten by village teams. The best pitchers of the world's champions, not long after they had trimmed the Cubs, were beaten by the unknown Cuban teams that have been touring the circuit with bern-storming trip. They pitched good ball, the kind of ball that would defeat any team if it came to a matter of which season's record, but luck, the one thing above all others that makes baseball the thrilling and perfect game it is, decreed otherwise. There are times, you see, when all the science and all the outguessing in the world will not avail.

I shall never forget a trimming I got from a villages team in Michigan. Just after we had defeated the Athletics for the world's championship in 1905, Frank Bowerman and I went on a hunting trip. As soon as the nettvee of Frank's home town, Romeo, Mich., knew that I was his guest, they came and begged us to do the bettery work for the Romeo club in a game they were to play with the club representing the adjoining town. We agreed, and I am afreid ther our willingness cost a lot of honest Romeo villagers everything except their family plate. The thought of defeat never entered their minds, any more than it entered ours, but the little rivel towne club came over to Romeo and gave Messrs. Bowerman and Matthewson, fresh from their big league trimmphs, a touch of high life that they never forgot. They beet us 5 to 0, and I guess they are celebrating it to this day. I don't know just how they managed it, because I was in perfect trim at thet time. I hed everything, as we say in professional circles, and they hit everything I hed. I didn't mind it much myself, but I felt sorry for poor Bowerman. He hed to keep on living there, and I didn't.

"HONUS" WAGNER

The real test of a pitcher's ability errives when the opposing team gets men on heese. His responchibility is increeesd while his freedom of pitching motion le restricted. He must watch the hese runner constantly and at the same time must deliver the hell to the hetter with the leest possible swing of the arm. In other words, he can't "wind up." Some pitchers find it difficult to get as much speed, curve or accuracy with the short arm motion as they do with their ueual swing. This affects some pitchers mentally, as the curtailment of physical effort prevants them from concentrating their mind on the men at the bat. At the same time the hese runnere, end frequently the coacher, are constantly tqying to nnnoy them. To protect himself the pitcher muet try end detect some action on the part of the hese runner which will indicate when he is going to attempt to etesl the next base. In this he is materially eeeisted by the catcher. Once the pitcher or the catcher discovers when the runner is going to start the remedy is simple. Frequent throwe to the hese will prevent the runner from getting too much of a lead, and when he does etart, the hell is pitched out of reach of the hetter so that the catcher can have a clear throw to second.



SHERWOOD MAGEE, of Philadelphia.

While the pitcher is watching the hese runner he knows thet the hese runner is elso watching him, in an effort to se the sign which the hall is to be delivered to the plete or to the base. Therefore, no preliminary movement on the part of the pitcher must betray his intentions.

George Van Haitren, the famoue hase runner of hie dey, once told me thet he could tell to a certainty when pitchers were going to deliver the ball to the hetter. This enabled him to get a running etart and many times the poor catcher was blamed for allowing a etolen base, when in fact the pitcher was unconsciously at fault. John McGraw, manager of the Giants, spends several weeks each seeson in teaching his young pitchers to overcome thet kind of a weakness.

The tremendous popularity of the national game—its popularity is growing every year—means that in the years to come there will be hundreds of baseball stars where there are dozens now. Every healthy boy has it in him to become a good ball player, though he may never care to follow the pastime professionelly. Being a professional player myself, I may be over-fond of the game to which I owe so much, but I can think of many other callings and many other pastimes that a boy might better shun. Baseball is always played out in the sunshine, where the air is pure and the grass is green, and there is something about the game, or at least I have always found it so, which teaches one how to win or lose as a gentleman should, and that is a very fine thing to learn.

SAM CRAWFORD, of Detroit.

Gotham Office Building Tallest in the World.

Structure Rises One-Seventh of a Mile From the Ground—Exceeded in Height Only by the Eiffel Tower.

New York.—Men will be at work daily in a structure of stone and steel one-seventh of a mile from the ground and in all of the 55 stories of the new Woolworth building before the end of next year, the time appointed for completion of the tallest business structure in the world. Laid out flat the giant building would be longer than three city blocks, and Salvator's record speed for a mile would make it 7 seconds the time necessary for the champion to cover the distance. Only the Eiffel tower, in Paris, a steel skeleton, will exceed in height this newest New York pinnacle.

Higher and higher do our skyscrapers soar, outtopping everything but the mightlio clouds of smoke from their own hollers; deeper and deeper do they thrust down through the soil until their maeetve steel roots find an anchorage in the rock below. The Titans of the modtern world are the builders, heaving their tons of steel and stone and brick aloft in defiance of the law of gravitdtion and the winds of heaven and dering even the earthquake to confound their work in ruin. Besides these modern giants of structural efficiency the builders of the early world were but pygmies pieying with blocks in the nursery. How high will the skyscraper of the future monnt? WASHINGTON GOSSIP

Officers Named for Imaginary Army

WASHINGTON.—As army that does not exist is being officered by the war department in obedience to the mandate of congress. Fifty and more men versed in the profession of arms are already on the eligible list for commissions in this army. Three new boards of army officers, composed of seasoned colonels, experienced majors, captains and first and second lieutenants, were recently named to pass upon the qualifications of other candidates ambitious to direct imaginary military forces.

Artemus Ward's shoulder strap company of warriors, assembled to take part in the big family feud of 1861-5, had at least one private—the hammerist himself, who was in command; but the army of the United States volunteers is to have none. Don Quixote armed with a big stick, his head protected by a "diarrhino helmet," mounted on his charger, "Rosinante," and followed by the faithful Sancho Panza was a mere reel, more tangible and more formidable force than the ghostly army of United States volunteers. It's a joker in the Dick militia bill, enacted into law by congress on May 27, 1908.

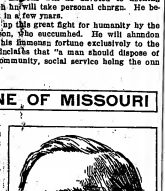
The Dick bill originally provided for an actual army of United States volunteers similar to the volunteers who enlisted for the Spanish-American war after state organizations were found to be troublesome.

The bill also provided for a separate section for an eligible list from which officers were to be commissioned when the army of United States volunteers, subject only to the will of the commander-in-chief of the armies of the United States, might be called into being in a condition of war.

The section providing for the volunteer army was stricken from the bill in the course of a legislative wrangle over the privilege of the states to organize volunteers. The authority creating the army was thus destroyed, but the contingent section bringing into existence the list of eligibles for the army's commissioned officers was not disturbed. The bill thus passed congress, disembodying the army but providing officers for it. That is why the war department is now qualifying men as eligibles.

IN THE PUBLIC EYE

BEGINS WAR ON CONSUMPTION



With the same energy which marked his operations in grain, cotton and finance, James A. Patten, the Chicago multi-millionaire, has set about the disbursement of his wealth in financing the biggest war on disease that has ever been known in the history of the world. His daring speculations, which attracted wide attention a few years ago, won for him a fortune estimated at $20,000,000. With this fortune or a large part of it, Mr. Patten now proposes to carry on a personal campaign of social service. During the past six months he has donated $2,000,000 for such charities and public works as appeal to him.

He has given Northwestern University $500,000 as a basis on which to begin medical research into the prevention and cure of tuberculosis and will increase this sum to $2,000,000 as fast as the money is needed. Other millions will be devoted to battling with the white plague, a war of which he will take personal charge. He believes the disease can be stamped out in a few years.

Mr. Patten was prompted to take up this great fight for humanity by the death of his brother, and later his son, who succumbed. He will abandon all business and devote himself and his immense fortune exclusively to the battle which he has taken up. He declares that "a man should dispose of great wealth for the benefit of the community, social service being the one great thing in life."

SENATOR STONE OF MISSOURI

On the next parliamentary tactitimes in the United States senate is William Joel Stone, of Missouri. He is a veteran in legislative experience, having sat in the house from 1885 to 1891. Then he was elected governor of his state and in 1903 was sent to the Federal senate.

Senator Stone is an uncompromising Democrat, and believes that his party will be successful in the next presidential campaign. However, he believed the same thing in 1900, when he managed Bryan's campaign.

The senator is one of the most picturesque figures in congress. He is six feet in height, is as slender and straight as a poplar, and wears dress characteristic of himself. His face is striated, his skin somewhat like parchment, his speech, when he is calm and without excitement, slow and deliberative. But when stirred by anger or emotion, his words flow with the dash and fury of a mountain torrent. On such occasions his words are strong—sensationally strong.

PLEDGES IRELAND HOME RULE

Assurances, the sincerity of which there is no doubting, were recently given by Premier Asquith in the house of commons that a full measure of self-government would be granted to Ireland, after the veto power of the House of Lords had been dealt with. In replying to the statement John Redmond, leader of the Irish Nationalists, proclaimed his willingness to accept the government measure as a full settlement of Ireland's claims and said that with this concession of national justice Ireland would acknowledge England's king as the ruler of Ireland.

Hitherto the Nationalists have consented to accept whatever England granted as a measure of final separation, but the Irish leader, in indorsing the prime minister's statement of the measure of home rule to be granted, astonished his hearers by applauding the autonomy granted to South Africa by King Edward and expressing the hope that King George would open the Irish parliament and so hasten the day when Ireland, reconciled, would become a loyal unit of the British empire.

JAMES MARRIES FOURTH WIFE

Although past his 60th birthday, General Thomas L. James, once postmaster of New York and postmaster general of the nation under Garfield and Arthur, recently married his fourth wife. The bride is Mrs. Florence Gaffney, of Rochester.

General James was born in Utica in 1831 and served his apprenticeship as a printer. After serving his apprenticeship he published a Whig organ at Hamilton, N. Y., and took an active part in opposition to the Know Nothing movement. In 1861 he entered the customs service and in 1872 was appointed postmaster of New York by President Grant. Later he became postmaster general and soon after the assassination of President Garfield became president of the Lincoln National bank. His investigations while postmaster general resulted in the "star route" trials and in ten months of administration he saved the government $4,000,000.

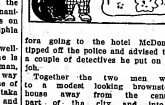
General James' first wife was Emily Ida Freeburn, of Hamilton, and a year after her death, which occurred in 1895, he married her sister, Leana, widow of Dr. E. R. Barden, of Albany.

TALES OF GOTHAM AND OTHER CITIES

Gotham Girl Operates on Her Pet Dog

NEW YORK.—Gypsy, an American bull pup belonging to Miss Mabel Barnes, a surgical nurse, is rejoicing over the removal of a hairpin five inches long which had been circulating in her system for more than a month.

Gypsy was a month old when Miss Barnes first acquired her and reciprocity of affection promptly resulted. Like most puppies, Gypsy had a habit of nosing at random without reading any pure-food labels or caring much whether the thing was digestible, so long as it could be swallowed.



She began on handkerchiefs, lace curtains, gloves, slippers, and once she ate a cuff link. These did not seem to interfere with her enjoyment of life. Next she tried several pins and needles, and these upset her for a few days.

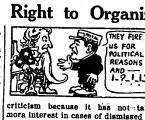
Quite awhile ago, Miss Barnes says, she noticed one day that Gypsy kept her head projected straight in front of her. She seemed to be unable to move it, and when it was turned forcibly the dog whined with the pain.

Then a swelling started on the dog's left side. Recently while examining this swelling, Miss Barnes felt a sharp point. She surmised that Gypsy's trouble was due to foraging in her darning basket. She brought home a hypodermic syringe, some cocaine and a pair of artery forceps.

Gypsy's fetth in her mistress was so great that she did not make a move while the hypodermic was being inserted. Then Miss Barnes seized the sharp point with her forceps.

Philadelphia "Sucker" Not So Easy

PHILADELPHIA.—Thirteen gentlemen from New York, who thought it would entertain a gentleman from Philadelphia if they would do a little wire tapping for him and show him divers ways ways of obtaining rich rewards from money ventured on the horse races, were forced to the unanimous conclusion that thirteen is an unlucky number and that Philadelphia men are not so slow after all.



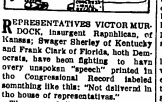
The adventure began for a well-known man whose fictitious name is Charles McDonald. "I say, old man, have you got a match?" was the way it all began. It was asked on one of those slow-going ferryboats that take Philadelphia folk over to Camden and back again.

Then there was a general conversation about horse racing. "Say," whispered the pipe smoker with an air of great secrecy, "I'm a Western Union manager in a New York branch office. I run the racing information bureau. I can hold up information about races for eight minutes. Get that?"

McDonald—that is the man whose police alias is McGonigle—got it, and exchanged cards with his friend. They made a date for the Hotel Walton, in Philadelphia, and then another date for the Breslin, in New York. Before going to the hotel McDonald tipped off the police and advised that a couple of detectives be put on the job.

Together the two men went to a modest looking brownstone house away from the central part of the city and into a room where twelve other men were busy with telephones, telegraph instruments, etc. All told they made a sizable den. McDonald staked $20 on a bet and won. Then he was taken to another house where he talked party of his millions and in a bantering way suggested he wouldn't mind trying $30,000 on a single horse. They took McCormick by storm, but the money was there and so was New York detectives and before the Philadelphians knew what was up both their records had been raided and the entire company was under arrest.

Postal Clerks Ask Right to Organize



EMPLOYEES of the postal service, particularly the men employed in the railway mail branch, are making a determined fight for legislation under which they may organize and affiliate with the American Federation of Labor. Samuel Gompers, president of the federation, is supporting the movement.

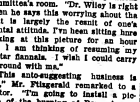
Many men formerly in the postal service, but who warn int out because they were active in encouraging employes of the service to organize, have told the committee of the wrongs which they assert are done the employes. In a general way, the grievances of the employes is that men are frequently dismissed for purely political reasons, men let out of the service have no recourse.

It is pointed out that the postoffice department now forbids the individual employes from laying any complaint he may have before his congressional member of congress. The civil service commission has come in for much criticism because it has not taken more interest in cases of dismissed employes. Witnesses have pointed out to the committee that the commission will not act in the case of a dismissed employes unless it has prima facie evidence that the dismissal was necnuan of politics. It is next to impossible, say the dismissed employees who have testified, to prove that men were removed from the service through political influence.

Some of the new members of the house who have become much interested in the grievances of the postal employes believe a remedy of some sort will be found in the committee on civil service.

Would Label the Unspoken "Speeches"

REPRESENTATIVES VICTOR MURDOCK, insurgent Republican, of Kansas; Swager Sherley of Kentucky and Frank Clark of Florida, both Democrats, have been fighting in a lazy sort of way over unspoken "speech" printed in the Congressional Record labeled something like this: "Not delivered in the house of representativas."



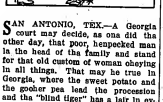
These men believe that the Record, as it now leaves the press, perpetrates a fraud on the readnr every time it declares that Congressman ——— delivered the following speech on such a date, when all Congressman ——— did was to get permission to insert in its columns a carefully prepared manuscript intended for thn consumption of his constituents, at the expense of the United States government.

"It is thn only honest way," declared Murdock to the correspondent. "The Record, under the present system, is not a true report of the proceedings of the house. It may well be that an article of value, prepared by a member of congress, should be printed in the Record, but it should ha so designated.

"The first resnlt of labeling things in thn record by thn real names would hn the abandoning of thn present abuse by individual representatives. When a man's constituents begin to ask him, 'Did you really deliver this speech, or did you just have it printed?' he will quit the practice.

"Congress could not possibly afford the time that would be necessary for the delivery of all thn spaeches that appear in the Record. Therefore, speeches will have to be shortened, and they ought to be.

Auto-Suggestion Way of Keeping Cool



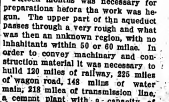
A WILTED representative, John J. Fitzgerald of Brooklyn, N. Y., chairman of the house appropriations committee, is the first distinguishnd convert to Dr. Harvey W. Wiley's theory with respect to the effect of auto-suggestion on the temperature of the body. Mr. Fitzgerald sat at his desk all through a sizzling, sweltering day, wearing a smile of perfect peace. His coat was buttoned tightly, the collar of it turned up around his neck, and every now and then he shivered with unmistakable delight.

Right in front of Mr. Fitzgerald a large person with bushy black whiskers lay on his stomach on a cool bank squinting through a transit or some other funny looking instrument of that sort. Then a right another large person, clad in furs, sat on a cake of ice and scribbled busily in a notebook. In the middle distance three Eskimo dogs fought over a dead fish. In the background dozens of stately ice barges floated round easily.

"I'm certainly happy that I found this painting of the 'Farthest North' of thn Grenly expedition," said Mr. Fitzgerald, referring to thn enormous canvas in front of him, which, massively framed, covnrnd most of the west wall of the big appropriations committee room. "Dr. Wiley is right when he says this worrying about the heat is largely the resnlt of one's mental attitude. I'm here sitting here looking at this picture for an hour and I am thinking of resuming my winter flannels. I wish I could carry it around with me."

"This auto-suggesting business is fine," Mr. Fitzgerald remarked to a visitor. "I'm going to install a picture of the burning of Rome in my home next winter and see how much I can save on coal bills."

Women Rule Roost in Lone Star State



SAN ANTONIO, TEX.—A Georgia court may decide, as one did the other day, that poor, henpecked man is the head of the family and stand for that old custom of woman obeying in all things. That may be true in Georgia, where the sweet potato and the goober pea lead the procession and the "blind tiger" has a lair in every jungle, but it is different in Texas. A Texas court might hold that man is the head of the family, but no court on earth could clinch such a decision.

In Texas women have done almost everything in the catalogus of commercial possibilities. In a number of instances women own large ranches and have operated them successfully for years. Women in the state lead the country in dairying. In a number of instances women carry the mail on rural routes and a half-dozen or more of them have made the record of not missing a day in the year.

Women, many of them who ride as well as men, assist in the roundups on large ranches and are as handy with the whip and the rope as the men. The outlaw steer, which has escaped the cowboys, has a poor chance to beat it back to the brush when two or more Texas cowgirls get on its trail. One Texas girl has roped, thrown and tied a steer in less then one minute. Her feat became the subject for a painter of national reputation and she is done in oil on a canvas ten feet square in the Menger hotel in this city. Women in Texas operata oil wells and are moving forces in coal mining. Some of the most skyscrapers in this city were built and are owned by women, these having taken the lead in twentieth century steel and concreta construction.

Gets Water Supply 250 Miles Distant

LOS ANGELES.—Six years ago the people of Los Angales voted an issue of $4,000,000 in bonds to pay for what they consider tha finest supply of water furnished to any city in the world. The first issue of bonds was made in 1907 and the last will hn made this year. The aqnadnct, which is 250 miles long, will bring a sufficient amount of water to supply a city of 2,000,000 inhabitants across the country from Owens lake.

The first 20 miles of the aqueduct is open earth canal which follows the canyon of Owens river. The next 38 miles is an open concrete conduit, laid upon the mountain sides, which follows their contonr-like a mountain road. For 28 miles the conduit runs in ditches carved from the rocky walls, and for an equal distance is sustained by artificial causeways of rocks. It next passes 150 miles through the Mojave desert, on the edge of Death valley, the most desolate and forbidding spot in the United States, and passing under the Sierra Madre range of mountains emerges into Los Angales county and residence.

The aqueduct is a gravity system, and its capacity is 1,200 barrels a day and more than 300 buildings, such as bunk houses, mess halls, warehouses, hospitals, engineers' offices and residences.

WAY TO SUCCESS.

The man who undertakes to accomplish too many things at the same time generally pays a high toll in the end. He may succeed for a while, but he does so at fearful risks and without properly reckoning the cost to himself. He is the exception, though, rather than the rule and often "makes good" at the expense of his physical and mental well being, says the Charleston News and Courier. Giants among men are rarities even in this day of surprising developments and record achievements, and as a rule the man who follows one line of work with class attention and conscientious regard will lay by for himself greater success and more enduring results than he who dabbles in any undertaking that may come his way. It is not an easy thing to shut ourselves away from tempting influences and conditions that may appeal to us, but having once fitted ourselves to do a certain work, and having expended time and energy in its accomplishment, it is only natural to suppose that we can obtain more certain results by developing it to the best of our ability. Sometimes the way is hard; long hours of application are necessary, but often when we least expect it the clouds begin to lift and we see the realization of the promises for which we have labored.

What clever prankishness was that of the boys of West Lafayette college, Ohio, who put oil in the milk for the girls' dormitory, causing twenty of the co-eds to become so ill as to require the attendance of physicians! They were nearly as daring as the young men of the Pacific coast institution of learning who raided the girls' dormitories and frightened some of the occupants into hysterics by pulling them out of bed. Why investitch, country young man does many things that would hardly have occurred in any earlier age. Is it because of the disappearance of the birch as an aid to education?

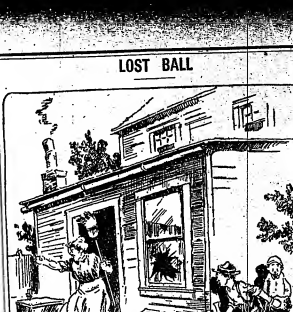
An automobile in New York picked up a stone in its wheel and flung it into a window, almost striking some persons. The automobile is perhaps the most striking instance of the intimate depravity of inanimate things. It has been known to try to climb a tree or a lamppost and to turn somersaults in the ocean, to say nothing of its running down the general public. But now it has taken to throwing stones at people, something imperative toward curbing its impetuosity will have to be done.

We are accused of being the most wildly speculative nation in the world. But is the year London has run wild over the rubber craze, then went through a boom in oil shares, and has finally turned to a bull gamble in British railroads. The United States has, on the other hand, practically stopped speculation, perhaps for the sufficient reason that the lambs had no more fleece to shear.

The golden anklet with bangles has appeared in Chicago. This is probably a decoration intended to go with the harem skirt and shows again the inconsistency of the feminine mind. While the inhabitants of the eastern harems are taking to Paris styles western women are looking for their fashions to the Orient.

People who live in New York complain that the place is becoming too noisy at night. The people who make the noise will find it difficult to understand why men and women who long for peace and quiet insist on living in New York.

Members of a club in Atlanta say they will go to jail before they will tell what they know of women drinking in the club. The poet was mistaken. The world's male chivalry has not perished out. It has joined the Atlanta club.



It may be that a woman must put her soul in her dress in order to look well, but, at the same time, a good deal of importance rests on the sort of a physique she is able to put into it.

Far be it from us to accuse alumbaring trouble, but what has become of the tight trousers and padless coats with which we were threatened a few months ago?

At Newark, N. J., a lawyer charged his fair client $500 for reading a bundle of love letters, and she is complaining. She should have hired a women lawyer and had them read for nothing.

An English author was fined in New York the other day after he had received a wallop on the eye for trying to flirt with a pretty damsel. We have no doubt that he will write a book about it.

TAFT IS ATTACKED

UNDERWOOD PRESENTS REPORT ON WOOL TARIFF REVISION. BILL TO HOUSE.

BOARD ALSO GETS SCORING

Minority Members of Ways and Means Committee Declare Measure is "Cold Stonded" and Brought Forward for Purely "Political Reasons."

Washington.—The long expected wool tariff revision bill was presented to the house by Chairman Underwood of the ways and means committee. The long report accompanying it attacks President Taft and the tariff board.

Quoting President Taft's addresses after the passage of the Payne-Aldrich bill, in which he declared that "the woolen schedule is indefensible and I propose to say so," the report says:

Had the president made these public admissions earlier, while the tariff of 1909 was under consideration, by congress, his declarations would have been of real service to the people and would have enabled them to protest against the betrayal of the public welfare to private greed.

The report deals at some length with the attitude of the administration in communicating to congress data on the "steel trust" and other industries now being investigated, and the failure of the tariff board to communicate data on the woolen industry.

"The position of the tariff board appears to be," says the report, "that they, in conference with and under the sole control of the president, shall be the sole judges as to what part of the data they collect may be likely to be of service for purposes of legislation; and this situation must be considered with reference to the viewpoint of the president concerning tariff legislation.

"It is, therefore, not impossible that there may be some such delay in the communication to the congress of the statistical information collected by the tariff board concerning wool and woolen goods as there has been in communicating to congress or making public the data by the bureau of corporations concerning investigations of the steel and other industries."

The report maintains that any further delay in the revision of the wool and woolen schedule would be objectionable to the public.

A minority report is signed by Messrs. Payne, Dalzell, Needham and Longworth. "For purely political reasons," it says, "this cold-blooded measure is brought forward. If it could become a law it would slaughter sheep as in 1894 and close the mills much more universally."

U. S. ENDS ITS LAKE NAVY

Gunboat Wolverine, Last of War Vessels on Inland Seas, Placed Out of Commission.

Washington.—An order issued by the navy department placing the gunboat Wolverine out of commission at Erie, Pa., preparatory to turning it over to the naval militia at that place is of international significance. It removed from the great lakes the last regularly commissioned United States warship.

London Bank is Closed.

London.—The Birbeck bank in High Holborn, which withstood a run last fall caused by rumors that the institution was in trouble, has suspended payment. The directors estimate the deficit at $1,876,000, but the actuaries think that $3,750,000 will be nearer the mark.

Madison Square Garden is Sold.

New York.—Madison Square Garden was sold up to syndicate of which will bear down the structure will be razed and a new building will be erected on the site.

ASK LORIMER GUIDE

BODY WANTS AID OF HIGH-CLASS ATTORNEY IN NEW PROBE.

Testimony Gathered by Helm Body at Springfield, Ill., is Presented.

Washington.—An evidence of the thoroughness with which the special senate committee intends to probe the Lorimer scandal is given in the fact that it is considering several famous lawyers for counsel. It is probable that either former Secretary of War Dickinson or Louis D. Brandeis of Boston will be retained. The committee expects that the witnesses and corporations from whom testimony and books are sought will fight every step of the way. It may even be necessary to make examples of some of the refractory witnesses and punish them for contempt.

Carrying out the program agreed on by the senate committee on privileges and elections, Senator Dillingham introduced in the senate a resolution authorizing a subcommittee of eight members to reinvestigate the charges against Senator Lorimer of Illinois.

The subcommittee is authorized by the resolution to sit when and where it pleases, to employ stenographers, counsel and accountants; to send for persons, books, records and papers; to administer oaths, and report as early as practicable to the senate.

The committee is instructed specially to inquire fully into the sources and use of the alleged "jack-pot" or any other fund affecting the election of Mr. Lorimer.

The resolution named Senators Dillingham, Gamble, Jones, Kenyon, Johnston, Fletcher, Kern and Lea and directed them "forthwith to investigate whether Mr. Lorimer is now entitled to retain his seat."

In all probability Senator Lorimer will be the first witness to be called and his examination may take several days.

The senate also received formally the printed testimony taken by the Lorimer investigating committee of the Illinois state senate. Upon motion of Senator Dillingham it was ordered printed and upon motion of Senator Colburn it was ordered printed as a senate document and referred to the senate committee on privileges and elections.

GIRLS SHOOT W. E. D. STOKES

Proprietor of Ansonia Hotel at New York Badly Wounded in Quarrel With Women.

New York.—William Earl Dodge Stokes, millionaire proprietor of the Ansonia hotel, was shot three times and badly wounded by two girls whose apartment of the fourth floor of the fashionable Varuna, at Broadway and Eighteenth street, he was visiting.

The young women were Lillian Graham, aged twenty-two years, a singer, and Ethel Conrad, eighteen years old, an artist. Each fired three shots. Miss Graham's bullets inflicting two wounds and Miss Conrad's one.

The possession of a package of letters, both the girls and their self confessed, furnished the motive for the shooting. The letters, it is said, were written by Mr. Stokes to Miss Graham before his second marriage, which occurred last February.

Colombia is Threatened.

Austin, Tex.—Governor Colquitt, leader of the "wets," is going to Panama to "clean up" the gambling dens that he says are flourishing there. He declared at Galveston that unless Panama suppresses gambling the United States will refuse to build the canal.

VOLCANO IN ACTION

COLIMA POURS LAVA UPON MANY MEXICAN TOWNS AS RESULT OF QUAKE.

LOSS OF LIFE IS ENORMOUS

Seven Hundred Dead Are Reported at San Andres, the Largest City Destroyed, and Scarss Are Believed to Be Buried in Ruins.

Mexico City.—The volcano Colima is belching forth fire and lava and the towns of San Andres, Tonila, Tonillita, Zapotillo, San Gabriel and Tuxpan are overwhelmed. Each has a population of from 300 to 5,000 people.

The number of dead is unknown, but messages brought on a special train from San Andres, the largest town destroyed, reports 700 known dead and many hundred more buried.

From coast to coast Mexico is devastated by the earthquake and to add to the terror of the inhabitants the volcanoes Colima and Popocatepetl are now in full eruption, great cones of smoke hovering over the craters and lava pouring down their sides into the cities and towns located there.

The death list placed early at 1,466, is growing and word is yet to be received from the isthmus of Tehuantepec, which was shaken from end to end.

The famous floating gardens of the Montezumas, located on an island in Lake Xochimilco are no more. Gardens, homes, inhabitants, island and all are sunken beneath the surface of the lake. How many victims were claimed by the earthquake here no one can say, but comparatively few of the natives are believed to have escaped.

The inhabitants of this island are direct descendants of the Aztecs and of pure, unmixed blood. They raised and still raise nearly all the flowers and vegetables for the markets of Mexico City. Now they and their homes and their products are no more.

One hundred and fifty persons were injured in Guadalajara, but no one was killed.

The list of casualties is pouring into Mexico City. At Tacuba seven are dead and 25 injured; Tacubaya three dead, the number of injured being unknown; San Angle, two dead and seven injured from falling walls; Pinon, two dead and three injured.

Nearly all of these places are in the immediate vicinity of the capitol.

The Port of Manzanillo, State of Colima, that cost $14,000,000 to build is badly damaged. Twenty-two persons were killed. Acopulco also suffered greatly, but as yet there are no details.

PAPKE WINS IN KNOCKOUT

America Fighter Defeats Jim Sullivan, English Champion, and Becomes Premier Middleweight.

London.—Billy Papke, the American fighter, who claims the middleweight title in this country, knocked out Jim Sullivan, the English champion, in the ninth round of their 20-round battle at Palladium. This victory crowns Papke as middleweight champion of the world. The men fought under the English weight limit. Papke weighed in at 160 pounds. Papke was two ounces under the limit, while Sullivan was well within the weight.

The battle was a furious one while it lasted. Both men struggled hard to land the blow that meant wealth and honor, and in their wild endeavors used all sorts of tactics. Several times the referee was compelled to jump into the ring and separate the fighters. On other occasions Referee Eckersall stepped between the fighters to prevent rough tactics, such as bumping with his head in the clinches. While Sullivan was carried out of the ring well battered up, Papke bore the marks of several stinging wallops.

CLUBMAN IS SHOT BY WOMAN

C. Frederick Kohl, Millionaire Prisco Capitalist, is Fatally Wounded by French Maid.

San Francisco.—C. Frederick Kohl, millionaire clubman and one of the best-known capitalists of the Prisco section, was shot and fatally injured by Adele Verge, a French maid formerly employed by Mrs. Kohl.

The shooting occurred in the corridor of the Grand building, Seventh and Market streets, and was witnessed by a score of persons.

Miss Verge, when asked why she had shot Kohl, broke down and said she did not know. She was in a hysterical condition.

For several months Miss Verge has been involved in a lawsuit with the Kohls. Mr. and Mrs. Kohl had recently charged with insanity and were sued by her for alleged unpaid wages and false imprisonment.

Dr. Austin B. Chamberlin Dead.

Washington.—Dr. Austin B. Chamberlin, secretary general of the supreme council of the Southern Jurisdiction of Scottish Rite Masons, died here of apoplexy. His body was taken to Galveston, where an elaborate Masonic funeral will be held.

San Francisco.—Ernest Goodrich Stillman, son of James Stillman, the New York banker, and Miss Mildred Scott of this city were married in the Presbyterian church.

GATES IS DISPUTED

GARY DENIES THAT THREATS LED TO MERGER.

Says Roosevelt's Acquiescence in Coal Deal Was Act of Constructive Statesmanship.

Washington.—Elbert H. Gary, executive head of the United States Steel corporation, told the house investigating committee a version of the formation of that enterprise which contradicted testimony of John W. Gates that the threats of Andrew Carnegie to build rival railroads and tube works had induced J. Pierpont Morgan to institute negotiations culminating in the gigantic steel combination.

"Such matters as I learned were testified to by Mr. Gates before this committee," Mr. Gary said, after a detailed statement of the formation of the steel combination, "never were spoken of in the deliberations over the deal. I do not remember that Mr. Morgan ever mentioned these matters to me."

Mr. Gary said that Mr. Gates had nothing to do with questions regarding the charter and form of organization of the steel corporation.

Mr. Gary, in the course of his testimony, declared that if former President Roosevelt had not approved of the absorption of the Tennessee Coal and Iron company by the United States Steel corporation he, Gary, never would have voted to consummate that deal.

Mr. Gary, cross-examined by Mr. Littleton of New York, elaborated his views as to government supervision of corporations and pleaded for greater co-operation between government officials and the directing forces of big business combinations. Mr. Gary insisted that the government was just as likely to go too far in one direction as the corporations in another.

Mr. Gary denied charges, attributed to Senator Oliver of Pennsylvania, that the steel corporation was trying to gain control over Ohio river transportation lines so as to cut off competition in the shipment of coal.

These charges were set forth by Robert C. Hall, former president of the Pittsburg Stock exchange, another witness.

Mr. Gary, returning to the absorption of the Tennessee Coal and Iron company, Mr. Littleton asked "upon what that transaction relieved the financial situation."

"Just as soon as we sent back word from Washington that President Roosevelt would allow the deal to be made," Mr. Gary said, "I don't know what the committees think about it, but I myself believe that the action of the president in this connection was a piece of real constructive statesmanship."

Mr. Gary again declared in the course of further questioning that President Roosevelt and Secretary of State Root not only sanctioned the absorption of the Tennessee Coal and Iron company by the Steel corporation, but held it to be necessary to avert widespread financial disaster.

Mr. Gary said anew that financial conditions in 1907 were such that something had to be done to prevent a panic. The conference at the White House, he declared, was the final step in the campaign of prevention, and he added that if the administration had declined to permit the combination of the two big steel properties he would have opposed it in the Steel corporation.

GRACE BRYAN IS A BRIDE

Youngest Daughter of Nebraska Commoner is Married to Richard L. Hargreaves.

Lincoln, Neb.—Grace Dexter Bryan, youngest of the Nebraska commoner's children and the last to leave the Bryan home, was wedded at Fairview to Richard L. Hergreaves, son of a prominent Lincoln wholesale grocer. Rev. John Huntington, an intimate friend of the family, performed the ceremony. Miss Louise Tyler, daughter of the ex-governor of Virginia, was bridesmaid, while William Bryan, Jr., was best man to the groom. The wedding was private, attended only by immediate relatives.

WRECK OF THE MAINE RISES

Visible Part of Ship Practically the Same as Before It Sank into the Mud.

Havana.—The first stage of the actual work of uncovering the wreck of the battleship Maine was completed when pumping operations ceased after the water level within the great cofferdam built around the wreck had been lowered five feet.

This leaves the portion of the wreck visible above the water practically the same as on the night of the disaster, before the hull had time to become imbedded in the mud. There is now visible a long stretch of the starboard side of the quarter-deck.

Confesses to Killing 57.

Berlin.—Messages from Kazan say that Alexander Zarrega, arrested there on a wholesale murder charge, has confessed to having slain 57 persons, including an army officer and his wife in Sebastopol.

Bank is Robbed of $9,000.

Tooele, Utah.—After binding and gagging S. L. Shafer, cashier, of the Commercial bank, two masked robbers fled to the hills with $9,000 of the bank's money. Several posses started in pursuit.

POOR RETURN FOR CHIVALRY

Incident That Probably Has Forever Discouraged Kind-Hearted Mr. Jones.

Chivalrous Mr. Jones purposely dropped a fifty-cent piece of the foot of a poorly dressed woman who passed through the Subway turnstile loudly lamenting that the ticket agent had cheated her out of half a dollar, then he picked the money up and gave it to her.

"Excuse me, madame," said Mr. Jones, "I think you dropped this."

"Oh, no," she said, "it can't be mine. Perhaps you dropped it, yourself."

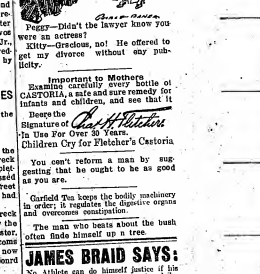
"Oh, no," said Mr. Jones. "It is yours, I am sure. I picked it up just as you passed."

She took the money, and hurried after another man who had passed at the time the money dropped.

"Excuse me, sir," she said, "I think you lost this."

"Thanks," said the other man, and jumped aboard a trolley that was ready to start.

"—— —— ——!" said chivalrous Mr. Jones.—New York Times.



DOCTOR PRESCRIBES CUTICURA REMEDIES

"I wish to let you know of a couple of recent cures which I have made by the use of the Cuticura Remedies. Last August, Mr. ——— of this city came to my office, troubled with a severe skin eruption. It was dermatitis in its worst form. It started with a slight eruption and would affect most parts of his body, thighs, elbows, chest, back and abdomen—and would terminate in little pustules. The itching and burning was dreadful and he would almost tear his skin off, trying to get relief. I recommended all the various treatments I could think of and he spent about fifteen dollars on prescriptions, but nothing seemed to help him.

"In the meantime my wife, who was continually suffering with a slight skin trouble and who had been trying different prescriptions and methods with my assistance, told me she was going to get some of the Cuticura Remedies and give them a trial. But as I did not know much about Cuticura at that time I was doubtful whether it would help her. Her skin would thicken, break and bleed, especially on the fingers, wrists and arms. I could do nothing to relieve her permenently. When she first applied the warm baths of Cuticura Soap and applications of Cuticura Ointment she saw a decided improvement and in a few days she was completely cured.

"I lost no time in recommending the Cuticura Remedies to Mr. ———, and this was two months ago. I told him to wash with warm baths of the Cuticura Soap and to apply the Cuticura Ointment generously. Believe me, from the very first day's use of the Cuticura Remedies he was greatly relieved and today he is completely cured through their use. I have great faith in the Cuticura Remedies and shall always have a good word for them now that I am convinced of their wonderful merits." (Signed) B. L. Whitehead, M. MINN. CROP REPORT SHOWS GREAT GAIN

Washington, D. C. — Statistics relative to the leading crops for the state of Minnesota collected at the thirteenth decennial census, April 15, 1910, are contained in an official statement issued by Acting Census Director Falkner. It is based on tabular summaries prepared under the direction of Dr. Le Grand Powers, chief statistician for agriculture, in the bureau of the census.

The figures are preliminary and subject to slight revision later, when a few other farms, whose returns are now incomplete, are included in the final tables. It is not expected that these additions will materially modify the amounts or rates given in the present statement. The leading crops in 1909, ranked in the order of valuation, were: Wheat, $56,609,000; oats, $34,020,000; corn, $30,451,000; hay and forage, $26,724,000; barley, $17,215,000; potatoes, $7,707,000; flaxseed, $4,861,000, and rye, $2,680,000.

Acreage Falls Off.

From 6,560,707 acres in 1899 the wheat acreage fell off in 1909 to 3,277,639 acres, a decrease of 50 per cent. Prior to 1909 each census showed an increase. In 1879 the wheat acreage was 3,044,670 and in 1889, 3,372,627. Hence at the present time the wheat acreage is less than it was twenty years ago, but slightly more than it was thirty years ago.

In 1899 wheat had an acreage larger than that of all other cereals combined, while in 1909 it exceeded the acreage in oats by less than 10 per cent. The yield of wheat per acre was reported as seventeen bushels, the value an acre $17.10.

From 1899 to 1909 the acreage in oats increased from 2,201,325 acres to 2,577,264, or 25.2 per cent. During the preceding decade the increase was 39.4 per cent. Since 1879 the increase in acreage has been constant. From 617,469 acres in that year it rose to 1,579,253 in 1889 and again to 2,201,325 in 1899. The aggregate yield in 1909 was 92,885,164 bushels; the average yield per acre, 32 bushels; the average value per acre, $11.40.

Corn Acreage Increases.

From 1899 to 1909 the acreage of corn increased from 1,441,580 acres to 2,004,107, or 39 per cent as compared to an increase of 59.9 per cent during the 10 years preceding. Corn acreage has increased steadily, but not so rapidly as that of oats. From 438,737 acres in 1879 it advanced to 901,690 in 1889, and then to 1,441,580 in 1899. The total yield in 1909 was 67,777,912 bushels; the average yield per acre, 34 bushels; the average value per acre, $16.20.

The acreage devoted to hay and forage in 1909 was 3,944,422. It has been constantly increasing. With 1,053,378 acres in 1879 it rose to 2,709,191 in 1889 and 3,157,690 in 1899. The increase since 1899 has been 24.9 per cent. The total yield in 1909 was 6,041,888 tons; the average yield per acre, 1.6 tons; the average value per acre, $6.80.

From 1899 to 1909 the acreage in barley increased from 877,854 acres to 1,573,836, or 79.3 per cent. Since 1879, when 116,020 acres were harvested, this crop has multiplied more than thirteenfold. In 1899 there were 368,510 acres in barley and in 1899 877,845, the increase in the last 10 years being most conspicuous. During the decade preceding 1899 barley increased 144.9 per cent. The total yield in 1909 was 34,928,545 bushels; the average yield an acre, 22 bushels; the average value an acre, $10.90.

From 1899 to 1909 potatoes increased in acreage from 146,669 to 230,713 acres, or 57.3 per cent. The total yield in 1909 was 26,803,145 bushels; the average yield an acre 116 bushels; the average value an acre, $33.40.

From 1899 to 1909 the acreage of flaxseed increased from 666,801 acres to 358,565, or 36.7 per cent. The total yield in 1909 was 3,278,000 bushels; the average yield an acre, 9 bushels; the average value an acre, $13.60.

From 1899 to 1909 the acreage of rye increased from 118,869 acres to 266,604, or 124.3 per cent. The figures for 1899 had indicated an increase of 56,000 acres, or 89.1 per cent over those of 1899. The total yield in 1909 was 4,426,208 bushels; the average yield an acre, 17 bushels; the average value an acre, $10.05.

The cereals had an aggregate acreage of 10,140,389 acres in 1909, as against 11,207,026 in 1899, a decrease of 1,066,637 acres, or 9.6 per cent. There was, however, an increase in total yield of these crops of 16,167,105 bushels. The average value of cereals an acre in 1909 was $13.90, a little over twice that of hay and forage. Wheat shows the highest average value per acre of the cereals; buckwheat the lowest. Of the hay and forage crops, alfalfa is well above the rest in average value an acre. There are but a small number of miscellaneous crops, though the average values per acre of several of them are well above those of the more usual crops.

CARLETON GRADUATES 64

LARGEST CLASS IN INSTITUTION HAS EVER KNOWN.

Rev. Newell Dwight Hillis Delivers Oration On American Possibilities.

Northfield. — Commencement week closed at Carleton college with the final graduation exercises at the Congregational church. Sixty-four graduates received their degrees. This is the largest class that has ever been graduated from the institution in one year. Two M. A. degrees were also conferred, one to Miss Jessie May Short, B. A. Beloit, 1900, in mathematics and astronomy, the other to Henry E. Baker, B. A., 1902, in English literature. Miss Short wrote her master's thesis on "The Variable Star Algol." Mr. Baker chose as his subject "The Spirit of Liberty in Nineteenth Century Literature."

Two doctor's degrees were conferred, the degree of doctor of divinity being given to the Rev. Charles E. Burton, 1895, and Litt. D. to George E. Huntington, for 27 years a professor at Carleton. Only six other doctor's degrees have been granted by Carleton in the 55 years of its existence.

The Rev. Newell Dwight Hillis, D. D., of Brooklyn, N. Y., delivered the commencement oration on "The America of Today and of Tomorrow." He spoke of the present greatness of the United States, of its undeveloped possibilities and its future when the possibilities become fully realized. The entire tone of the oration was optimistic. The accumulation of wealth was not to be deplored, he said, but to be encouraged. Foreign emigration should be encouraged he said rather than discouraged for we are fully able to assimilate the incoming stream. Above all the force that is to lead the country to economic and social success is the education mind and the college graduate must be the leader in this advancement.

Dr. Cowling announced that nearly $18,000 was pledged for the endowment campaign at the alumni banquet Tuesday night. This almost completes half of the sum that he has set himself to raise.

154 DIPLOMAS AT MOORHEAD.

Terre Haute Normal President Lauds the "Homely Virtues."

Moorhead.—Commencement week at the state normal school has closed and the 154 graduates have received their diplomas. The final functions were the commencement exercises and the alumni reception at Comstock hall, the recently finished and named building on the normal school campus. The commencement address was given by Dr. William F. Parsons, president of the Indiana state normal college, Terre Haute, Ind. Dr. Parsons spoke on "The School and the State," and in his address laid special emphasis on cultivation of the "homely virtues," promptness, concentration, respect for those in authority, politeness and truthfulness. The graduates, each bearing a long stemmed rose, received their diplomas from Toller Jacobson of Alexandria.

After the commencement exercises the alumni reception to graduates and others was held.

MORE FIRE SUITS WON.

Loss by Flames in Gopher Timber Up to Railway.

Fergus Falls.—The spring term of the United States court came to a close in this city. The last cases tried were actions brought by Elias Olson, Carl W. Peterson and Peter Smith against the Canadian Northern Railway company for damage done by the great forest fire in the northern part of the state last summer. The three suits were merged and tried as one. The jury found the railway company liable in all of them, and brought in a verdict giving Olson $1,664.16, Peterson, $487.50 and Smith, $812.50.

It was expected that Judge Amidon would appoint special examiners to take testimony in about 600 of the cases that have been brought to set aside deeds given by Indians, but as Judge Morris is the regular judge of this district the matter of making the appointments will be taken up by the latter in a short time.

WHIRLED IN THE AIR.

Wind Wrecks Farm Buildings and Injures Owner Near Mora.

Mora. — A windstorm struck about ten miles north of this place, partly demolishing the farm buildings of J. E. Gronlof and County Commissioner Sjoboen. Mr. Gronlof was whirled from his house into the air and seriously injured. The loss will run into the thousands. The storm struck in the vicinity of Hinckley, much damage being done to crops from hail.

STRYCHNINE ON LEMON FATAL.

Two-Year-Old Girl Sprinkles Poison On Fruit.

Winona.—Little Elmira Cravath, the two-year-old daughter of Austin Cravath, residing on a farm in Elmira township, Olmstead county, sprinkled strychnine on a piece of lemon and sucked the juice. When found a few moments later he was writhing in agony, and died within half an hour before physicians from Chatfield could arrive.

Wheat Crop of Entire Country Promises A Record Harvest

Total Yield of Spring and Winter Wheat Indicated by June Government Report, 764,291,857 Bushels—Condition of All Crops in the Northwest Excellent—Pacific Coast Grain is Promising.

Washington, June .—Promise that this year's wheat crop will be the greatest ever produced is given in the June crop report, issued today by the department of agriculture. Estimates by the experts indicate that approximately 764,291,857 bushels of wheat will be harvested in this country this summer and autumn; an increase of about 68,848,857 bushels over that garnered last year. Of winter wheat the indicated yield is almost 980,000,000 bushels and of spring wheat 284,000,000 bushels.

Prof. N. C. Murray, acting chairman of the crop reporting board, commenting upon the report, said:

"The average of spring wheat shows a total larger than any previous record and nearly 9 per cent greater than last year. On June 1 the crop was above the average in promise, the condition and acreage combined being

The following table gives the comparative conditions for wheat, oats and barley.

	Condition

N. Dak.	95	95	95	94	95	94
S. Dak.	93	95	90	94	90	94

In arriving at the prospective wheat yields in the northwest there is considerable confusion. In the first place, the government has used, evidently, the old average basis for arriving at the area sown this season, which, according to the census, was much too high for Minnesota. It is suggested, however, that the North Dakota acreage is too low and that the aggregate figures of spring wheat acreage in the three states as estimated now is not far away from the census area.

A further difficulty presents itself in estimating the probable harvest.

The following table summarizes the conditions of the leading crops of the country, based on the June government report, with indicated yields compared with the final harvest last year:

Grain.	Acreage 1911	Acreage 1910	Condition June, 1911	Condition May, 1911	Condition June, 1910	Condition 10-yr. Av.	Crop. Indicated yield.	Bushels. Harvest, 1910

Hay	....	....	76.8	84.7	80.1	....	....	....

The following table gives the harvest prospect in the three northwestern states as they show, figured on the usual basis:

State.	Acreage, 1911.	Acreage, 1910.	Estimated Harvest, 1911.	Final Harvest, 1910.
Minnesota	6,233,000	5,880,000	95,738,800	94,080,000
North Dakota	7,582,000	7,221,550	123,479,000	35,165,000
South Dakota	3,796,000	3,650,000	52,964,200	46,720,000
Totals	17,611,000	16,751,000	272,162,100	176,905,000

such as to give hope for a yield of nearly 23 per cent more than last year and nearly 17 per cent more than the average for the last five years.

May Unfavorable Month.

"May was unfavorable for winter wheat, but nevertheless with the increased acreage there probably will be between three and four per cent more winter wheat produced than last year and between six and seven per cent more than for the average of the last five years. Combining both spring and winter wheat, the indications point to a slightly larger yield per acre than was produced last year and about the same yield per acre as during the last five years. This would make a total production of all wheat of 9.9 per cent more than last year and 10.2 per cent more than the average for the last five years.

Oat Area Lower.

"The acreage of oats was not quite so large as it was last year, but the one-tenth of one per cent reduction is substantially immaterial. The crop prospects are not so promising as a year ago. Last year's production was the largest ever recorded. The condition of the crop indicates a yield per acre of 27.7 bushels as compared with 31.9 last year and 28 for the average of the last five years. This would make a total production of about 13.8 less than last year, but 4.8 per cent more than the average of the last five years.

"The condition of all crops in the Pacific northwest, particularly in Washington and Oregon, is notably fine. If any one feature of the month covered by the report stands out above another, it was the drought which prevailed during May practically throughout the country. It affected materially not only the condition of winter wheat, but also the hay crop, which is one of the greatest crops of the country. That drought now, however, has been largely relieved in all parts of the country."

The Northwest's Prospects.

The northwest has one of the best general grain prospects reported. With the exception of South Dakota all crops in the other two states are well above the ten year average and in none of the three states is there an average below 90 per cent of normal.

Figured on the basis followed in other years, the high condition of the crop in the northwest suggests a total at the present time of 262,000,000 bushels, but as the government only estimates the total spring wheat yield at 284,000,000 bushels, this gives the Pacific coast, where the promise is good, only 12,000,000 bushels, which is, of course, an absurdity.

Winter Wheat States.

Of the winter wheat crop the percentage of the United States, acreage in each state, the condition on June 1, and the 10-year average on June 1, follows:

BREN WILL TRY TO EXPLAIN

DEPOSED TREASURER TO BE GIVEN OPPORTUNITY TO JUSTIFY ACCOUNTS.

STILL DECLARES HIS INNOCENSE

Examiners Probe Realty Purchases and Search For Money.—Preliminary Report Soon.

Minneapolis, June 12.—Opportunity to justify his accounts with the reported discoveries of discrepancies by the public examiner will be given to J. D. Bren, deposed treasurer of the University of Minnesota, who has been in to the present with his attorneys, Norton Crose and M. C. Brady, while F. N. Stacy, deputy public examiner, delves deeper into the books.

Mr. Stacy asserts that he has failed to find $9,000 in certificates of deposit which he declares Bren told him had been cashed. On the other hand, he says that the money is still in the bank, and in view of the absence of the certificates, he has stopped payment on the paper, which would mean that if they had been turned over to anyone as collateral they are useless from now on.

Mr. Bren still appears satisfied with the progress of the case and voices his firm belief of vindication, not only in the eyes of the law, but before the public, whom he says has been misled by reports given out by the police.

Realty Purchase Probed.

Sunday Mr. Stacy, together with detectives, took a long automobile trip about the city. It was reported that they were looking up several recent real estate purchases said to have been made by the deposed treasurer, and another report was to the effect that the detectives, with a search warrant, had gone to the home of Samuel Bren, the father of the deposed treasurer, near Hopkins, Minn., and searched the premises in hopes of finding papers or hidden money. The detectives did not report at police headquarters and no verification of these reports was to be had.

The deputy public examiners compared some of their notes for the benefit of the several members of the board of regents whose homes they visited. Mr. Stacy says that he is not in a position to report any increase or decrease in the shortage which the examiners claim to have found in Bren's accounts.

Preliminary Report.

The examiners' preliminary report will be in readiness in a few days, at which time it will be submitted to President Vincent of the university. The filing of the report will be followed by a more detailed examination of the books and the verification of all items and totals.

It was recalled that in former examinations of the university accounts by the public examiners, there have been recommendations that changes be made in the systems employed in the various experimental farm stations and agricultural schools throughout the state where it was reported that the bookkeeping was being conducted by more than one person and in a manner which made frequent examinations most arduous tasks.

Bren is Out Again.

Minneapolis, June 12.—Joseph D. Bren, former acting treasurer of the university, who is charged with embezzling $13,300, which he claims was stolen and whose bail was increased in district court from $2,500 to $10,000 was released from the county jail here after a second bond had been approved by the court.

HILL BUYS ALBERTA CENTRAL.

Canadian Railway Deal Involving $250,000 Reported to Be Completed.

Winnipeg, Man., June 12.—A syndicate of Winnipeg and Calgary, Alta., business men has sold out to James J. Hill of St. Paul for $250,000 the charter of the Alberta Central railway, now under construction from Red Deer, Alta., to the Brazzeau coal mines, 116 miles distant.

This will be one of the many feeders Mr. Hill will have for his transcontinental railway from Winnipeg to Vancouver, construction on which has commenced eastward at Vancouver under the charter of the Vancouver, Victoria and Eastern railway. Mr. Hill will continue the building of the Alberta Central to the famous Brazzeau coal mines, and later through Pinchar Creek, Alta., into Montana.

New Gold Strike in Alaska.

Nome, June 12.—A rich gold strike on the beaches of Kiery creek, in the Squirrel river country, is reported here.

EIGHT NEGROES SHOT DOWN.

Alleged Conspirators are Killed By Railway Foreman and Conductor.

Hammond, La., June 12.—Eight negroes were killed at LaBranch when they attacked Foreman Boutwell of an Illinois Central bridge force, and Green Story, conductor of a work train. The negroes, employed as section hands, conspired to kill Boutwell, and when the attack was made upon him the foreman shot three of the blacks dead. Story, come up and killed five more.

STEEL CO. AIDS MINE VICTIMS

OF THE DISASTER IN VIRGINIA DISTRICT.

Company, In One Instance, Clears Debt on Home and Will Educate Seven Orphans.

Duluth. — The U. S. Steel Corporation, through its mining division, the Oliver Iron Mining company, has made prompt and liberal settlement with the heirs of the 14 men who were killed in the Norman mine at Virginia, March 11, and has taken upon itself the matter of caring for and providing opportunity for the education of seven orphans, the children of one of the dead miners, Paul Paulson.

The company settled with all of the heirs on a basis of the maximum amount provided for by law, $5,000 in each case, everything being done out of court. In addition to paying the Paulson children that sum for the death of their father, the company has paid the balance due on the Paulson home, paid up all other debts that were outstanding, so that there may be no claim against the $5,000 for the children, and, in addition, the company will pay $10 a month for the care of each of the children, whose ages range from 2 to 12 years, until each is 18 years old. The children live with an aunt at Virginia, and it is the plan of the mining company that each child shall have the opportunity under the arrangement to acquire a high school education.

President W. J. Olcott, of the Oliver Iron Mining company, regards the Norman disaster as a calamity, and so suggested to President Farrell and Judge Gary, of the steel corporation, that a liberal policy be pursued in dealing with the heirs of the victims, and it met with their hearty approval.

Blind Students In Musical Program.

Faribault.—The closing exercises and annual musical review of the Minnesota School for the Blind were held at the institution. The principal feature of the exercises was the excellent musical program presented by the students. There was one graduate, John Rogers Stachpole of the high school course. His essay was on "Electricity and Its Uses." Rev. Francis L. Palmer of the visiting board delivered an address. Honorable E. H. Loyhead presented the diplomas.

Thrown Off Trestle By Train

Mankato.—Lying unconscious under the Omaha trestle at Blue Earth river with one leg broken, John Von Regan of Sleepy Eye, 79 years old, was found by a train crew and placed in the hospital here. He had a ticket to Sleepy Eye and some money, but could not talk English and is thought to have wandered onto the trestle and was struck by a train. He probably wandered around in the vicinity all night, as he met several men who were frightened by his appearance and sent reports to the police station.

HAUGE LUTHERAN SYNOD.

Week's Session of Church Workers Opens in Red Wing Today.

Red Wing.—The sixty-fourth conference of the Hauge Norwegian Evangelical Luthern synod was held this week at the Red Wing seminary.

Among the important questions discussed were "The Possibility of Union Between the United Church and the Hauge Synod," "Should the Office of the Superintendent of Missions Be United With That of the President of the Synod?" "How to Conduct the Mission Work," "Reports From the Schools of the Synod."

Rev. T. J. Oppedahl of Wason, Minn., gave a lecture on "Some Phases of Church Activities." Eight candidates, six graduates of the theological department of 1911, at the seminary, and two young students of the same department will be ordained for the ministry on Sunday, June 11. Most of them have accepted calls to fill vacancies in older settlements, and those who have not accepted such calls will be employed in the home mission field.

EDITORS TO HEAR EBERHART.

Dr. Vincent Will Also Attend Up-State Gathering at Park Rapids.

Bemidji.—Governor Eberhart completed his official schedule, so as to carry him to the gathering of the Upper Minnesota Editorial association, on Friday of this week, while on Saturday he was at Bemidji.

Dr. George Vincent, president of the University of Minnesota, also attended the banquet. Dr. Vincent cancelled his Harvard dinner engagement for Friday evening in order to keep his appointment with the editors.

At the request of Governor Eberhart, J. H. Beck, secretary of the St. Paul Association of Commerce, was added to the list of speakers, at the banquet and will talk on state development.

FOREIGNERS RETURN HOME.

General Exodus of Austrians from Range County.

Duluth.—An exodus of foreigners for Europe is on from the iron range country. Over 200 Austrians were in one party. Poor prospects of work on the ranges are given by the men as their reasons for returning to their former homes. Each year many men return from the range country, but never before has there been one of the migrations in the springtime. Most of the men claim they will not return.

MONEY FOR INDIANS.

White Earth Chieftains to Get $1,500 Expenses.

Washington.—Representative Miller yesterday introduced a bill providing for the payment of not more than $1,500 to the Indians of White Earth reservation who, under the leadership of Rev. Clement H. Beaulieu and Chief Rainy Cloud, came to Washington last March to present certain complaints before several congressional committees.

HULK OF MAINE IS VISIBLE.

First Stages of Work to Uncover Sunken Warship Are Completed.

Havana, Cuba. — The first stage of the actual work of uncovering the wreck of the battleship was completed when operations ceased after the water level within the coffer dam built around the wreck had been lowered precisely five feet. This leaves the portion of the wreck visible above the water practically the same as on the night of the disaster before the hull had time to become imbedded in the mud at the bottom of the harbor.

Cleveland Gets Charities.

Boston, Mass. — Cleveland was selected by the national conference of charities and correction as the meeting place of the next convention.

Bail Refused Wireless Men.

New York, N. Y. — While execution of the judgment of the court that they be imprisoned in the federal penitentiary in Atlanta is indefinitely stayed pending the filing of additional assignments of error, Colonel Christopher Columbus Wilson, president, and four other officers of the United Wireless Telegraph company must remain in the Tombs. The United States circuit court of appeals refused to permit the convicted men liberty on bail pending their appeal.

IOWA CONGRESSMAN IS CHOSEN.

W. R. Greene of Audubon Elected to Succeed Walter I. Smith.

Council Bluffs, Iowa. — W. R. Greene, of Audubon, was elected congressman of the Ninth Iowa district to succeed Walter I. Smith, who recently was given a judicial appointment by President Taft. Practically complete returns give Greene a majority of 1,192 over W. S. Cleveland, his Democratic opponent.

Greene stands opposed to reciprocity, while Cleveland was favorable to the agreement. Although Cleveland cut down the majority given Judge Smith at the last election by 700 votes, the country vote was strong enough for Greene to give him a safe majority.

Negro Given Indian Post.

Washington, D. C. — Dr. William T. Vernon, a negro, former register of the United States treasury, was appointed assistant supervisor of schools of the five civilized Indian tribes by the secretary of the interior.

Taft Declines Oregon Invitation.

Washington, D. C. — In declining an invitation to visit Astoria, Ore., in August, President Taft indicated to Representative Lafferty that he expected to spend the entire month of August at Beverly.

No Help From Democrats.

The North-wester Agricultarist Published at Minneapolis, that is leading the fight against Reciprocity, in commenting on president Taft says;

"President Taft will receive full credit for the measure if it pass, and must carry full responsibility for the blunder of its passage and the hardships resulting. It is reported that the bill will have the full support of the Democrats, except Senator Daily, of Texas, while only a few of the Republicans will vote for the measure.

This is a repetition of the situation in the House. The Republican president has deserted the party which elected him, abandoned the fundamental principal of that protective party, preaching free trade as the only wisdom, the doctrine of statesmanship, and like Judas has been used by the Democratic Sanhedrin which, while using him for its own political ends, despises the traitor in his betrayal. '

The Democrats will have no more use for William H. Taft after this fight is over, than the true Republicans have now."

It will be seen by the above, that if Reciprocity is defeated it will not be by the Democrats, but by such true Republicans as Senators Knute Nelson, Clapp, and many others, who have thrown their coats and hats and are making a desperate fight again it it, and it begins to look now as if they would win.

President Taft will get a knife put into his Reciprocity treaty by Senator Knute Nelson, who proposes to amend by putting wheat and other grain onto the protected listat half of the Payne Aldrich schedule. Knut is looking after the farmers interests all the time.

Some of the Reciprocity papers have been making the claim that Knute Nelson is drifting away from the common people, but if the farmers of the North West, are called the common people he is getting mighty close to them just now, on Reciprocity, and if anyone is of the opinion that the farmers don't know it, let them try to get votes among the farmers, next year for election to the legislature, without indorsing him and they will find out whether the Farmers, understand the situation, or do not. Go to them Knute, you are getting a little old, but there is a good fight left in you yet!

More About Ditches.

At the time the ditch running from Deer Park into the Red Lake River near Jim O'Briens, was let, we as the head bondsman, backed up by the other tax payers along the ditch, made a special request of County surveyor C. H. Martz and County Auditor Latenbreese to have the work let to the N. W. Drainage Co., so we could get a walking dredge and get the work done last fall. But at the time the contract was let there was not a man present that was a tax payer on the ditch, but a mob was there sticking their nose into something that was none of their business, and the Co. that the tax payers, who must pay for the ditch, had requested that the contract be let to, was turned down, and the contract let to parties who dug a lot of deep and unsightly looking holes at one end, and put an old floating dredge at the other end—and that's all of that matter. Then the tax payers along the ditch, during the dry season last fall and this spring prepared a lot of low land and put it into crop. Then the flood came and done more damage in three days than would half pay their ditch tax, and the old floater stands up on the prairie surrounded by water,

John Lattimore's engaged in a movement to get the four school districts sjoining Erie consolidated at that place. This had ought to please some of the north siders in this district, who like to do business so well at Erie that they had ought to have to send their children up there to school. But they will find that the tail don't wag the dog, by a long shot, and if there's any consolidation of schools it will be at Highlanding, where they have the bigest rural school in Pennington County. Put that in your pipe and smoke it, and let Superintendent Mostue have a pipe full if he is trying to help you do up our school district.

Where Most of It Went.

Poet—You say you love poetry? Shed—Sure. I read it in the very fire.

Poet—Ah! Then no doubt you have read mine there.

Robespierre's Style of Dress.

Robespierre's manner of dress, even at the period when the demagogues affected the slovenliness and disorder of negligence in order to flatter the people, was clean, decent and precise as that of a man who respects himself in the eyes of others. His white powdered hair, turned up in clusters over his temples; a bright blue coat buttoned over his hips, open over the breast to display a white vest; short yellow colored breeches, white stockings and shoes with silver buckles, formed his invariable costume during the whole of his public life. It was said that he desired by thus never varying the style or color of his garments to make the same impression in the sight and imagination of the people as a medal of his face would have caused.—Lamartine's "History of the Girondists."

Very Sensitive.

"I don't know what I am going to do with that kid of mine. He's always getting into fights. I jerked him up for it the other day. 'What do you mean by fighting on the public streets like this?' I asked.

"'Well,' he said, 'Jimmy Montgomery said you were my father.'

"'Well, ain't I your father?'

"'I s'pose you are, but a feller don't want it thrown up to him right in front of a crowd.'"—Boston Traveler.

A Taste For Soap.

Surely one of the queerest of tastes was that of the historian Prescott, of whose life in Rome Mrs Hugh Fraser tells in "A Diplomatist's Wife in Many Lands." She says that he used to keep a cake of soap on his writing table and nibble at it constantly, saying, when he was remonstrated with, that people should be clean inside as well as out."

Must Important.

George—What can be the matter? The telegram says, "Come home at once!" I must fly.

George (as he arrives home two hours later)—What on earth is the matter, dearest?

Young Wife—The baby said "Dada!"—Exchange.

Where His Interest Lay.

Excited Messenger—Your wife's just met with a serious accident; thrown from car which ran over a dog. Jokes (excitedly)—Was it a fox terrier with black spots on his shoulders?

Handing Her One.

Mabel—That story you just told is about fifty years old. Maude—And you haven't forgotten it in all that time!—Toledo Blade.

To resent kindly rebuke is not a sign of spirit, but of stupidity.

WANTED- From 50 to 70 acres of breaking done. Good land to break. Wm. Buckman, sec. 11, town of Deer Park. Roland p. o.

It is reported that there will be big crops in the Dakota's this fall, and that harvest and threshing hands will get long jobs and good wages.

The ground has been so wet for the past ten days that it has been impossible to cultivate the corn or gardens, with not much prospect of any let up to the unfavorable weather.

Dan Carroll came over from his Mayfield farm Tuesday to application to make final proof. He had one of his old friends, of Wabasha county with him, who is looking for a farm in this locality.

Lattimore has begun to lay his mistakes onto the printer. If we was in the printers place we would quit without notice. The trouble with that office is; that it is like a pump, that gets the "water" on the worst side.

Any time you wish to drove up, call at this office and have your application filled out accurate ly and free of charge.-Elsewhere Town.

How about Swanson? Did you fix him up free of charge?

$21, Insures you against loss of five hundred dollars by hail. Of course we don't want to advise you to pay out money for hail insurance, but if you should happen to loose your crop by hail five hundred would come handy.

We wonder if Lattimore has employed "Pat" to help him to run the Highlanding school up to Erie? If he has and they don't cut any more ice than they did when they started out to do up the scrimmage, there won't be much harm done.

We signed no petition on the Skreland ditch and have had nothing to do with it, and we do not intend to have any thing to do with it. Settle your disputes among yourselves, run it straight up for all we care, as we do not propose to row it with the farmers about ditches. We have troubles of our own, don't mention yours.

K. O. Gigstad, Gilbert Hove, and R. M. Johnson was up viewing the Skreland ditch. This is the ditch that runs north from Deer Park to Highlanding, and about which there is a dispute about the outlet which we hope will be satisfactory settled at the hearing, as the last weeks rain has shown the need of it.

We have the agency of the State Farmer Mutual Hail Insurance Co.,of Waseca, and will insure crops against loss by hail at the rate of $5, a hundred, or to make it plain we bet you one hundred dollars to five dollars, that there will not be any hail.

Call and see us, as it safer to let a rich company share your risk.

We wish to warn our readers, that the Canada articles published on the inside of our paper at different times are not facts, but are written by expert liars, and published by the news paper company that we get our papers from, at so much per column. As a matter of fact there are very few American farmers in Canada to day, as everybody that has been there knows.

The State boiler Inspector was around visiting threshing machine owners this week.

D. A. Kolestrand Sjur Stolaas, were down to Crookston yesterday making final proof on their homesteads, before the U.S. Land office.

If anyone knows where the owner is that floating dredge is, let us know, as we would like to rent it to plow corn with.

Torjie Smejln and family returned from Cannon this week, where they have been for five years and are mighty glad to get out of there. They will buy a farm and make their future home here.

Mrs. Ole Overum, Henry Arndt Carl Eir, Hans Fjeld, and Alfred Hammerteen will go down to Thief River Falls Monday to prove up on their homesteads Alfred Swanson will go down as witness, and to find out where his farm is located.

We suppose Lattimore and "Pat" will soon be tramping around among their friends on the north side of the river with petitions to move the Highlanding school to Erie. It is all right Tar John, but you could put the brains of the gang that would go in with him, to try to do up their own locality, into a mustard seed and rent out the upper story.

Mr. Tadde, of Clarces will build a fine residence on his farm this season.

A. Rolandson had the misfortune to badly bruse his hand this week.

Science and Chivalry.

A medical authority kindly informs us that we long ago should have known it but will not affect the welfare of the consumer. This is a fact that we have suspected for a considerable time. Now is the ordinary chivalry inspired to detect the difference between the sexes for cooties?

There is enough of intrinsically civilized in the odorous and slimy decay that is proper sterilizer of the dustpan reading public would make a soapmaker.

Saved by a Witticism.

In February, 1814, when John Tyler was president, the Princeton steam trial trip down the Potomac under Captain R. F. Stockton, on board at the time were President Tyler, a number of the cabinet, other notables and a large number of women. As was customary at that time, a salute was to be fired while passing Mount Vernon. Just as it was discharged the gun exploded of the breech, killing five persons and wounding several others. Those killed were Abel P. Upshur, secretary of state; Thomas W. Gilmer, secretary of the navy; Commodore Kennon, chief of the bureau of construction of the navy; Virgil Maxcy, ex-minister to the Hague, and Mr. Gardiner, former senator from New York.

William Wirkins, then secretary of war, was saved by a witticism. Seeing that the gun about to be fired, he exclaimed publicly, "Fortify secretary of war. Live for the living and I, for the dead." Mr. Wirkins was not hurt.

Jones—I'll bet you a dollar I strike the ground first!

He Had Reformed.

A young man who was an enthusiastic lover of nature went to the seaside for a holiday and, approaching a typical fisherman, said:

"Ah, my friend, how well you must know the face of nature and know it in its many moods! Have you ever seen the sun sinking in such a glare of glory that it swallows up the horizon with fire? Have you not seen the mist gilding down the shrinking hillside like a specter?"

And, very excited and throwing out his arms, he continued:

"Have you never seen, my man, the moon struggling to shake off the ragged, rugged storm cloud?"

The fisherman replied, "No, sir; I have not since I signed the pledge."—Pearson's Weekly.

A Burning Glass in the Eye.

In the front part of each of our eyes is a convex lens of great power and clearness. It acts exactly like a burning glass. If a person were to look at the sun, say, for half a minute his eye would certainly start to hurt us. The lens would focus the rays of the sun on the retina, and that part of the eye would immediately scorch and later would burn to a crisp. This can happen, however, only when one looks at the sun directly or in a mirror. If one holds a pin between the sun and the eye and looks at the pin, although the sun is in a direct line with the eye and although its rays are entering the eye, the eye is not hurt, because the rays are not focused inside the eyeball. This is the wonderful property the lens has, that of focusing objects of different distances. The means by which it does this are in power to change its curvature.—Chicago Record-Herald.

MUNYON'S PAW-PAW PILLS

TRADE MARK

A trial package of Munyon's Paw Paw Pills will be sent free to anyone on request. Address Professor Munyon, 53d & Jefferson Sts., Philadelphia, Pa. If you are in need of medical advice, do not fail to write Professor Munyon. Your communication will be treated in strict confidence, and your case will be diagnosed as carefully as though you had a personal interview.

Munyon's Paw Paw Pills are unlike all other laxatives or cathartics. They exert the liver into activity by gentle methods. They do not scour, they do not gripe, they do not weaken, but they do start all the secretions of the liver and stomach in a way that soon puts these organs in a healthy condition and corrects constipation. In my opinion constipation is responsible for most all ills. There are 26 feet of human bowels, which is really a sewer pipe. When this pipe becomes clogged the whole system becomes poisoned, causing biliousness, indigestion and impure blood, which often produce rheumatism and kidney ailments. No woman who suffers with constipation or any liver ailment can expect to have a clear complexion or enjoy good health. If I had my way I would prohibit the sale of nine-tenths of the cathartics that are now being sold for the reason that they soon destroy the lining of the stomach, setting up serious forms of indigestion, and so paralyze the bowels that they refuse to act unless forced by strong purgatives.

Munyon's Paw Paw Pills are a tonic to the stomach, liver and nerves. They invigorate instead of weaken; they enrich the blood instead of impoverishing it; they enable the stomach to get all the nourishment from food that is put into it.

These pills contain no calomel, no opium; they are soothing, healing and stimulating. They school the bowels to act without physic.

Regular size bottle, containing 45 pills, 25 cents. Munyon's Laboratory, 53d & Jefferson Sts., Philadelphia.

Musical Note.

A music teacher in a New England school was trying to make the children in the fourth grade understand the value of a triplet—to get them to know that three-quarter notes under a brace were equal to two quarter notes.

She couldn't make them understand; and finally, in despair, she asked: "What are three little babies born all at the same time called?"

"Accidentals!" shouted a small boy, with a vague reminiscence of the lesson of a week before.

SEEN from the PRESS GALLERY

By EDWARD B. CLARK

JAMES WILSON, SEC'Y OF AGRICULTURE

CUBA has reciprocity in trade with the United States. The bill giving the island the benefits of the trade agreement was considered at an extra session of congress called by President Roosevelt. There was a good deal of sentiment in the Cuban matter, more than there has been in connection with the Canadian reciprocity measure. The bill went through the house and was sanctioned by the senate taking all told only three weeks in its passage.

The members of congress debated and talked twenty percentum reductions, sugar trusts and the like for four days and then the tense hour approached when the vote was to be taken. The time was tense notwithstanding the fact that it was known that the bill was to carry by a great majority. The galleries were packed with people and in the halls without were hundreds unable to gain admission, yet standing still and listening for the result of the ballot that was to show we knew how "to help a weak sister republic to her financial feet."

The house took hands were at the exact hour of 4. The vote of the representatives of a great and sovereign people had been taken. The republic was true to its trust. The solemnity of the feeling of duty well done still hung upon the great chamber. Each of the thousands were busy with his thoughts.

The voice of a member from Ohio broke the stillness. "I have a resolution of privilege to offer," it said.

"It must be a question of high privilege, sir, to receive consideration at such an hour," said Speaker Cannon in solemnly subdued tones. "Let the resolution be read."

"Resolved, That this house of representatives of the United States of America authorize the hiring of another rubber for the capitol Turkish-bath rooms."

When the Appalachian Mountain Forest Reserve bill was under consideration a member of congress rose to help in favor of saving the trees told a striking story about the saving of a great tree in far off Australia. It was a long way to go for a tree story, but perhaps the moral was worth the journey.

In 1883 John Boyle O'Reilly, the Irish poet, was a political convict in Australia, sentenced to hard labor for life. With a gang of fellow convicts under the charge of a British officer and a squad of soldiers he was breaking a road through a tropical forest. They came to a tree and the men were about to lay the ax at its roots when O'Reilly made them stop, dropping his own ax the while. The British officer ordered the men to work. O'Reilly put his hand to his cap, saluted and said, "I should like to speak to you."

The officer was amazed at this convict's impudence, but perhaps it was the very boldness of the thing that wrought the purpose intended.

"This tree is too beautiful to fell; please let it stand," said the convict.

The British soldier looked dumfounded. "Come over here," said O'Reilly, "and look at it from this point of view."

The convict was now the commanding officer. The Englishman followed the Irishman for a hundred yards, and then, turning his horse, looked upon the tree, and his eye kindled. He looked down upon O'Reilly and said: "The order was for the road to run straight, but we'll send it around the tree."

If the Australian tree is still standing, it stands as a monument to an Irishman who had a soul.

Once Representative William Alden Smith, now a United States senator, tried his level best in the house debate on Panama to make Congressman Dinsmore of Arkansas supply a stock of good Republican campaign material, just as Blaine baited Ben Hill in the old days. Dinsmore was talking about the hasty recognition of the independence of Panama by the United States and drew a comparison between that action and the attempts of this government to keep foreign nations from recognizing the confederacy in 1861.

The Arkansas member got warmed up and began to talk about the power of the confederacy. He made the statement that its soldiers had thrashed the Union army in the first six battles of the war. He got still warmer as he went on, and suddenly Smith of Michigan sprung the question. "Are you defending the rights of the states to secede?"

Dinsmore came to himself like a flash. "Ah, Brother Smith," he said, "how you would love to lead me into the pit! You are an abiding affection for you, but neither my feet nor my tongue shall go astray for the benefit of the Republican party."

Everybody knows what a stickler the senate is for courtesy. Courtesy has a seat at every desk. When one senator refers to another, whether he be a political foe or a political friend, it is always as the "distinguished gentleman from Maryland," or from Maine or another state, as the case may be. Senator Tillman said a fairly good thing one day. It was a side remark, but it reached the gallery and was enjoyed by the ushers, who had become a bit weary of resisting the impulse to salaam every time a senator rose and handed a few verbal flowers to a colleague.

Senator Bailey had just referred to the "distinguished senator from Maine. "Quit it," said Tillman, "you'll distinguish them all till they're so stuck up that no one else can distinguish them one from the other."

When James Wilson came to Washington as secretary of agriculture he understook a bit of self-description by saying to a caller: "I am what they call a hayseed." It should be noted that Mr. Wilson did not say that he was a hayseed. He has the Scotch Presbyterian habit of sticking to the truth even in his humor. It was rumored once that in order to evade the laws of this country certain great companies were planning to take out corporation papers abroad. The matter was called to the attention of the agricultural member of Mr. Roosevelt's cabinet. His comment was this: "We have laws; we have petit juries; we have grand juries; we have a department of justice; we have courts, and we have penitentiaries." Then Mr. Wilson smiled just a little grimly and refused to discuss the subject further. He could have said anything that would have added one jota to his meaning, and he knew it. There is no waste of words in the conversation of James Wilson.

Secretary Wilson unquestionably would be a success as a managing editor of a great newspaper. He knows news. When the Beveridge packing-house investigation measure had passed congress and Secretary Wilson was in the west on a tour of inspection, he was asked by a newspaper man at the close of one of the secretary's busiest days in Chicago what the news was.

Mr. Wilson said: "Sit down and I'll give you the news and nothing else. These things have been done within the last few days and not one of them has been touched on in the newspapers. The rest of the story is ancient history."

SEN. BAILEY

"SIT DOWN AND I'LL GIVE YOU THE NEWS AND NOTHING ELSE."

Then the secretary, with all the discrimination of a trained city editor, gave his facts, and they were all new facts and worth the publishing. When a newspaper man goes to see the secretary in Washington he knows that if he gets one word beyond the ordinary interchange of "pleasant day" comment he is going to get something worth publishing. Mr. Wilson having been in office for several years and being a keen student, has discovered that certain things are published and certain things are not published. He has learned how to save himself time and words. In the parlance of the press, Mr. Wilson is "good copy."

Congress appropriated some money to erect a new building for the department of agriculture. Every congress wishes to make a record for economy. So it was that the amount appropriated was not sufficient to put up a structure that would meet the future demands of a rapidly growing branch of the government. The secretary of agriculture knew it, and so, with a certain shrewdness that was all for the good of the country and the service, he saw to it that the money was put into two comparatively small structures. The two taken together will be big enough for present needs, but in order that they shall form a complete and artistic whole it will be necessary one day to join them, and the connecting link will be a big building in itself. The argument for more room is apparent and convincing. The agricultural department will get more building money from congress, and get it soon, and the anger that was aroused at first by the secretary's shrewdness will be turned to laughter and to something much like admiration. The Iowa farmer's successors in office will have to thank him for removing a mountain of trouble from their paths.

As government departments rank, the one devoted to the promotion of agriculture stands next to the foot of the list. This is on paper only. Its importance to the country is so great that men say its proper place is near the head of things governmental. The passage of the packing-house inspection and the pure food laws have increased the working duties of Mr. Wilson's department immensely.

Secretary Wilson sheds trouble. He is a good deal of an optimist, and when difficulties arose over cotton crop matters, and there seemed imminent danger that a scandal would result, there was no signs of worry on the secretary's part. President Roosevelt felt implicit confidence in the cabinet official who had come to him as a heritage from the McKinley administration, and there is no doubt whatever that he expressed his confidence personally.

In one respect the secretary of agriculture holds himself to be particularly fortunate. Possibly he doesn't consider it to be really a matter of good fortune except as such times as he sees the trouble of his fellow cabinet officials who are more than suspected of having presidential ambitions. Presidential politics personally do not worry James Wilson. The constitution of the United States keeps such worry from him, for the secretary was born on the slopes of the Ayshire Hills in Bonnie Scotland, and on man from over the water can sit in the chief chair of the

WOMEN MAY AVOID OPERATIONS

By taking Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

The following letter from Mrs. Orville Rock will prove how unwise it is for women to submit to the dangers of a surgical operation when it may be avoided by taking Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. She was four weeks in the hospital and came home suffering worse than before.

Here is her own statement.

Paw Paw, Mich.—"Two years ago I suffered very severely with a displacement. I could not be on my feet for long time. My physician treated me for seven months without much relief and at last sent me to Ann Arbor for an operation. I was there four weekend came home suffering worse than before. My mother advised me to try Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, and I did. Today I am well and strong and do all my own housework. I owe my health to Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and advise my friends who are afflicted with any female complaint to try it."—Mrs. ORVILLE ROCK, R. F. D. No. 5, Paw Paw, Michigan.

If you are ill do not drag along until an operation is necessary, but at once take Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

For thirty years it has been the standard remedy for women's ills, and has positively restored the health of thousands of women. Why don't you try it?

WHAT, INDEED.

Marion—Caroline says she paid $18 a dozen for those photos of herself.

Maxine—But they don't look a bit like her.

Marion—Of course not. What do you suppose she paid $18 for?

Kissing Breach of Peace.

The better half of a respected citizen of New Jersey recently had the temerity to take her lord and master before the court on a charge of having fed her against his will. For this heinous offense this shameless Jersey benedict was bonded over in $100 bail to keep the peace, and, moreover, was warned by the judge never again to kiss his wife without first obtaining her consent in due form. If he is any kind of a man, probably he will never want to kiss her again.—Washington Herald.

His Instinct.

"I see the family dog drinking out of the room. What's the matter with him?"

"Prescience. Presently there will be a tremendous family row on."

"How did the dog know that?"

"Well, so to speak, his nose is something of a storm center.

COMES A TIME
When Coffee Shows What It Has Been Doing.

"Of late years coffee has disagreed with me," writes a matron from Rome, N. Y.

The lightest punishment being to make me 'logy' and dizzy, did it seemed to thicken up my blood.

The last straw was when it upset my stomach completely, destroying my appetite and making me nervous and irritable, and sent me to my bed. After one of these attacks, in which I nearly lost my life, I concluded to quit the coffee and try Postum.

"I went right to the spot! I found it not only a most palatable and refreshing beverage, but a food as well.

"All my ailments, the 'loginess' and dizziness, the unsatisfactory condition of my blood, my nervousness and irritability disappeared. In short order and my sorely afflicted stomach began quickly to recover. I began to rebuild and have steadily continued until now. Have a good appetite and am relishing my sound health which I owe to the use of Postum." Name given by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich.

"What if she's not there?"

"Get np there oow, as quick as yon can dress. 'Phone again that you're on tho way. Yoo doo't want a scene in the stntion."

It was exactly 8:12 when Baird reached track 26. The shore line express was dne at 8:15 from Boston, ha foond out. In the ensuing three minutes he wondsred just how he should tackle the situation, how he was going to walk up to the man who looked as if he might have sent such a telegram to another man's wifs, and tall him he had been sent by a furious busband to settla the matter.

He stood over on the left side of the gate, a strapping six-footsr, sqnare jawed, gray eyed, and tanned from a recent six weeks' yachting trip, staring at the crowd that came through gate 26. Bob would linger, and watch avery woman in range, he had figured, but the people burried away up to the concourse, and not e man looked ns if he were on an nffinity trail. Only one lone girl lingered. She was not very tnll, but held her head np, chin ont, and her big dark oyes talked louder than words. Three, four times, she welked past Andy, and finnlly she stopped short, her hands deep in the pockets of her long travsling cloak.

"Are you Dick Mnnning?" she asked in a puzzled tone. "I wired Mnude. Couldn't she coms herself?"

Off came Andy's het. Hs was all solicituds and attention, but eround his close, smooth lips there lurked a surreptitious smile she could not know the mesning of.

"Am I spesking to—er-Bob?"

"Yes. I'm Roberta Fallows, yon knnw, Mauds's chum from Cambridge. I don't think she expected ms until next week, but I had this chancs, and just ran down at short notice. It was very kind of you to meet me, Mr. Manning."

"Oh, I'm not Dick. I'm Dick's chum from Yals."

Thsy both looked at eech other for a momsnt, then langhed and gripped hsnds. Andy piloted her deftly to ths taxi stand and mansged to give the chauffsur intricate nnd roundnbout directions on ths longest wey to reach Ninety-sixth strset West, before he snt down beside hsr.

"You see, they had this previons engagement dinner et the Carringtons, then a box party nfterward, and Dick told me to go and meet you." Andy sxplained the metter happily. Nevsr had he seen such deep, wine-brown eyes befors, or such dark, upcurling lashes.

"Then why did you allow me to rnmbls helplessly around that gete until I just had to speak up myself? Didn't Mnuda tsll you whet I looked like?"

"Not one word," ha said solemnly. "In fact, I was hended the telegram nnd told to go and meet 'Bob,' that was ell."

"Didn't you know I wes e girl?"

"I knaw nothing except that your neme was Bob."

She leaned bsck her head and laughed wickedly.

"And you thought I was a man. Was Dick jcalons, truly, was he?"

"He gave me strict orders to kill you on sight," raplied Andy, serionsly. "I'vo cnptnred you alive, insteed."

When they reached the Mennings' npnrtment Andy pressed tha button cnutiously. The maid would be in and he was to leeve Bob in her cara and go his wey until tomorrow—he hed won out that far so soon—until tomorrow.

But Dick's round, comfortnble fnce eppenred in the hallwey es tha door opened, and behind bim Maude's fluffy blonde heed.

"Como in, come in, children," he snid, checrily. "I know all ebout it. Mnude explnined as soon as I struck tho Cnrringtons, nnd we cama straight home Insteed of going on to the opera. We've got a little spread in honor of Bob, Andy. She's n good fellow, Maude snys."

Andy paused long enough in the dnrkened hnll to lift Bob's hand up to his lips dnringly as he cnlled hack:

"She sura is." And he ndded under his breath. "Don't forget me, Bob, dcer."

"Ynle's rush?" she esked, teesingly. "You were helfback for your class, I believe, Mr. Baird?"

"And never lost n gama," answered Andy fervently.

Snaka a Public Benefactor.

An eccount of a thrilling snake fight at the Serotherapic Institute, near Sen Pnulo, wns given n few days ngo by a famous French surgeon, Professor Pozzi, on his return from Brazil. There is in Brazil a great serpent nnmed the mussurnna, which inoffensive itself to mnnkind, hes as its mission to kill and devour venomous reptiles. A hugo mussurann was brought out for the edificntion of Professor Pozzi and e big venomous sarpent wae set nt lerga in tha room. Thsn came the fight. The mussurane is by nnture exempt from tha poison of other snakes, nnd the rest is simply e matter of tha relative strength of the combatants. Io its oppooent the mussuraoe found a tongh customer, but io the end the venomous serpent was slain and duly swallowed.

Queen Alsxandra's Whims.

Qneeo Alexaodra is food of soft, subdued colors and pale shades of rose, greeo and blue have been largely used in the redecorstioo of Marlborough House, which is now being prepared for her occupatioo. She much dislikes changes in her rooms, and it is said she is so particular nbout everything being put in exactly the same place that the plans of her rooms have beeo mede showing exactly where each object is meant to be, so that wheo aoything is moved it can be replaced in its original position.

Souvenir Postal Trick.

"I thought you didn't care for Mrs. Green."

"I don't."

"Then why are you sending these souvenir postal cards to her?"

"Just to make her jealous. She's never been to Newport and she'll be furious to think I have."

METHOD IN CLEFT GRAFTING

Scion Should Consist of a Portion of the Previous Season's Growth of ths Tree.

To mske n cleft graft select a brnnch one or one nnd one-helf inches in diemeter nnd sever it with a saw. Cere should ba tnken that the bark be not loosened from any portion of the etub. Split tha expoeed end with a broad thin chisel or grafting tool. Then with a wedge or ths wedge-shaped prong at the end of the grafting tool eprend the cleft eo thet the ecion mny be inserted.

The scion should consist of a portion of the previous season's growth of the tree to be propageted and should be long eoough to have two or three buds. The lower end of tha scion, which is to be inserted into the cleft, should be cut into the shape of a wedge, having the outer edge thicker than the other. In general it is a good pleo to cut the scion so that the lowest bud will coma just nt ths top of this wedge in ordar thet it will be near the top of the stock. The advnntage of cutting the wedge thicker nt one side is illustrated showing how the pressure of the stock is brought upon the outer growing parts of both scion end thock, wheres ss were the scion thicker on the inner side the conditions would be reversed and the death of the ecioo would follow.

The importance of having ao intimete connection between the growing tissnes of both scion and stock cannot ba too ntrongly emphasized, for upon this alone the euccess of grafting depends. To make this contact of tha growing portions donbly certain, the scion is often eat nt e slight angle with tha atock into which it is inserted. In order to cause tha growing portione of the two to cross.

After tha scions have beeo eet, the operation of cleft grafting is complated by covaring all cut surfacas with e layer of grafting wax.

Cleft grafting ie particularly ndapted to top-working old trees, that is, chnnging them from undesirabla to desirable varietias. Branches too large to be worked by other methode can be cleft grafted. Sometimes several varieties are grafted on a single tree. The best tima for claft grafting is in the spring just after growth has begun. Wood for ecions is usually cut in the fall ,tied io bundles, and buried io eand to protect them from axtremes of heat and cold uotil they ara to be used.

TRAINING THE YOUNG TREES

More Important Than Pruning and Should Consist Mostly in Kesping Plant Balanced.

(By W. J. GREEN.)

Training tha young orchard is mors needful then pruning, end should consist mostly in shaping the trees or keeping them in form nnd properly bnlanced. Very ofteo the sida opposite tha directioo from which the prevailing winds coma, becomes heavier thno the sida towarde the wind, and the removnl of soma of tha branches and beeding in of othars becomes necessary.

Some shoots becoms too rampant and need checking to reserve the bnlance of tha tree, and othere cao be bent and tied to fill the open spaces. Work of this kiod and tha removal of wnter sprouts mey be done io tha summer.

A bushy or clustared hnbit of growth is oot uocommon evao in quite young trees, and needs to be corrected by tha removal of surplus branches.

Prevent Fungous Diseases.

Prompt removal of all dead and decnying portions of fruit trees, immediately burning tha same, will lessen fungous diseases of fruit trees of all kinds. In the case of fire blight, a diseasa commoo to penr nnd appla trees, the removal end burning of all affected parts is the only known remedy for curing n tree or holding the disease in check. No chemical remedy has yet been found that will kill the spores of the blight disease.

In a similar manoer it is always a good plan to promptly remove all defective fruit from the orchard, either wheo the defect is caused by fungi or insects.

Cost of Spraying.

It costs about 10 cents per tree to spray an orchard three times, with 50 trees to the acre. This cost includes both spray material and labor, but does not cover the cost of the spray machine.

BUNCHING HIS HARD LUCK

Sufferer From Toothache Summoned Philosophy to His Aid During Period of Trouble.

"Philosophers are not all dend yet," snid the deotist. "I met ona this morning who knocked me ont of two hours' work on a day when I hnve nothing to do anyhow, and will make me work overtime tomorrow, when I shall be crowded with engegements. Ha wae howling with a toothache.

"Better come nronnd and hnve it attended to," I said.

"Can't do it today," he esid. "I'm too buey."

"But yon can't work whsn you are crnzy with the toothache," I argued.

"Oh, yes I csn," said ha. "There nre half a dozeo other things I want done to me thet hurt pretty bed, nnd if I have them done when my tooth ie on the rampage they won't eeem so bnd, beceusa one hurt will neutralizs the other. I alwaye take ndvantnge of a toothecha to dispatch those disagreeeble jobs."

"Maybe not meny people could stand thet kind of philoeophy, but apparently that man ie going to get away with it."
